ENEMY FORCED INTO DEFENSIVE AT ALMOST EVERY POINT

Total Prussian Casualities to Date Will Aggregate 1,102,212—Austria Admits Loss of Only Four Hundred Thousand Killed, Wounded and Prisoners

(Canadian Press Special)

LONDON, March 1.—The Morning Post's correspondent at Budapest says that although the Austrian military authorities admit only 400,000 casualties since the war began, in reality there have been four times that number in killed, wounded and prisoners. The first line army of 2,000,000 with which Austria opened the war is now practically non-existent. She still has from three and a half to four million men in the field or in training, and the spirit of the army is by no means broken.

The Daily Mail's correspondent at Copenhagen says seven recent lists of Prussian casualties bring the total up to 1,102,212, to which must be added 156 Bavarian, 113 Saxon; 125 Wurtemburg and 19 naval lists.

The Russian General Staff in the Caucasus announce that the Russians are driving the Turks before them, and have reached Khopatchai.

The Daily Telegraph's correspondent at Petrograd says: "It seems no longer premature to assert that the German invasion of Russia has failed. The outstanding features of the situation are: that the enemy has been forced into the defensive at almost every point along the Niemen-Bobr-Narev line, that the centre has been completely smashed in at Przasnysz, and that for a front of thirty to thirty-five miles the enemy is retreating rapidly, here and there in disorder.

An announcement in Petrograd today says, Russian progress in the region of Przasnysz has been notable. One village after another have been taken, with several hundred prisoners in each.

Assurances continue to come from Bucharest that Roumania will soon line up with the Allies. Ten classes of reserves have been called out for March 13th.

Spies As Officers In The Trenches

LONDON, Feb. 27—One of the most difficult aspects of the well organized system of espionage which the Germans conduct inside the British lines is the spy in uniform, says an officer writing from the front.

"From time to time", he says, "descriptions are circulated of officers who have obtained information and then disappeared. It is as common for spies dressed in the uniforms of British officers to appear in the trench lines as is is for 'French officers' or 'Belgian soldiers' to appear in our own. Their discovery of our gun positions and other secrets which we imagined secure is demonstrated by sudden bursts of well placed and accurately timed shells.

"Some of these spies are not beyond using violence. A friend of one of our officers was intrusted with an important despatch. As he was nearing his destination he noticed two officers talking some distance away. Suddenly one officer sprang upon the other and wrested from him some papers and took to his heels. The other fellow screamed out, "Shoot him!' This fellow, although he had never handled a revolver before in his life, took aim and fired. He managed to kill the culprit. He was a man we had been looking for for some time."

NEW BOUT FOR JAUREY RING

Gunboat Smith and Jim Flynn will fight a twenty-round bout at Juarez early next month. This news item was confirmed yesterday by a dispatch from Jack Curley, at El Paso, Texas, who said that despite the fact that the Johnson and Willard championship battle has been postponed, he would hold the bout between Smith and Willard on March 6.

The track officials at Juarez have given the course without reserve, providing the ring can be cleared away in time for the first regular race of the day at 2.30 o'clock. The entire gate receipts will be handed over to the fighters. The track free list will be entirely suspended that afternoon. The ring will be erected opposite the grandstand.

Jim Buckley, Gunboat Smith's manager, said last night that he and Smith would start for the battle ground immediately after they received their transportation, which they believed would be at hand this morning. While Smith is in good shape his manager complained that the short time before the fight did not give Gunboat much time to finish his training.

WIFE CALLS DENTIST TOOTH-GOLD BANDIT

ST. LOUIS, Feb. 27.—When his wife testified in her divorce suit that Dr. J. M. Marshall, a dentist, habitually extracted gold from the teeth of patients and disposed of it to get funds with which to gamble, Judge Withrow decided that Mrs. Marshall was entitled to her freedom.

Mrs. Ben Westhus, a witness for Mrs. Marshall, said she had heard patients of Marshall complain that he had taken their gold teeth out and they had demanded that he either pay them for the gold or return their teeth.

Marshall's license was revoked by the Missouri State Board of Dental Examiners on these grounds, the wife said.

ENGLAND AIDS JAMAICA

Sends Ships for Her Produce and Provides for a Loan

KINGSTON, Jamaica, Feb. 27.—The Government has announced that owing to the shortage of shipping facilities here the English Colonial Secretary would send ships to take Jamaica's cargoes to England. The Bank of England will also advance money to the Jamaican Government under the borrowing powers possessed by the Government.

The feeling here is that England does not intend to neglect even the smallest of her colonies.

In Austria they are casting church bells into cannon, and not making any progress at all toward converting their swords and spears into ploughshares and pruning hooks.

It is learned that the American steamer Dacia has been seized in the Channel by a French cruiser and taken to Briest. The whole question of the validity of the Dacia's transfer from German to American register will now be settled between France and the U. S.

Athens despatches report a grave state of affairs in Turkey. A panic prevails owing to the advance of the Allied Fleet in the Dardanelles. The authorities have decided to move the seat of Government to Broussa, in Asia Minor.

The Tamworth Murder Case

Assizes Open at Napanee Tomorrow Dr Robinson To Come up for Trial

HISTORY OF THE CASE.

July 28.—Body of Miss Yorke found in cellar at home of Dr. C. K. Robinson in Tamworth.

July 29.—Inquest opened in village hall at Tamworth.

July 30.—Jury found Miss Yorke came to her death as a result of an illegal operation performed for abortion by Dr. Robinson.

July 31.—Police in various centres instructed to arrest Dr. Robinson, who could not be located.

Sept. 22.—Dr. Robinson appeared before Justice Kelly, at Napanee assizes, pleaded "not guilty" to murder charge, and the case was laid over till spring assizes, on March 2, 1915.

At the Spring Assizes, which will open in Napanee on Tuesday afternoon the trial of Dr. Clifford K. Robinson, the young Kingston physician, charged with the murder of Blanche Lillian ("Happy") Yorke, of Tamworth, will be on the docket. The case is one which caused widespread interest, and the court room at Napanee will be filled to overflowing when it is heard.

The case of Dr. Robinson came before Justice Kelly, at Napanee on Sept. 23rd. The accused pleaded not guilty to the charge of murder, but after a five hour deliberation, in which the evidence of seven witnesses were heard, a grand jury announced that they had found a true bill against Dr. Robinson. T. C. Robinette, K.C., appeared as counsel for the accused. He was not ready to go on with the case, and thus it was put over until the Spring Assizes.

MORE CONFESSIONS IN STEIGLER CASE

Capt. Von Papen, German Military Attache at Washington, is Now Involved

NEW YORK, March 1.—Special—Two more confessions similar to that of Richard Peter Stegler, the German naval reservist, have been introduced by the Department of Justice. Stegler accused Captain Boy-Ed, naval attache of the German Embassy, of planning to send him to England as a spy under a fraudulent American passport. The new confessions, coupled with a mass of information obtained by secret service agents, it was learned last night, involve Captain Von papen, the military attache of the German Embassy. The charges have been placed before President Wilson.

Both Captain Boy-Ed and Captain Von Papen are directly responsible to Count Von, Bernstorff, the German Ambassador, who is quoted in Washington as saying that Stegler's statements are fantastic, false and an attempt at blackmail.

WILL FREE WATSON

Germans to Let Young British Diplomat Out of Brussels

LONDON, March 1.—Special—Arrangements are completed for the exchange of Grant Watson, the young British diplomat attached to the British Legation at Brussels, who was captured by the Germans after their occupation of that city. His exchange will be effected in connectiin with the return to Germany of a number of German Consuls. Watson, for a time attached to the British Embassy at Washington, has an American wife.

GERMAN AMBASSADOR WILL BE RECALLED

(Canadian Press Special)

NEW YORK, March 1.—Dr. Dernberg, former German colonial minister, today characterized as "bunk" the report that the German ambassador, Bernstorff, would be recalled and replaced by Baron Treutler, presumably because Dr. Dernberg had reported to Berlin adversely concerning Count von Bernstorff's course and on the state of feeling in America. The same rumor said Dr. Dernberg was the Kaiser's personal representative.

Kitchener's Soldiers Have Got Religion

"Puritan Spirit Invades Kitchener's Army" is Theologian's Tale

NEW YORK, Feb. 27.—National religious regeneration is in progress in England, and the Puritan spirit has seized the British army, according to F. Herbert Stead, of Browning Hall, London, who arrived here last night a passenger on the steamship Baltic. Mr. Stead, a brother of the late W. T. Stead, the noted British journalist, is in this country as minister-in-residence at Auburn Theological Seminary at Auburn, N.Y., and will preach tomorrow at Cornell University.

"The result of this war, from the religious point of view," said Mr. Stead, "promises to be a real national regeneration. The British army, particularly the new army being organized by Lord Kitchener, is now filled with the Puritan spirit as no army has ever been since Cromwell's time. A common expression, even of the old standing army, is that now 'even soldiers have become religious.'

"Rarely do the men go into the trenches until they have offered prayer. I heard of several different companies that would not go into battle until after prayer, the men even insisting on the colonel leading them in prayer."

Ontario Marble Is Like That of Italy

Hastings County Produces That Now Being Used At Government House

A fine white marble that is gradually taking the place of the white marble used for interior purposes that has hitherto been imported from Italy is being quarried at Bancroft, Hastings county, and being placed on the Canadian market by the Hoidge Marble Company, Limited, of Toronto. This marble is of a very fine quality, and along with some seven or eight other varieties of marble brought from the Hoidge quarries is at present being used in the interior finishings of the new Government House. The quarry was opened up some five years ago, but it is only within the last year that the white marble, so closely resembling the imported Italian variety, has been taken out. Modern quarrying machinery is installed in the Hoidge property, which embraces some 1,000 acres, and it is intended to develop electrical energy from the waterpower on the property to be applied in the quarrying operations.

Italy is so extremely secretive that possibly it has concealed its real intentions from itself.

FORCES HER OPPONENTS TO STRENUOUS METHODS

Referring to the German Naval Campaign Against Shipping, Premier Asquith Declares She Had Violated all Conventions Intended for Mitigation of Warfare

(Canadian Press Despatch)

LONDON, March 1.—"Germany has driven her opponents to adopt retaliatory measures to prevent commodities of every kind from reaching or leaving Germany," said Premier Asquith in the House of Commons today. Referring to the German campaign against British shipping, Premier Asquith declared that Germany had violated systematically all conventions intended for the mitigation of warfare. "She has taken further steps," the Premier said, "by organizing an under-sea campaign of piracy and pillage." Germany, he declared, was not blockading, and could never blockade English shores.

Referring to what he termed whispers of peace, Premier Asquith said it was not time to talk of peace. That time would arrive only when the great purposes of the allies are in sight of accomplishment.

The proposed measures of reprisal against Germany, the Premier said, would be enforced with strict observance of the dictates of humanity, but the allies did not purpose to allow their efforts to be strangled in a network of judicial niceties. There was no intention, he explained, to confiscate detained ships or cargoes unless they were liable to confiscation under the ordinary conditions of war.

The Premier declared the allies would hold themselves free to capture goods wherever there was the presumption that such goods were destined for the use of their enemies or had been sent from a hostile country.

WASHINGTON, March 1.—Great Britain and France served notice on the United States today that they would hold themselves at liberty to stop all shipping hereafter to and from Germany.

ALLIES FORM A CONTINUOUS CHAIN

(Canadian Press Special)

PARIS, March 1.—This afternoon's official statement says there is nothing to add to the communication of yesterdty except that in the Champagne region different supporting positions which we successively secured now form a continuous chain two kilometres in length to the north and northwest of Perth, and that in the Vosges our attacks made some slight progress at Chapelotte, north of Celles.

HALIFAX, N.S., March 1.—Special—The Allan liner Mongolian entered the harbor here yesterday afternoon and reached quarantine. The steamer was very much down by the head as a result of her forward compartments being full of water. She was convoyed to port by the United States revenue cutter Seneca.

The Mongolian sprang a leak on Friday, when about a thousand miles off St. John's, Nfld. One report said that she had probably been in the ice or had possibly struck an iceberg. She had two hundred passengers on board, including many from Newfoundland.

In view of a suspicion that her death was the result of a criminal operation, Dr. Greer ordered a post-mortem examination by Drs. Eastwood and MacPherson, who will report at an adjourned sitting on Monday night. The girl was a stenographer and came here several months ago from New Hampshire.

A Paris official announcement reports fresh progress by the French in Lorraine. In the Champagne region the British and French took five hundred yards of trenches yesterday. In Flanders slow but steady progress is being made.

Petrograd despatches report that the Russians recaptured Przasnyz late yesterday. The retreat of the German army from this region is characterized as a disorderly flight.

BAD FOR U. S. IF ALLIES CRUSHED

BANGOR Wales, Mar. 1.—(Special)—The chancellor of the exchequer, David Lloyd George, made a pointed reference to the United States in a speech here today.

"If Germany is triumphant over this country," he said, "she would be practically dictator of the world, and where," he asked, "could we then look to a chivalrous country to protect us—to America?

"If countries like France and Russia with huge armies, and we, with the most powerful navy in the world, could not face this terrible machine, how could America step it? It would be more than America could do to defend her interest in her own continent. America is unready more than we were."

HYDRO-ELECTRIC IN BROCKVILLE SOON

BROCKVILLE, March 1—Epecial—The hydro-electric line from Prescott to Brockville is nearing completion and work is being rushed on the transformer station, which occupies a site convenient to the power house of the Brockville light and power department. The line covers a distance of 15 miles running through a rich agricultural district between the two towns.

It is believed that the power will be brought from Morrisburg, as the line from there to Prescott has been in operation for some months, and supplies Winchester, Chesterville and Presc[illegible] It is said that at Morrisburg there is not yet capacity to supply all demands of the municipalities named, to say nothing of the rural requirements in the townships en route. The eventual source will probably be Chats Falls on the Ottawa River.

A radial railway from Toronto to Ottawa through Brockville, is spoken of in connection with the Chats Falls project, which is thought to be receiving the attention of Sir Adam Beck.

Brockville is becoming very impatient over the long wait for cheap power. In July of 1912 the ratepayers ratified a bylaw empowering the town council to sign the 30-year hydro contract.

Charles R. Green, 66, a prominent farmer of this vicinity, died suddenly at his home at the Tincap. He had recently disposed of his farm, with the intention of removing to Brockville.

WOMAN TRIED TO ABDUCT HER CHILD

TORONTO, March 1.—Special—Constable Holmes of the Union Station and Plainclothesmen Dawn and McLarty stopped the Vancouver express just as it was pulling out of the station at 11.30 last night and took off Mrs. Henrietta Wilson and her four-year-old daughter, who, it is alleged, was kidnapped by Mrs. Wilson from the home of the child's grandmother, at 986 Leslie street. The woman was held at No. 1 station last night on a nominal charge of vagrancy.

Nine years ago the woman came to Canada from England with her husband Edward Wilson, but after three months in Canada she left him for another man named Morris, with whom she lived six years, and who is the father of the little girl taken off the train last night. Mrs. Wilson left Morris a year or so ago and went to live with her brother in Vancouver. Only yesterday she called at the home of the child's grandmother, on Leslie street, and asked to be allowed to take the child for a walk. Mrs. Morris supected she would run away with the girl and followed her to a hotel and from there to the station.

As the child is her own, she cannot be charged with kidnapping, and therefore will face the magistrate on a vagrancy charge.

Go on looking for signs of spring, but keep the snow shovel handy.

It is expected that all the strikers will be back at work not later than Wednesday.

MISSIONARY SERMONS

At Bridge street Methodist church yesterday, missionary sermons were delivered by the Rev. James Allen, M.A., who is connected with the missionary society of the church. Large congregations were present at both services, and thoroughly enjoyed the discourses. The Rev. gentleman has been for some time connected with the missionary society of the church, and has travelled extensively in the interest of the home missions. His address in the evening was based on the Scripture text of Leviticus, 19th chapter, 33rd and 34th verses. The theme of his address was in reference to the personal touch of Christians with those who are not in any way connected with any Christian church. The offerings at the services were most generous.

Excellent Sermon to 39th Recruits

Rev. Chas. Geo. Smith, B. D. Gives Many Points of Profit and Interest to Visiting Soldiers

Sunday morning the 39th Battalion, in training here, attended divine service in the Victoria Avenue Baptist Church. There was a turn-out of over two hundred, and the auditorium of the church was filled to the doors. After the usual devotional exercises, the pastor, Rev. Chas. Geo. Smith, B.D., delivered the following able discourse on "Loyalty," taking as the basis of his remarks John vii:31—"Then said Jesus to those who believed on him, If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed."

So in the mind and conception of our blessed Saviour there are only two kinds of disciples, viz.: (1) disciples; (2) disciples indeed— professors and those who are loyal in reality and service—truehearted. How do we merit this distinguished order of discipleship, "indeed"? Well, the adverb is self-explanatory, if you will cut it in two and add an 's' to it, thus: in deeds. So disciples indeed are disciples in deeds? Yes. If the test were, say, preaching (talking) or singing, why, the minister and the choir would come off first best. But that would be an artificial or arbitrary test. The true test of Jesus is the acid test of loyalty. If I may coin to words, continuinty means "holdonitiveness and sticktoitiveness, never-failing devotion and love. That was always Christ's test. Look at the sermon on the mount—there the test is service and sacrifice and not mere words. Not he who saith "Lord, Lord, but he that doeth the will of my father which is in heaven." "By their fruits ye shall know them". This is the hall-mark of Christianity and this is the idea in the story of the good Samaritan—"Go ye and do likewise." A little boy, when asked whether his father was a Christian, replied: "He says he is—but he ain't working at it!" A loyal Christian is one who works at it, and is activity to the finger-tips in loving service for God and humanity.

I had a mendicant who was a nuisance. His plea for renewed help was: "I am a Christian." "But," I said, "you know you are shiftless and untruthful, intemperate and lazy, and you don't try to do right and be a man; surely you don't call yourself a Christian!" But he stuck to it. "Why," he said, "I've been a Christian off and on" for twenty years." "Yes," I said, "and principally off, and seldom on!" Loyalty means a Christian who is always on, not off and on, or spasmodic.

Loyalty is the fundamental characteristic and qualification for every soldier of the King, citizen of his country, and servant of God.

(1) You may have one, two, five or ten talents, but you are not responsible for the number of talents, but for their loyal consecration to God, and the service of your fellows.

(2) You may have a splendid training for life's duties and the best education in the world, but you are indebted for this probably to worthy forbears and generous environment.

(3) But to make your life royal and kingly you must have the grace of loyalty. And now abideth talents, training and loyalty; but the greatest of these is loyalty—and dear friends and comrades, this fundamental grace of loyalty is the need of the hour and the call of God and the King, for the church, nation and individual, your King and country need you—aye, and your God!

Loyalty means fidelity. The Romans were strong on loyalty, and in their mythology they deified loyalty as a goddess personified in Fides, a noble queen wearing on her brow a wreath of laurel and standing at the great crossroads and looking down with benign and wistful gaze upon the troops and youth of Rome as they marched past her bearing their unconquered Roman eagles aloft on helmet and standard, and she seemed to say in her wistful appeal—"Men of Rome, be loyal to the Empire and ye shall win undying lustre and ye shall earn undying love of every worthy citizen for whom you now go forth to fight upon the fields of battle and the seas and billows wild and roaring."

What is the foundation of this fundamental grace of loyalty, in the soldier, civilian and saint of God? I answer, it is not fiction, flag waving, froth or frills; it is not saying so merely, it is being so and doing so. Why have men flocked to the Empire's call by thousands in her hour of need today? Why is the flower of Canada in Flanders this very morning? I'll tell you. It is because they know the meaning of loyalty. They know the Empire and they love it—and greater love hath no man than this that he lay down his life for his friends. They have said: "Here I stand; God helping me I can do no other; and so they have crossed the rubicon and burned their bridges behind them, and have fared forth as the Crusaders of old, to die or to conquer.

How is this loyalty to be truly expressed? I answer, not by theorizing, but by actualizing. Indeed because in deeds—positive, practical, personal loyalty to duty. A company of British tars were singing "Rule Britannia" at a banquet. They noticed one sailor never sang a note. They questioned him. He said: "I have never sang Rule Britannia. I can't sing a note; so I keep quiet lest I spoil the whole show." Presently he said, "But I sang it with my cannon at Trafalgar and Waterloo till the enemy's guns were silenced." They voted that he had sung it best. Loyalty may be expressed negatively, by what I do not do, as well as what I do. On one occasion an officer in Caesar's army was offered a big bribe to desert to the ranks of Pompey. He replied, "I would rather be Caesar's slave than Pompey's master." Never betray your God, your country, your King; never be false to your highest best or to the traditions and chivalries of the British soldier. Never lower your flag—the flag that for half a millenium (500 years) has been to your fathers and to all beneath its sheltering folds, the mistress of the seas and the mother of the free

The motive spring of all loyalty is love —not as a dire duty, or in the spirit of "We got to, so we'll grin and bear it," but in the spirit of loving service, which says plainer than words —"I just can't help it," and your loyalty springs forth spontaneously and almost unconsciously, and is as natural and normal as your love to God and wife, child, sister and the weak—for whose welfare you would live, and if need be, die, not counting the cost. This makes the difference between drudgery and delight—like the little boy carrying his big sister to school, said: "She aint heavy—she's my sister."

I believe the loyal soldier and servant of God lives a charmed life, and is the special object of the divine care and protection. In other words, that you are as safe in the battle line as you are in this Church, and that not a single shaft can hit, save as the Son of God permit! You are immortal till your work is done. Lord Kitchener at Athara was within a few yards of a pile of Dervish shells when they exploded. "Why was I spared?" he asks. "Because destiny had need of me still." So comrades, one and all, I bid you Godspeed and commend you to God. Be loyal, I charge you, never falter, and remember, "The Lord of hosts is with you and the God of Israel is your refuge"; and where your vanguard rests today, your rear shall camp to-morrow."

Special music furnished by the choir included an anthem, "O Be Joyful in the Lord," and a duet, "Love Divine" by Miss Brown and Mr. Davidson.

What is Transpiring Among the Soldier Boys at Belleville and Kingston.

BELLEVILLE

During Military Carnival Week in Kingston not one man of the 21st Battalion (nearly 1,200 men) was called before Lt.-Col. W. S. Hughes for misconduct, and so they were given a holiday on Thursday afternoon by the Lieut.-Col. as a mark of appreciation.

Although nothing has been given out officially, it is understood that after the second contingent leaves Canada this will be the last of the Canadian Expeditionary Forces to leave as a division. The remainder will leave the country when ready. Recruiting will not be stopped from now until the end of the war, or as long as Canada continues to send over soldiers. The Third Contingent will be divided up, and each battalion sent over when required and used to fill vacancies by casualties.

The 39th Battalion, which will shortly mobilize in this city, is now up to its full strength, namely 1200 officers and men.

Capt. H. Souva, of Cobourg, who is connected with the 40th regiment is in the city, looking after supplies, etc., for the members under his supervision.

Quarters in the Corby Building, on the corner of Front Street and the market square have been prepared for some of the officers of the 39th Battalion, which will be mobilized here. The officers will occupy same in a few days.

At the Canning Factory building on Pinnacle street, sleeping apartments for 1040 men have been provided. They are located on the second and third floor. Baths and lavoratories have been installed on the ground floor. A large kitchen had been provided at the south end, and the remainder of the ground floor will be used as a mess room.

Whilst it is not at present, definitely known when the members of the 39th Battalion will mobilize here it is expected that some will arrive here the latter part of this week.

Col. Preston, who is the commanding officer of the 39th Battalion, was in the city today.

Col. Ketcheson and Col Marsh both received wires on Saturday to stop recruiting in this district, as sufficient men had been secured. It is stated that over eleven hundred have joined the colors.

The members of the 15th and 49th regiments, who have enlisted as members of the 3rd Contingent, yesterday morning attended divine service at the Baptist Church. The Pastor, Rev. C. B. Smith, was the preacher, and delivered an able and inspiring discourse. His subject was loyalty. Special music was furnished by the choir.

This morning the enlisters of the 15th and the 49th regiments had a march out. There was a large turnout and the men were given a march of considerable length. Many of the officers accompanied the men in the march.

KINGSTON

According to a militia order just issued, all officers of the 21st Battalion will discard wearing of swords. On service they will be issued with revolvers. The sword and equipment necessary to carrying the same is too conspicuous for German marksmen, and can not be used by an infantryman as effectively as a revolver. The old days of leading an attack with a drawn sword has passed.

Fourteen more recruits were received at Tete du Pont Barracks last night for the R.C.H.A. Eleven of these came from Toronto and three from Montreal. This brings the new battery a little over strength. Some of the men recruited are ex-Imperial service soldiers and held good discharges from old country regiments. Most of the men are young and when put in uniform and drilled should make a good type of artillery soldier.

The new militia battery about to be organized in Kingston will be known as the 26th Battery, C.F.A.

The new R.C.H.A. battery office is open and Lieut. Steacy is busy getting the new men posted to their sub-sections. No non-coms. have been appointed yet.

Several men will be turned over today to the new militia battery, which has been authorized in Kingston. Active recruiting will begin at once. The names of the officers who will be in this new battery are not yet known.

Sergt.-Major Edwards, W.O., Musketry Instructor for the third division, was in Belleville giving instruction in musketry to the men of the 39th battalion for the first part of the week. He is now back at the Armouries.

SPORTING NEWS

DESERONTO MEET LOCAL ALL-STAR

The hockey game to be played at the local arena Wednesday night between the Deseronto Stars, champions of the Bay of Quinte League, and the Belleville team, is certainly a move in the right direction. We have always advocated fore-sight in choosing the team, and this game will give the fans a good idea as to what kind of material we have on tap for next season. It is the usual thing in Belleville, that as soon as a team is down and out in the O.H.A. the hockey season is over. This year it is hoped that preparations are being made for next season.

We have a City League, with keen rivalry existing between the different teams, and it is to be hoped that some good material has been unearther. Wednesday night's game will be a good material has been unearthed. "material" to show its class, as the Deseronto team will take some beating. Dick Arnott promises surprises in the local line-up, and it is to be hoped he comes across. On the out-come of this game will hang the confidence of the fans in next season's Intermediate O.H.A. prospects. We'll all be there to give them the "once over," as it will be a game worth watching, and probably the last one of the season of any importance.

BELLEVILLE LADIES WILL GO TO WHITBY

Tomorrow afternoon the Ontario Business College Ladies' team will journey to Whitby, over the C.P.R. to play their return game with the ladies of that town. The local ladies have been practicing assiduously and feel confident that they will repeat their win tomorrow night. A number of ardent "enthusiasts" will accompany the team. Here's hoping that success crowns the O.B.C. ladies efforts as they certainly are worthy of the best of support.

If a game can be arranged the O.B.C. team will remain over night in Whitby and play on Wednesday in Toronto with the St. Hilda's School Team, Champions of University of Toronto.

GIRLS PROVIDE INTERESTING GAME OF HOCKEY

At the Arena on Saturday night between the hours of 6 and 7, the two hockey teams of girls, in connection with the Y.M.C.A., provided an interesting game to the number of fans who were on the boards. Neither of the teams had names, they having been playing the first two or three games to pick one fast team, so they were hard to tell apart, but we found out that the score was 9 to 5 in favor of one of the teams. Tomorrow night, between the hours of 6.30 and 7.30 a picked bunch from the Y.M.C.A. will cross sticks with the High School, and an interesting game should no doubt be seen.

O.B.C. VS. MIDGETS

The O.B.C. and Midget hockey teams of the City League will play at the local rink this evening, from 6.45 to 8 o'clock. The winners of tonight's game will play the Belleville Hardware on Friday evening.

ESCAPED FROM GERMANY.

Canadian Student of Music Had a Thrilling Time.

An intensely interesting account of the conditions ruling in Germany at the outbreak of war is given by Melville H. Staples of Knox College, Toronto, who tells of the difficulties and dangers of his escape from Dresden, where he had gone to study music.

Mr. Staples, in a recent lecture, reviewed the first few days of the war, stating that after the outcry over the assassination of the Austrian prince the lull in affairs was devoted to praise for the peace overtures of Sir Edward Grey, but no news of a diplomatic nature was given out, and the patriotic spirit of the people was worked up systematically. In the cafes, false telegrams were read, such as that Japan had declared war on Russia, and patriotic music and readings created intense enthusiasm. One patriotic speech by a young woman from the platform of the orchestra at a cafe, Mr. Staples heard, to the effect:

"We have given our brothers, our sons, our lovers, our husbands, everything; and now we will not be weak. We will be strong. Long live the Kaiser!"

On Sunday, after church, a proclamation announced that a French aviator had flown over Nuremburg and Munich, dropping bombs on both towns. "That was another faked telegram," said Mr. Staples, who witnessed the great demonstration made before the British embassy on the news of Britain's declaration of war. "It wasn't very safe for anyone not cheering the opinions of the crowd," said Mr. Staples, "and there wasn't a man in that crowd cheered more loudly than myself." (Laughter.) This, with the vehement cursing of the British, was in strong contrast to the former praise of Sir Edward Grey, and formed a strong argument that Germany did not anticipate the opposition of Britain.

Mr. Staples said that three or four days after the outbreak of the war he received his passport, to present at the police headquarters, with his photograph. These he had to give up, getting a receipt, which named the waterworks, station, arsenal, barracks and other places as not to be approached, and received orders to report himself twice a week.

Dresden he characterized as a city in which more leniency to tourists was shown than in other places. In Leipsic, he said, 35 foreign students were carried off to the police cells, to be turned out in three or four weeks without explaantion. Their breakfast consisted of black bread and black coffee, lunch of thin soup and more black bread, and supper, in the way of variety, black coffee and black bread.

Mr. Staples tried, he said, to get at the man with the authority to say go or stay, but on every hand was met with, "You might as well go home, be quiet, and behave yourself." But after two and a half months of effort he succeeded in receiving permission to go, and got his passport in time to escape being arrested when the order for the detention of British subjects was issued. On examining his passport, however, he discovered to his dismay that it was marked, "As far as frontier," but he determined to proceed.

At Leipsic, however, he was detained, with the accusation, "You're an English spy." He was taken to headquarters, in the custody of two military men, when he was advised to go back to Dresden, Leipsic, as being the lesser authority, having no power to detain him. Nevertheless, he proceeded through Magdeburg and Hanover to the border, where at a turnstile his papers were examined by two military officers. His baggage was critically examined, and under guard he was locked up with others in a room, in a horrible state of suspense and uncertainty. After two and a half hours he was again taken out under guard and put into a train. The train, to his great relief, he found to be manned by a Dutch crew, and in a few moments he was in Holland and free.

Practically no manufacturing went on in Germany, he said, after the outbreak of the war, the men being sent out with picks and shovels to dig trenches, with the result that the whole eastern side of Germany was formed by a series of trenches.

His First Bird.

Many of the best stories told by Lord Charles Berefond, who is known as the wittiest of our admirals, are about Irishmen. One in particular is of a certain son of Erin who described his first day's shooting in the following very Hibernian way: "The first bird I ever shot was a squirrel and the first time I hit him I missed him altogether, and the next time I hit him I hit him in the same place. After that, I took a stone and dropped him from the tree, and he fell into the water and was drowned, and that was the first bird I ever shot."

The Upstart.

ENGLISHMAN VISITS GERMANS IN LILLE

War Correspondent Slips Through the Lines And Spends a Day Sightseeing — Fourth of City Wiped Out — Troops From Eastern Front Arriving — Civilians Work for Germans and Are Paid In Food

The announcement sounds humdrum until one recollects that Lille is in German hands and that in order to get there it is necessary to cross the German lines. How I did cross them is a story of which it would be injudicious to publish the details at present. Suffice it to say that the pass I was armed with and my disguise as a Lille man enabled me to satisfy the German outpost between Cuinchy and La Bassee that I was a perfectly harmless person.

At LaBassee there was more exhibiting of my pass. There was a troublesome fellow here who made great difficulties. He finally appealed to an artillery unteroffizer and this worthy after due consideration decided I was to be searched. So searched I was. The only thing I had that would have raised suspicion was a cordite cartridge. It was inside my exceedingly dirty handkerchief, with which I ostentatiously blew my nose, so all was well. A few cigarettes judiciously presented to the under officer quite melted his heart. He tried to explain in vile French that I might succeed in getting a lift along to Lille on one of the transport lorries.

La Bassee presented a very busy appearance. Though subjected to frequent bombardment, it appears to have escaped serious damage. I saw no cafes open. The population seemed to be reduced to children and women. The older boys and men were, an urchin told me, digging trenches for the Germans, who in turn gave them food for themselves and their families.

After a short wait I spied a motor lorry making for the direction of Lille, and at the cost of some more cigarettes was allowed to jump on behind. At Illes, about two miles out, we had the usual breakdown; but in twenty minutes or so the necessary repairs were effected and we pursued our way without further mishap through Fournes and Ligny to Haubourdin, which is practically a suburb of Lille.

As I saw the glimmer of water and the frown of Vauban's ancient bastions I confess to a certain feeling of nervousness. There would be another post to pass, and my useful stock of cigarettes was exhausted. However, my fears proved groundless. The lorry was not even stopped. I drove on light-hearted to the Grande Place, and the next morning and part of afternoon I spent in sightseeing.

Quarter of Lille Burned.

The greater part of the town is intact, but one whole quarter has been ruthlessly burned down. The following is naturally a very incomplete list of streets that suffered most: Rue de Bethune, Rue de Tournai, Rue de Bordaux, Rue des Augustine, Rue Sainte Anne, Rue Faidherbe, Rue du Molinel, Place Richelee. These and the smaller adjoining streets have practically ceased to exist.

That it has been a deliberate process is shown by the fact that buildings here and there that are of potential or actual use to the invaders have been spared. To the preliminary period of pillage and arson there evidently succeeded a moment of cool reflection. Lille was to be the habitation of the German for some time one of the main bases of operation, and to insure their own comfort they stopped the process of wholesale devastation.

The civilian population of Lille, what there is left of it, goes in fear and trembling of what will happen on a day not far distant now when the ceaseless pressure of the British from Armentieres and La Bassee and of the French from Lens will render the German position in Lille untenable. The prospect of early retreat does not as yet appear to have dawned on the invaders. They have rechristened the town Ryssel and established themselves quite comfortably there. A military band parades the streets every day. German women of every age and condition have settled down in the place and walk arm in arm with officers. Animated tea parties take place every afternoon in cafes and patisseries. The variety of cakes obtainable did not strike me as being at all extensive, however, and the price of commodities is on the average fully 20 per cent. higher than in Bethune, for instance.

The opening of a few German shops and of at least one German brewery, is an interesting feature of the commercial situation. Small bills are to be seen on walls announcing the early visit of a German theatrical company of very versatile character, for its repertoire ranges from grand opera to broad farce.

Train From East Front.

From a military point of view the most fruitful field of exploration proved to be the vicinity of the goods station. One train had evidently arrived during the night straight from the Eastern front, still bearing the chalked names of Russian places. They were still hard at work detraining the tail end of a brigade of Wurtembergers.

On another line near by was a long goods train, evidently ready for departure. There were eleven trucks conveying field guns and limbers damaged by the British fire, being sent back for repairs, also four coal trucks full of scrap metal of all kinds, from empty cartridge cases to kitchen utensils and old jam tins.

The troops I saw in Lille were in good condition. There were no men of obviously extreme youth or old age, and I noticed no sign of weakness or physical lassitude. There were no Prussians among them. All were Bavarians, Wurttembergers or Badeners.

The transport of horses and officers' mounts showed distinct signs of wear and tear, though they compared favorably with many of the French horses. The harness was in many cases brand new. My host, a very intelligent Lillois, told me the sanitary state of the German troops in the trenches was distinctly bad, and that typhoid in particular was very prevalent in spite of widespread inoculation. Whole train-loads of wounded and sick are daily sent out to unknown destinations, and numerous hospitals, permanent and temporary were always full. He said he had seen many prisoners pass through—French, British, and Indian. A number of British officers were kept in the citadel and there had been several cases of attempted evasion, none of them successful as far as we knew.

As one goes about the streets of Lille one cannot but be struck by the admirable bearing of the civil population. While studiously avoiding all possible occasion for conflict with the invaders, the men, women, and even the children show in thousands of insignificant little ways their quiet contempt for them. They still ardently hope for relief, but they so often thought the hour of deliverance was at hand that they seem to have settled down to a sort of unshakable fatalism. Their chief joy is listening to the constant booming of the allied artillery, and to watch for the occasional appearance of a French or British aeroplane.

Civilians Work for Food

Here, as in La Bassee, I found the civilians were in many cases compelled to work by the Germans in return for a daily issue of rations. There would appear to be some strange secret work to do at or in the vicinity of the water and electric power stations, for men employed there are not allowed to go home or to communicate with friends.

I was told, though I had no means of checking the information myself that the obsolescent forts had been left by the Germans in the state in which they found them, and no attempt had been made to improve their defensive value.

About 4 o'clock I suddenly bethought me of the advisability of setting about the return journey. My peculiar difficulty was that my pass was a return half. It allowed me to get into Lille but not to get out of it again. I determined to reconnoitre the ground and to try somehow to slip through a suburb before dark. Once more luck favored me. There was a solitary sentry, quite a young lad, and I noticed with approval his evident desire to enter into conversation, so I went forward and indicated a desire for a light. The youth answered in a German which to my delight I recognized as a dialect of the Bavarian Alps. I replied in his own tongue. Never have I seen such an astonished being as that sentry. Would he have a glass with me? I asked.

Bavarians never refuse beer. He pointed to an inn on the Lille side, but I demurred. I knew a much better place, but further on—on the suburb side. So I got past all right and into the first cafe, where I plied him with all the beer he wanted and then left him to tramp my eleven or twelve miles in the dark and rain. I made a detour round La Bassee to avoid the post there, and slinking along by a towpath reached the vicinity of Pont Fixe, there remained now but one German post between me and the British lines. How I succeeded in fooling the sentry it would be injudicious to say just yet, but a certain cordite cartridge played a part in the proceedings.

COUSIN LISA

By DONALD CHAMBERLIN

When I tell you that my name is Shovaloff you immediately picture a man with a heavy beard, shocky hair, large and thick set form. In other words, you fancy me to be a Russian. If you were to see me you would behold a rather small man with closely cut light hair and clean shaven face. Moreover I cannot speak a word of Russian. I can only speak English and American English at that, for I was born in the United States and till recently had never been off the North American continent.

My father was born in the province of Perm in eastern Russia, lying next to Siberia. He came to America when he was very young, married an American girl and died within a year after I was born.

My father brought a little money with him from Russia, which he used to a profit and left my mother in comfortable circumstances. When I was twenty-five a letter came to her stating that the farm which had been in the Shovaloff family for many years must be sold, and I was interested. She proposed that I go to Russia and look after the matter. I loved travel and caught at the plan eagerly.

When I reached my father's former home I did not wonder that he had left it. The country round about was thinly settled, though a village had grown up near the farm. The people had their own customs, which had been handed down to them through many generations. Some of these customs were very quaint.

My father had left a brother and a sister in Russia. The brother had died unmarried, but the sister, a widow, still lived. She had but one child, a daughter, who jointly with me would inherit the farm. She was a very odd, though a very pretty, little damsel about seventeen years old. I could not talk with my aunt or my cousin because they spoke no English and I no Russian, but we found an interpreter who served our purpose fairly well.

There was no hotel in the place, and I was obliged to set up a dwelling of my own. This I did in a small house which had been vacated. A middle aged woman who spoke a little English consented to be my housekeeper and do my cooking. My aunt did not invite me to stay at her house. Why I knew not.

The business that brought me to Russia was very slow in working itself out, and the prospect of my getting away was not propitious. I had been in the village several weeks when one morning I was surprised by a visit from my Cousin Lisa. She came in, all blushes and with a shrinking manner. My housekeeper being present, I saw no impropriety in her coming, but I nevertheless wondered at it. Not being able to communicate with her more than to say good morning, I asked the housekeeper to inquire if there was anything I could do for my cousin. A few words passed between the two, and the housekeeper, with some embarrassment I thought, said that there was only one thing I could do for my cousin, but I had better find it out for myself.

I concluded that I had struck another of the strange customs of the country and that I might as well let it work itself out. Lisa assisted the housekeeper in the work, and I went out about the business concerning which I had come to Russia. I did not return till evening, expecting surely that my cousin had gone. What was my surprise to find her still there.

"How long," I asked my housekeeper, "is Lisa going to stay here?"

"Always, unless you turn her out."

"Turn her out!"

"Yes. And you cannot do that unless you are willing to suffer the resentment of every one hereabout."

"What does all this mean?"

"It means that Lisa has offered to marry you."

I was thunder struck. Little by little I drew from my informer that in this region of Russia when a woman wished to marry a man she went to his house and remained there, awaiting his action. If he refused her it was considered a great insult to her and her family. If she had male relatives they were likely to avenge what was considered a slight to her and them.

While I had been charmed by my little cousin I had had up to this moment no thought of marrying her. Her action put the idea into my head. A marriage between us would greatly facilitate the settling of the inheritance in which we were interested. She was very lovely, very modest, and in her quaint Russian costume she looked very pretty. If dressed as an American lady I would have no reason, at home, to be ashamed of her.

I accepted Lisa's proposal and as soon as I had done so sent her home to prepare for the wedding. My aunt told me that she had seen from the first that her daughter had given me her heart, and she had encouraged her to act as she had done.

When I took home with me a bride my mother was surprised, but when I told her how the betrothal had come about she was astonished. Fortunately my wife's modest demeanor did not permit my mother to associate any boldness with her act.

We have but recently returned to America and, although Lisa is studying English with great assiduity, we are not yet able to converse with much ease.

GERMANY'S EXACTION

It appears from the letter of Sir Edward Grey to the chairman of the American Belgian Relief Committee that while sympathizers with the destitute Belgians in other parts of the world have been contributing some $2,000,000 a month to feed them, the German government has continued to requisition and to remove from the country the food supplies already there. In addition it is, according to Sir Edward Grey, levying upon the prostrate country an impost of about $8,000,000 a month.

The British government made a direct contribution of $500,000 to the Belgian relief funds, and Canada, Australia and New Zealand also made generous contributions. The committee asked of the British government a regular monthly subvention to continue its work and the proposal was being favorably considered. Sir Edward Grey now says, however, that the British government cannot send money into the country while the German government continues to take $8,000,000 a month out of the country.

No one can blame the British government for that. But, as Mr. Hoover of the American committee says, there are 1,500,000 destitute people in Belgium who must be fed, and the number increases every week. Of what use is it for the German government to furnish so many excellent arguments on the justice of its cause if it shatters them all by exacting $8,000,000 a month from a ruined and starving people?

THE ROCKEFELLER GIFTS

It is difficult to see where objection could be made to the gifts and pledges of the Rockefeller Foundation since its establishment in 1913, a list of which has been compiled at the request of the United States Commission on Industrial Relations. The total, exceeding $6,000,000, includes pledges of yearly sums for various periods, some of them unconditionally, as well as the actually paid out. Not a cause has been helped that could be considered unworthy by the most prejudiced critic of the Foundation.

While the money given to religious denominations for various admirable purposes is considerable in the aggregate, the amount seems relatively small when the large sums expended for the relief of suffering, for the prevention and eradication of disease, for the promotion of free education, and the investigation of plans for the development of better municipal government are considered. Nobody can glance through this list without gaining the conviction that the Foundation was established for the general good, and that its distribution of its vast funds has been made with its single purpose kept consistently in mind. It is doubtful if any Government institution, no matter how nobly and wisely planned, could for any long period carry on so ably such a good work as this.

WHEN THE TIRED MOTHER GIVES OUT

What Then?—The Family Suffers, the Poor Mothers Suffer—Mrs. Becker Meets This Distressing Situation.

Collinsville, Ill.—"I suffered from a nervous break-down and terrible headaches, and was tired all over, totally worn out and too discouraged to enjoy life, but as I had four in family and sometimes eight or nine boarders, I kept on working despite my suffering.

"I saw Vinol advertised and decided to try it, and within two weeks I noticed a decided improvement in my condition and now I am a well woman."—Mrs. ANA BECKER, Collinsville, Ill.

There are hundreds of nervous, run-down, overworked women in this vicinity who are hardly able to drag around and who we are sure would be wonderfully benefited by Vinol as Mrs. Becker was.

The reason Vinol is so successful in building up health and strength in such cases is because it combines the medicinal tissue building and curative elements of cod's livers together with the blood making, strengthening properties of tonic iron. We ask every weak, nervous, run-down man or woman in this vicinity to try a bottle of Vinol on our guarantee to return their money if it fails to benefit.

GERMAN PERIL IN NICKEL

Toronto Telegram.

Were the Toronto World and W. F. Maclean, M.P., as vociferous in their efforts to ensure the delivery of Canadian dreadnoughts to Britain in 1909-12 as these patriot forces are in their efforts to prevent the delivery of Canadian nickel to Germany in 1915?

The influence and vote of the Toronto World and M.P. for South York on behalf of the export of Canadian money for dreadnoughts in 1909-12 sounded like the still small voice of conscience.

The influence and vote of the Toronto World and M.P. for South York in opposition to the export of Canadian nickel to Germany sounds like a rushing, mighty wind.

Germany's chances of securing delivery of Canadian nickel in wartime are non-existent and not worth a minute's discussion. These chances are no better than were Britain's chances of securing Canadian dreadnoughts owing to the heroic exertions of the Toronto World and W. F. Maclean, M.P. in 1909 and 1912.

CURRENT COMMENT

Nevada has got its easy-divorce law back and so is looking forward confidently to a return of prosperity.

It is reported that the Turkish crown jewels have been removed from Constantinople into the interior of Asia Minor. Can the Germans and the Turks have fallen out?
The Tamworth.

Parliament might think over the fact that the lost forty millions which the Laurier Government squandered in the building of the Transcontinental white elephant would just about make up the decrease in the revenue.

Now that the Transcontinental is nearly ready for operation, nothing remains but to find some use to which it can be put. Doubtless Sir Wilfrid Laurier has mountains of information upon this subject.

In the first seven months of the war we sent abroad a trifle more than double the amount of foodstuffs that the U. S. exported in the corresponding period of a year ago. That is the kind of business that should be building up Canadian domestic activities.

An amusing telegram from London states that Canada has arranged with a syndicate for the floating of a loan of $500,000. It does not take much of a syndicate in London to handle a loan of that size, and Canada is not likely to be in the market for the amount named. If the Canadian government are doing any financing over there it will be necessary to add a few figures to the amount named.

Flanders, where the hardest of the fighting has been going on for some months, played an important part in the Middle Ages. It was to Flanders that William Caxton went to learn the art of printing. He returned to England in 1476, taking with him a printing press, which he set up near Westminster, and advertised that he would do printing "right chepe." He was patronized by the Court, the Knights and the Clergy. The first book printed in 1477 was entitled "The Dictes and Sayings of the Philosophers." The first weekly newspaper did not appear until 1622.

A NEW PEACH AREA.

Fred. W. Christie Is Making an Interesting Experiment In Lambton.

A new prospective peach belt is to be found in Lambton County. Within close proximity to Lake Huron is an extended area of so-called wild lands, which have heretofore been held to be of little use for grain cultivation, and yet they are now being found to be of decided value for fruit-raising.

At first glance the general aspect of the country is forbidding. A succession of sand hills and ridges, covered by a second-growth of oak and pine, and a mass of shrubbery, with a light sandy soil showing white in the open spaces, would seem to be useless for practical purposes. But, as has been said, this is not the case. An interesting experiment is being made by Mr. Fred. W. Christie, Toronto, who incidentally is carrying into actual operation the advice so frequently heard of getting back to the land.

Born and raised on a farm, Mr. Christie went into business as a youth, and now is finding the life in the open air and in the country of the greatest benefit and interest, as well as yielding prospective profit as a reward. Indeed, some predict that the district will yet become a second Niagara, for it must be remembered that it is in the same southern latitude as St. Catharines.

Three years ago Mr. Christie bought a section of the lands above described, after consulting a specialist of the Ontario Agricultural Department, who held that the sandy loam of the locality was well suited for the growing of the tender fruits, especially of peaches and vegetables. A vigorous policy of clearing the land was undertaken in the fall, permitting of the first planting of peach and apple trees three years ago last spring. A total of 2,000 peach and 600 apple trees have thus far been planted on a cleared area of twenty acres. The majority of the peach trees show splendid growth and a healthy condition, and are due to yield their first fruit next season. Among the varieties represented are the Elberta, Fitzgerald, Yellow St. John, Crosby, New Prolific and Crawford. Local help is thus far easily had. It costs about $25 to clear and stump an acre.

In addition to the young orchards, Mr. Christie has proven the suitability of the soil for vegetables. Splendid specimens of potatoes, tomatoes, melons, sweet corn, etc., are among the products, while the smaller fruits and berries thrive to a degree. As an evidence of luxurious growth, sunflower stalks have reached a height double that of a man.

If Mr. Christie's interesting experiment in peach culture, on the so-called wild lands of Lambton, proves successful, as it has every promise of doing, he will have rendered a patriotic service, for thousands of acres of similar land await similar cultivation. Lambton county offers abundant opportunities to others to get "back to the land" in a most practical and profitable way, providing energy, faith and pluck that will not be downed by an occasional set-back are part of a man's capital and equipment. Otherwise, the amount of capital actually required is not a serious handicap.

Mr. Christie is thus showing his strong faith in his proposition, and deserves the degree of success already his. Credit is also due him for the unique bungalow erected on a hill top overlooking the orchards. The design, as well as most of the workmanship, was his, even to the making of the handicraft furniture, the result being a model and cosy home.—Toronto Globe.

APPEARANCES.

Never be influenced by external appearance in forming your judgment of a person's worth. This is an important rule, for many a noble spirit is covered by habiliments of poverty, while not infrequently a showy exterior conceals a villain of the basest kind.

THE VISITORS STAYED.

Canadian Officer at Front Tells of Some Voluntary Prisoners.

The following very interesting letters have been received by The Toronto Star Weekly from a Canadian officer now at the front with the British reservists. The letters are addressed from "Signal Service R.E., 3rd Army Headquarters, British Expeditionary Force, France," and commence with a valuable hint to Canadians writing to friends at the front.

"In order to save delay in the delivery of letters I would suggest that letters intended for British reservists from Canada serving with the Imperial army be addressed: British Expeditionary Force; those for soldiers serving with the Canadian contingent, Canadian Expeditionary Force. Several of my letters have only been addressed Expeditionary Force, and these have been sent to Salisbury Plain and have been marked 'Not with the Canadian Forces; Try Imperial,' and this has caused six weeks' travel from time of leaving Toronto."

"The German artillery have kept us busy sending over Christmas boxes for the past few days, very little damage being done beyond the destroying of a few houses in a town that is already in ruins. The German gunners seem to like trying to demolish our hospitals. They have not been very successful up to the present, whether it is due to bad markmanship or Providence I cannot say.

"Aeroplanes have been very valuable during this campaign. If you are anywhere within range of German guns and one of their aeroplanes is about dropping lights or smoke signals, it is a safe bet to expect a few shells in that direction tout de suite.

"Our aviators have done splendid work. If a German gets over our lines and there are any of our fellows around he seldom gets back. Too much praise cannot be given to the men who command the air as they run enormous risks to carry out their duties. I saw a plane come down the other day. The airman was quite jovial, and later we found no less than 10 bullet holes in the machine. Some kind friend sent me a copy of your paper and I noticed that the 2nd Contingent are going in for aeroplanes. I was pleased to see this, as the aeroplane wireless has proved very valuable. Some of our fellows were much amused over the mobilization confab. It is not policy for me to add further.

"Christmas Day passed off very quietly in this district. On the night of the 24th heavy cannonading was resorted to by the enemy to no effect. On the 23rd the Germans tried to break through our lines on seven different occasions, but were repulsed by our infantry with the aid of the Indians. Two English soldiers left their trenches and walked over to the German trenches to wish the Germans a Merry Christmas. The trenches at this particular point were not more than 100 yards apart. They carried their message and returned to our lines without harm. Two of the German infantry came over to our trenches to return the compliment. These two must have been envious of the dinner Tommy was expecting to have, as they absolutely refused to return to their own lines. I saw these two men last night, and if looks count for anything they were not disappointed in their anticipation of Tommy's generosity. They, with many others, prefer to finish the war behind our lines, where they are assured of square treatment."

Conservation of Fish.

Dealers in fish find it difficult to dispose of the inferior varieties and the smaller grades of fish that are brought in by the fishermen. Consumers forget that little fish are taken in the nets as well as large ones and that all are delivered to the merchants. It follows, therefore, that, if there is only a small demand for the less choice fish, the dealers must obtain higher prices for the better grades. This is an aspect of the high cost of living which deserves the serious consideration of the public. Except for the slight extra labor involved in preparing small fish for the table, they are in no way inferior to the larger fish, their flavor and nutritive qualities being quite as good. Similarly, many of the so-called coarser grades of fish, when skillfully cooked, are not only very palatable, but are very nutritious.

Consequently, it will be seen that greater economy can easily be practiced in the use of this very important natural resource. The fisheries of Canada are both varied and extensive and should prove to be an important factor in reducing the cost of living. What is needed is more conservation in connection with them, or in other words, more careful and intelligent use.—A. D. in Conservation.

Province Planning Road Patrol.

If a certain plan now understood to be engaging the attention of the Ontario Government works out into practice, motorists traveling provincial highways next year will find along every five or ten mile strip a solitary road patrol engaged in keeping the roadbed in first-class shape. He will have with him a horse and cart and a complete one-man repair equipment, and will be held personally responsible for the maintenance of the stretch alloted to him. His home will be in the vicinity and his daily task will be to traverse the section, to make all minor repairs, and if flaws of great extent are discovered to communicate with the county road authorities to see that it be dealt with at once. No break will be allowed to gain headway.

If this plan is adopted it will likely be worked on the county road basis. Each county would then appoint its own patrols under the direction of the engineer, and allot the road length for them to guard. Thus in Ontario there would be nearly 200 men constantly employed after the manner of section workers on a railroad.

And no doubt the Berlin newspapers issued special editions to describe the heroic work of the German armies in capturing a number of French doctors, nurses and attendants.

AGRICULTURAL NEWS

Articles of Interest and Profit to the Farmer—Item for the Household, Garden and Field

PATRIOTISM AND PRODUCTION

Patriotism without production is an empty sound. If ever there was a time when by your deeds you are required to be known, it is now. Now, when the Empire is at war; now, when many of the regular channels of supply are closed; now, when men in millions have been summoned from the paths of industry to the inferno of destruction; now, when Britain is fighting for Belgium's fight to live; now, when the world's liberties are at stake; now, when Germany seeks to prostrate Britain even as she has prostrated Belgium; now, when Germany threatens the forty million people of England, Scotland, Ireland and Wales with starvation; now, when the enemy is bombarding peaceful towns and villages, slaughtering innocent and harmless women and children; now, when fertile fields and fruitful gardens of other lands are lying in waste and swollen with death; now, is the time when Canada is called upon to put forth her mightiest effort to help stem the tide of destruction, to aid the Empire and to profit herself.

In entering upon the campaign in which it is now engaged, the Department of Agriculture of the Dominion has entered upon a task that should do untold good. It is not that our farmers needed altogether to be prompted to benefit themselves, but that perhaps some of them do not entirely recognize the seriousness of the present and the more than probable critical conditions of the future. If the war were to end tomorrow, there would still be need for every effort in productiveness, for many years must elopse before the devastation that has been caused can be remedied or repaired. Unhappily the probabilities are that the giant conflict will continue for many months yet, in which case the mind of man cannot fathom or forsee the damage that will have been done to every form of industry. To agriculture in particular, by the waste of life, by the wrecking of property and by the spreading of desolation. It is in repairing the damage others cause that the farmers are called upon to aid. It is their mother country that cries to them.

The Agricultural Department is not alone holding conferences at many points in the country, but it is engaged, as will be seen by the announcement elsewhere, in distributing large quantities of literature telling how the farmer can best serve the interests of the empire, display his grateful sense of patriotism and bring profit to himself. In brief and explicit language that all who run may read and understand, is pointed out the needs of the situation and how those needs can be met. Above all, the advice is given to avoid waste. Everything can be utilized. Nothing need be thrown away as valueless. The economy of production is in saving.

The wisest can learn something by reading, and in the Bulletins and Reports prepared and written by experts and men of practical science, farmers will find hints, suggestions and information of the greatest possible value at this season, and such as will advantage both their land and themselves for all time. They will also aid them in that duty to the Empire which is such passing and instant importance that to shirk it is to be criminal. Copies of the publications of the Department of Agriculture, Ottawa. No postage is required on the application.

THE SWINE INDUSTRY

"Swine Husbandry in Canada" is the title of Bulletin No. 17 of the Live Stock Branch of the Department of Agriculture at Ottawa. This publication describes the bacon hog and discusses his breeding and rearing.

The breeds of swine reared in Canada are described and a history of each is given. An interesting section is devoted to the production of pork on Canadian farms. The information was evidently secured from practical farmers in cheese factory and in creamery districts and in sections where hogs are raised without dairy by-products.

The bulletin concludes with articles on hog cholera and tuberculosis, written by the Veterinary Director General and the Chief Meat Inspector, respectively. This bulletin is generously illustrated and printed in sepia brown ink. This is a valuable bulletin, and should be in hands of every farmer who devotes any time to the breeding of hogs. Copies of this bulletin are available to those who apply for them to the Publications Branch of the Department of Agriculture at Ottawa.

CHARCOAL BURNING.

Wood Now Destroyed Might Be Profitably Converted Into Charcoal.

In land clearing work, use may be made of wood taken therefrom for the production of charcoal. Canada has a constantly growing market for charcoal, and with good prices for the supply, it is advisable to increase the production. While the retort is, undoubtedly, the more economical means of producing charcoal, the advantage is offset by the fact that the wood which would be utilized in the production by pit burning would otherwise be waste material, and, consequently, the return from its use would offset the additional cost of production by the latter method.

For charcoal burning, it is essential to have a piece of land sheltered as much as possible from the wind. All kinds of hardwood not under two inches in diameter may be used. The wood should be sawn into two-foot lengths, and split, if required, into pieces not over four inches square. Sufficient wood should be provided for two pits; it is advisable to burn two pits at once, as during the charring process two pits can be attended to as readily as one, night and day attention being required.

Charcoal "pits" are usually built about twenty-one feet in diameter and about nine feet high. To commence the pile, a strong stake is driven into the ground, having about one foot exposed. Around this stake are placed upright small pieces of dry wood of equal length, and this is continued until a layer of wood is formed the size of the pit. A circle about one foot in diameter is built around the stake driven into the ground by placing the pieces of wood horizontally on the upright pieces, the end coming to the centre circle. This circle is thus built up to the required height, forming a chimney for the pit, by which it is fired. Outside this circular core the wood is piled on end and reclining inwards, layer upon layer, until the pit is of the size required. When the building is completed it is covered with newly-cut sod, the grassy side inwards, commencing at the base and working upwards, the sod overlapping a few inches, and the chimney being left open. Before covering the top part of the pit, all crevices between the wood should be packed with sod or sawdust to exclude the air. The pit is fired by dropping hot coals and small pieces of dry wood into the opening at the top; the opening is then covered with sod, which effectually closes in the pit, and the charring commences.

Constant attention is required day and night during the burning, especially during stormy weather, as the wind, by striking a particular part of the pit, causes that part of the pit to burn more rapidly and possibly fall in. Should this occur, the space should be at once filled in with rough logs and again covered with sod.

The time required for burning varies from seven to nine days, according to weather conditions, dry and mild weather requiring the longer period.

As the charring proceeds, the sod covering gradually disappears until only a slight covering of burnt earth remains. When the pits have burned out and become cool their size will be reduced to somewhat less than half of the original. The charcoal may be extracted by means of a fine-toothed rake, after which it should be stored in a dry place, care being taken to see that no live embers are left.—Conservation.

Atrocities In Canada.

Canadians will be interested in an article in the Cologne Gazette recently from an American correspondent, in which he describes the experience of a German-American writer, who has spent the greater part of his life in the States and is a man of education. In his opinion the position of the German-American in Canada is even worse than in the States. "One is horrified to learn that a Canadian mob has slaughtered Germans on the street for no other reason than that they were Germans. In Toronto the police pay daily domiciliary visits to houses of German-Canadians, and their mails are all opened. German newspapers, especially the New York Staats Zeitung, are prohibited, and any person found with a copy is liable to a penalty of five years' penal servitude. These enormities are not printed in the United States, but the correspondent of the Cologne Gazette knows all about them from other sources."

Lately, the correspondent adds, a meeting was dispersed by Canadian police, merely because some person recited a German poem, which happened to have some nasty verses about England.

An Excellent Scholar.

"John Wasyleczko, Kom from Galicia, born Kalash, Old 32 ers, merry wayf in Old Kontry, 3 ers in Canada. No soldier. Workin in Blackvel Co. Liav Niagara St. N. 81." This, on a leaf torn from a notebook, was brought by an alien, wishing to register at the office of the Registrar of Alien Enemies in Toronto the other day. John had been to a friend, an "excellent" English scholar, having been in this country for five or six years, who had written it out for him.

Dominions Aid Each Other.

Owing to the shortage of the wheat supply in New Zealand the Prime Minister recently arranged a transaction on behalf of his Government with the Prime Minister of Canada, who purchased for New Zealand 250,000 bushels of wheat in Canada. Wheat rather than flour was arranged for in order to keep men at work in the New Zealand mills.

To Organize Canadian Air Corps.

Capt. E. L. Janney, a Canadian aviator, who has made a name for himself both before and in the present war, has returned from the front. He had been doing scout duty for the British army, but is returning to organize a squadron of aeroplanes to be built, equipped and manned in Canada.

There is said to be enough food in Great Britain to last for at least two years. It would not last that long if some person we know lived in England.

A NOTRH DAKOTA GIRL RAISES PIGS

Pig growing as a business for women holds inviting possibilities. In North Dakota two young girls won prizes in the contests started by an experiment station. There is good money to be made in pork, but the young woman who decides to go into the work must know how to do it. She must figure out the feed bills very carefully, and get the most fat on her pigs at the least outlay. And she must be prepared to personally supervise the whole business. Pigs must be pretty well raised by hand if you are to get the whole profit out of each litter, though the really troublesome part of the work is only while they are young.

The pigs raised by the girls in North Dakota had the run of a blue grass pasture, and were kept healthy and clean. Women are good at raising live stock. It is a natural thing for a woman to care for young things, and to tend to the well being and comfort of animals. A woman will take far more trouble over a ailing animal than a man, and in raising hogs or sheep or any variety of cattle, it is the care that brings the profit.

A woman in New England plans to raise pigs, and also to do the curing and smoking of the hams and bacon on her place. She intends to do this in the most perfect manner, as it is done abroad, sparing no pains to produce an articles of the highest excellence, for which she expects to ask a stiff price from the best class of customers. There is little doubt of her success, for it is difficult to get the real, old-fashioned, slow-smoked ham of our forefathers' manufacture. People will be glad to pay extra for the delicious flavor.

Women who mean to take up some form of farm work will do better to specialize in such ways as these, feeling their way at first, getting their market, and not putting in too much at starting.

It is said that Roumania will enter the war in April. "Everybody's Doing It" should be a popular tune soon.

WHAT CATARRH IS

It has been said that every third person is troubled with catarrh in some form.

Science has shown that nasal catarrh indicates a weakened condition of the body; that the secretion of the mucous membranes are quickly affected, and local treatments in the form of snuffs and vapors do little, if any good.

To correct catarrh you should treat its cause by enriching your blood with the oil-food in Scott's Emulsion which is a medicinal food and a building-tonic, free from harmful drugs or opiates. Try it.

CARING FOR HORSES.

Greatest Pains Taken to Keep Mounts In Good Condition.

A very important part of the work done at Exhibition Park is that for which the Canadian Army Veterinary Corps is responsible, says The Toronto Star Weekly in a recent article. This is obvious when it is mentioned that there are considerably over twelve hundred horses at Exhibition Park. There are six hundred and forty horses in use by the mounted rifles, and the number employed by the fourth brigade is about the same. These horses have been shipped from practically every part of the province. The maximum price of one of these horses is about $175. Taken as a whole, the horses are of fairly good stamp for the purpose for which they have been bought. But they have been purchased under considerable difficulties. For one thing, the best horses available went with the first contingent. And, for another, the British Government have also been buying horses in Ontario, and, to a certain unavoidable extent, in competition with Sir Adam Beck and his buyers.

The officers of the Canadian Army Veterinary Corps who are at Exhibition Park are Capt. Campbell, the principal veterinary officer for the second division; Lieut. W. W. Forsyth, and Lieut. A. H. Hunter. There are nine men under them, each of whom has been previously used to horses. These have been given instruction by the officers in the use of drugs, etc.

Twelve hundred horses naturally require a good deal of medical and surgical care. So far, the luck has been very good with them. There have not been more than four deaths among them, each of which has been attributable to pneumonia. Every horse is vaccinated with the Strangles vaccine. There is an up-to-date pharmacy, with every possible appliance that can be required by sick equine nature. The electric sterilizer is in use and every possible care that veterinary science can suggest is observable throughout the work of the pharmacy. There are two hospital stables. One of these is for cases of accident. The other is for contagious cases. In the former there are at present eight accident cases. These cases are sometimes attributable to careless or inexperienced handling, but more often they are the result of the horse itself being green. In the hospital stable for contagious cases there are at present some twenty-eight or so sick horses. Influenza is the cause of most of the horses' presence in the isolation hospital. As everyone who knows anything of horseflesh is aware, that form of influenza which is known as "running influenza" is especially contagious. The hospital stables are all well whitewashed and thorough disinfected. And after each case leaves its stall, the stall is re-whitewashed and again thoroughly disenfected. Records are kept of the respiration, temperature, and pulse of every horse that comes into hospital. The Canadian Army Veterinary Corps has always one officer and some men constantly on duty both day and night.

The utmost care is taken to ensure that all the men employed in the isolation hospital pay the most scrupulous attention to cleanliness in every way. The equine patients are furnished with individual drinking cups. The isolation hospital is heated by two stoves, and the temperature of it is kept at between fifty and sixty degrees. The animals vary considerably as patients, some being much easier to treat than others. But on the whole they make much better patients than do human beings. It is interesting to watch the docile and placid manner in which they will submit to the strapping on of mustard plasters and other curative methods.

New Road Policy.

The principle that a stitch in time saves nine will henceforth dominate Ontario's roads policy. It is recognized that first-class roads quickly deteriorate through the neglect of minor flaws. In Europe the plan of a patrol has been tried and found to work well, and through the labor of solitary individuals with their picks and barrows the life of the highway has been doubled or tripled.

For some time the Ontario Government has been considering the problem of maintenance, and it is thought that when instrumental legislation pertaining to the $5,000,000 scheme is brought down in the Legislature, provision will be made for the unsatisfactory up-keep of roads. Several in attendance at the Canadian and International Roads Convention in late March, and it is likely that the benefit of their advice will be secured before the Government adopts any prescribed methods. The problem in all its aspects will be discussed on that occasion by experts.

Samoa Trade To Canada.

The capture of Samoa, by the troops of the Australian Commonwealth and the Dominion of New Zealand, has already resulted in quick action by antipodean firms with a view to gathering in the rich trade of the captured territory.

The British steamer Wyandotte sailed recently from Brisbane for Vancouver, via Pago-Pago, Samoa, where she will load rubber and cocoa for Vancouver. From Vancouver the steamer, which has been here before on the Canadian-Australian route, will proceed to San Francisco on her return voyage to Australia and New Zealand. The Canadian-Australian line has already opened an agency in the captured German island.

HE WANTED A BOY BUT NOT ANOTHER'S

Weehawkan Youth's Joy Turned to Rag When He Found Infant He Yearned For Was Adopted, Police Wouldn't Take it so Wife Who Plotted to Keep Husband's Love Asks Real Mother To Take Baby Back

(New York Times)

When young Charles Kirk, who, though only 21, has been married for fourteen months, got home from his work as foreman of riveters in Tietjen & Lang's dry dock in Hoboken, on Wednesday evening, he found his household at 23 Chestnut Street, Weehawken, in charge of his young sister-in-law, Miss Dorothy Wrenn.

"It's a boy!" she exclaimed happily as she kissed him in welcome. "Now, don't you excite Anna. You can go up and stay for just a minute. Remember, now!"

Kirk fairly bounded up the stairs. The one thing that he had wanted to make his new life complete was a son and heir. Mrs. Anna Kirk would not let him coddle the infant as he wanted to, but Kirk got a glimpse of a small head on her bosom, and then, forced to leave them, set out through Weehawken to tell his friends the good news.

It was the greatest night of his life, he told them, and among the first he notified of his good fortune was Mrs. William Verdon, wife of the Republican leader of Hoboken, and his aunt. Mrs. Verdon congratulated him roundly, and Kirk, hurrying home, insisted on one more peek at his son before he retired for the night.

Thursday was just as bad. He could not get the infant out of his head. Neither, so it appeared, could Mrs. Verdon. Bright and early, though not so early but what Kirk had left for work, she hurried to his home. She must see the baby at once. She just wouldn't be put off. She guessed she knew how to handle an infant without hurting it, so at last she had her way. She looked long at the sturdy limbs and the fairly thick crop of hair which covered the small boy's head and then she looked at Mrs. Kirk.

"Hum!" she exclaimed. "He's amazingly well developed and he does not favor either you or Charlie, does he?"

It certainly was true that the baby didn't look like either Mr. or Mrs. Kirk, and it was equally true that his development was startling for a day-old babe. And then, amid tears and between sobs, the whole story came out.

"Charlie wanted a baby so badly", sobbed little Mrs. Anna Kirk. "He couldn't think of anything but a boy to grow up and be a comrade to him. He wanted to teach his son to play ball and swim. He was just crazy about a son, and I was afraid he wo-wouldn't l-l-love me any more and, boo-hoo, I just got a baby for him. So there."

Mrs. Verdon petted the unhappy girl and learned that she had seen in a New York newspaper the advertisement of a woman named Nelson in East 125th Street who had an infant boy for adoption. She arranged to take the child and then intimated to Charles that his wish was about to be fulfilled. After he left for work Wednesday, she hurried over and got the baby, hurried back and arranged things with her sister and then awaited Charle's return. What fears she had were dispelled the instant she saw him look at the baby.

"He never would have guessed it was five weeks old," she pouted. "No man would, and I wouldn't let him hold the baby or get too near it. Oh, everything would have been all right, and now he'll never love me any more."

So she melted into tears again, but finally Mrs. Verdon persuaded her to make a full confession to Charles, and when he returned from work Thursday Charles was informed of the whole thing. He stopped only long enough to throw some wraps about the baby, and then he hustled with it to the Weehawken police station, where he dropped his bundle on the desk before Capt. Charles Hessner and exclaimed:

"But you can't turn this station into an orphan asylum", remonstrated the Captain when he had heard the story, so Kirk took the baby home, that is why he took half a day off Friday, and, with his wife, returned the infant to Mrs. Nelson.

Capt. Hessner has the reserves ready lest some misguided friend inquires of Kirk to-day: "Well, how's the kid"? Hessner just knows there is going to be a fightt.

CANADA'S NEWEST KNIGHT.

Sir George Perley Has Wealth, Dignity and Culture.

A few years ago every bright child in Canada could rattle off the list of titled Canadians, but how many men on the street can do it now? Not long ago a man who rose to be chief whip of his party at Ottawa, a Dominion Cabinet Minister, and then Canadian Commissioner in London, with a "Sir" to his name, had his biography, general appearance, and characteristics inscribed in the memory of just about everybody in the country. But Canadian affairs and Canadian titles have grown and multiplied exceedingly and so the mass of the electorate know little about Sir George Halsey Perley, who has risen to all the points of eminence just enumerated, the knighthood—a K.C.M.G.—being a New Year's honor, says The Toronto Star Weekly.

Sir George Perley is one of the few business men of large wealth who have become prominent in Canadian politics. He is one of Ottawa's rich men—a big lumberman. He was born in the United States — at Lebanon, New Hampshire, in 1857. But he was brought to Canada in infancy and became a naturalized British subject in 1885, his father having previously "taken out papers" and represented Ottawa in Parliament for some time. Mr. Perley attended Harvard University, taking an arts course. After some years of travel he returned to Ottawa. His father had become one of the largest lumbermen of that district, and Mr. Perley himself became a millionaire and a prominent society man.

Now what influenced this millionaire to enter politics? In the first place they say he likes to do his bit of work for the general good. For example, he has served as a church warden in the Anglican Church and as a delegate to the Synod. He was chairman of the relief fund in 1897 when a forest fire in Casselman, east of Ottawa, did a lot of damage. He was chairman of the relief fund when in 1900 Hull was devastated by fire.

Anyway, in the latter year he ran for the Dominion House as candidate for Russell County, but was defeated. In a bye-election in 1902 he ran again, for the County of Argenteuil, Quebec. He was elected and he has represented that constituency ever since. He was made Chief Whip of the Conservative party in 1911, and in that capacity displayed tact and ability. Premier Borden soon recognized him as Cabinet material, or at least a man who must be given important recognition. It was expected he would be made Minister of Finance, but instead he was taken into the Cabinet as a Minister without portfolio. But he was sworn in right after the Premier, and through this right of seniority has at times been Acting Premier. After Lord Strathcona's death Mr. Perley went to London as Acting Canadian Commissioner, but as he is still acting and as he has just been knighted, it would seem reasonable to suppose that he will continue to act in that high capacity.

Sir George, personally, is described as being cultured, intellectual, pleasant, but not a great "mixer," very keen, very orderly, very sound in judgment, and a real philanthropist.

Sir George was married in 1884 to Miss Annie Bowlby, daughter of W. H. Bowlby, K. C., of Berlin, Ont. Mrs. Perley died, and in 1913 he married Miss Milly White, one of Ottawa's social leaders, and daughter of the late Sir Thomas White.

Big Inrush Expected.

Canadian railway officials are naturally looking forward to a desirable increase in traffic when the immigration movement, which is sure to follow the close of the war, gets under way. Canada's need is for tillers of the soil, and every effort will be made to attract the farming class.

Information received at Grand Trunk Pacific headquarters at Montreal recently from the British Columbia Government shows that the coast province has made preparations to welcome thousands of cultivators. Though final figures for 1914 demonstrate that 1,963 land pre-emptions were taken up in the newly opened districts of the province during the year. This figure will show a large increase, it is expected, before 1915 clores, for the Government states that there are about 1,500,000 acres of surveyed land ready for the settler along the line of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway, and tracts of 160 acres can be taken possession of on payment of a record fee of 2$.

Of the surveyed lands available to settlers, there are 146,913 acres in the Cassiar land district, with 443,000 acres in the coast district. In the Cariboo district the available surveyed lands total 789,752 acres, the greater portion of which is along the line of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway, or tributary to the railway, the eastern half of the railway through the province being within the confines of the Cariboo district.

Lost the Bucket.

There is a good story in The Nation about one of the slighter accidents of the fleets. The other day the commander of a destroyer, rolling heavily in a gale, and with her engines disabled, tried to lessen the strain by ladling out oil. The seaman engaged in this work was washed overboard, and washed back again by a returning wave. He picked himself up, saluted his officer, and said: "Very sorry, sir; lost the bucket!"

Muskrat Farming.

The muskrat farming industry which has proven so successful abroad might well be developed in Canada, says Conservation. The country possesses great areas of marsh land, at present of little direct value, which might be made to produce considerable revenues. Muskrat fur is steadily growing in favor. The aggregate offering on the London market in March, 1914, exclusive of the Hudson Bay Co.'s sales, was 4,646,500 skins. While this figure probably shows an accumulation from the previous year, still the price quoted for April was 50 cents a skin. The demand for muskrat meat would be confined almost solely to the Indians unless it were found possible to utilize it as a flesh diet for other fur-bearers that are being farmed. Such an undertaking should prove of special value to the Indian and other trappers who carry on their work in the more remote portions of the country. At the same time, many areas of marsh land in the settled sections which now are of little or no use might easily be made to yield considerable financial returns.

Forty-Four Strikes In 1914.

There were only 44 strikes and lockouts in Canada during 1914, as compared with 113 for the year before. The number of workers affected was 8,678, as compared with 39,536 during 1913. The number of working days lost was 430,429, which was 856,249 less than the year previous.

Of the 40 disputes which commenced last year 6 were in Quebec, 20 in Ontario, 8 in the west, and 6 in the Maritime Provinces. At the close of the year only 4 disputes were in existence and affected only 155 employes.

War Victim Turns Nurse.

Her husband and two brothers having been killed in the war, four other brothers having gone to the firing line, and her only other brother training with the London Territorials, before going to the trenches, Mrs. Stewart G. Holliday has left Montreal for her old home in England. With her is little Peter, her three-year-old, fatherless boy. She said, as she took the train, that she had a nurse's certificate and would leave little "Pete" with her parents and join one of the English hospitals as a nurse if she could.

He Certainly Helps.

"Colonel," asked the beautiful girl, "when was the most trying moment of your life?"

"It was when I went to my wife's father for the purpose of asking him to let me have her. He was very deaf, and I had to explain the matter before twenty clerks."—Chicago Record-Herald.

Grand Trunk News Bureau

INDUSTRIAL AND AGRICULTURAL DEVELOPMENT IN WESTERN CANADA.

Big Increases in Acreage in Wainwright District.

Wainwright, Alta., Feb.—In 1910 the total wheat shipped from Wainwright was 2 carloads. Last year two carloads a day were shipped from the private loading platforms alone for six weeks running. Somewhere around 30 times the total shipment of 1910. And this did not include the wheat shipped from the elevator. The total wheat shipment in 1913 was estimated at 710,000 bushels. The acreage for this year will show a tremendous increase and 1915 will go down into history as the biggest agricultural year Wainwright ever had.

Many New Settlers For Central British Columbia.

Vanderhoof, B.C. Feb—In spite of the protraction of the war evidences of sound internal development of the rich valleys opened up by the Grand Trunk Pacific in Central British Columbia are not lacking. The lumber and planing mills of The Vanderhoof Floor Company, Limited, will begin running on full time on March 10th next, the installation of the machiney being practically completed at this date. Work on the company's electric light plant and water system, which was begun last fall is being pushed rapidly to completion and it is now expected that a majority of the buildings in Vanderhool will have electric light and running water before the end of April.

Great interest is being indicated in farming lands in the Nechako Valley, around Vanderhoof. Trains from the east are bringing in new families almost daily. There are millions of acres of good land available for preemption in Central British Columbia, near the Grand Trunk Pacific line, according to figures recently announced by the Hon. W. J. Bowser, Attorney General of British Columbia.

Rivalry for Hockey Honors Very Keen

Melville, Sask. Feb—Melville has sprung into sudden prominence by the fact that its hockey team this year is champion of the Saskatchewan Hockey League, and has come out on top of the strong teams entered by Regina and Mooseaw, much older and larger Cities. This means that Melville this year will defend against all comers the Allan Cup, emblem of amateur Hockey Championship of Canada.

When Regina took this cup last year from the Monarchs of Winnipeg, it caused a great sensation, for Winnipeg had come to believe that the hockey played in its fast City League could not be beaten by amateurs in Canada. The Monarchs, the team who lost it to Regina last year, will attempt to recover it this season, as they head the Winnipeg City League. Another challenge has come from Victoria, B.C. and Melville is hoping to hear of some Eastern challenges also.

The interest aroused in the Hockey League this year has been intense, and for almost every game at Melville, Regina and Moose Jaw the Grand Trunk Pacific has had to operate special trains to accommodate the large number of supporters from different towns. Other towns East and West along the G.T.P. have given loyal support to Melville, anxious to have it demonstrated that growing cities along the new line of Railway are becoming real rivals of the capital.

Out in California a woman is suing her husband, a deaf mute, for divorce, on the ground of abusive language. What next!

Busy Red Cross Supply Committee

A visitor at the Red Cross Supply Committee Rooms on Saturday morning, found the ladies very busy indeed, stitching socks together in pairs, putting them up in bundles of half dozen each, and packing away in boxes, to be sent away in the course of a few days. The response has been splendid, but still the cry goes out for more socks.

Some seventeen knitting circles, of fifteen members each, have been formed. These are all knitting socks at the present time.

The regular meeting of the Red Cross Supply Committee is called for Tuesday evening, March 2nd, to be held in the Liberal Association rooms (old Y.M.C.A.) at eight o'clock. All the convenors of the different circles are especially asked to attend.

A DISGRACEFUL ORGY

(From Judge)

They called it a "temperance banquet"—but who was deceived?

Just because only "soft drinks" were supposed to be served, they had the assurance to designate it thus!

Cravens!

What did they know about machinery?

The onions were pickled.

The potatoes were stewed to the eyes.

The coffee was in its cups.

The candles were all lit up.

The mince pie was groggy.

Each bread plate had a bun on.

Every steel knife had an edge.

The cracked tumbler had had one drop too much before it was brought in.

The saltcellars were full

The blooms with which the table was decorated had been out all night.

And the vinegar—oh, mother!

In fact, all the food and drink was on the downward road.

The Women of the World Choose

Gossard CORSETS

They Lace in Front

And the reason for their choice is completely described in the sentence which follows:

"Figure improvement means health, and health always means beauty. The Gossard Corset which laces in front assures an immediate figure improvement with its attendant joys—health, beauty & comfort."

At this store, corsets receive more than the usual attention because our experience proves to us that corsets are the foundation of style. They help make the suit, gown and dress. At this time, when many women are questioning much of the style news published, we believe the

of Authoritative Corset Styles for Spring 1915

issued by The H. W. Gossard Co. through this store is of the most vital interest. During the next two weeks the new Spring models will be shown in our corset department, and we promise to corset you in the model, material and design of your liking at $2.00, $3.50, $5.00, up to $25.00. A fitting or visit to our department does not obligate you. We welcome your visit.

Canadian Officer Killed in France

Private Nugent Injured--No Particulars Given

TORONTO, Mar. 1.—(Special.)—Confirmation of the reports that the First Canadian Expeditionary Force has been under fire was conveyed in an official despatch from Ottawa yesterday, giving a list of casualties received there. These include Lieut. D. P. Bell-Irving of Vancouver of the 2nd Field Company, Divisional Engineers, who was killed and Pte. A. S. Nugent of Toronto, who was wounded. The Engineers company mentioned is commanded by Capt. Thos. Craick Irving, Toronto, and is composed entirely of Toronto men.

Pte. Nugent is a member of the Third Infantry Battalion of the force, which includes men of the Governor-General's Body Guard, the Queen's Own Rifles and the Royal Grenadiers, Toronto.

Lieut. Bell-Irving is the first officer of the main Canadian Expeditionary Force to be killed in action. Several officers of the Princess Patricia's Regiment have been killed.

The Official List

The Ottawa despatch reads:

KILLED

February 18—No. 697, Private John Murdock, P.P.C.L.I., at La Brasserie. Next of kin, J. Murdock, 6 Comiston Gardens, Edinburgh, Scotland.

Feb. 19—No. 1,163, Private A. F. Cameron, P.P.C.L.I., at La Brasserie. Next of kin, Mr. T. L. Cameron, St. Lambert, Montreal, Que.

WOUNDED

Wounded slightly—No. 198, Private George Austin, P.P.C.L.I. Next of kin Alice Austin, 28 Curzon street, Reading, Eng.

Feb. 19—No. 551, Lloyd Salsbury, P.P.C.L.I. Next of kin, J. A. Salsbury, Reynoldston, Ont.

Ottawa Still Doubts

A special despatch from Ottawa says:

It is worth noting that 150 at least of the reinforcements for the Princess Patricias went across from Salisbury from the regular Canadian contingent. It may be that the names in the casualty list now given out as belonging to the Canadian division are men who joined the Princess Pats as reinforcements. On the lists as given out from here they appear as belonging to the original corps, according to the only rolls now available at the Militia Department. The authorities, however, seem to think that the report of part of the main contingent having been in action already is incorrect.

Was From The West

"Bill, Harry and myself are well. Not even scratched; Peter Bell-Irving killed," is the message received yesterday by Mr. T. C. Irving of Bradstreet's Limited, from his son Capt. Thomas Craick Irving of the First contingent. The other men mentioned in the communication, which apparently passed through official hands, are his sons and a distant relative. Lieut Bell-Irving is also a relative. He was very well known on the Pacific Coast and was identified with shipping interests in Vancouver and Victoria.

Toronto Man Wounded

Pte. A. G. Nugent is a brother of W. E. Nugent, 1,975 Queen street east. He is 35 years of age and enlisted with the Grenadiers. He is a South African veteran and worked with Purdy-Mansell Limited. The family were notified from the Department of Militia at Ottawa on Friday that he had been wounded in the thigh. The message did not state how serious the wound was.

HOW THE CANADIANS TRIMMED THE KAISER

Come all you good Canadians, to you I will relate,
Unto you all I'll tell the way the Kaiser met his fate;
Just how we took away his crown and put him on the bum—
'Twas when we marched from Valcartier and went to Belgium.

We'd plenty of socks and blankets, and plenty good to eat;
Our easy little outfit was very hard to beat,
We answered to the bugle call; we answered to the drum;
And marched away from Valcartier and went to Belgium.

We fired some rounds of marmalade and doughnuts hard as rocks;
We wadded them down with blankets and with wristbands and with socks.
We fired a home-made custard pie—the dread soft-nosed dum-dum;
We brought them from Valcartier to use in Belgium.

The enemy were starving, and they were filled with woe;
We put canned salmon in our guns and fired it at the foe;
The Huns came in to breakfast, by millions did they come
To meet the boys from Valcartier who went to Belgium.

The Germans, they surrendered; their eyes were filled with tears—
They had'nt had so much to eat in many, many years.
They asked us in amazement: "Where do you boys come from?"
We said: "We came from Valcartier to visit Belgium."

Oh, with our stock of doughnuts, our pumpkin pies and jam,
Our store of good canned salmon, our bread and cheese and ham,
We came across from Canada and we sure made things hum,
For we captured half of Europe, as well as Belgium.

Mystery Box Is Finally Found

Contains Sealed Prophecies of the Alleged Second Coming of Christ

LONDON, March 1.—The "sealed prophecies" of the late Mrs. Joanna Southcott, relating to the second coming of Christ, which have excited curiosity for the last one hundred years, have been discovered—or at least the box reputed to contain them has, for it has never been opened.

It is in the possession of a descendant of one of Mrs. Southcott's "Believers", though she is not a "Believer" herself.

Joanna Southcott, the daughter of a Devon farmer, was born in 1750. She claimed that the Spirit of Truth visited her in 1792 and that she would give birth to Shiloh, the second incarnation of Christ. She died without doing so. Newspapers of the period contained columns of controversial matter about her claims, both for and against.

She died in 1814, and enormous precautions were taken to prevent a riot at her funeral. She left a box of revelations, which was not to be opened until it was "sent for by the bishops suddenly and unaware in a time of a national danger." The modern "Believers" conceived the idea that it was to be opened on January 12, 1915. It was not. Nothing was heard of it. Miss Alice Seymour, of Crapstone, Dartmoor, the most prominent of the "Believers", then announced that the date was unauthorized that the box would not be opened until sent for by the bishops, and that although it was in England, she had promised not to reveal its location.

As to that point there need no longer be any mystery. The box is in the possesion of Mrs. S. L. Kenyon, of Edgware-road, London. Its exact location she declines to state. It has never been opened. Its identity is beyond dispute.

IT COST HIS ROLL TO SEE THE TOWN

MONTREAL, March 1.—"How kind these mortals be", thought a farmer visitor to the city on Friday, as he sat in a room on East Dorchester street, kept one hand on a roll of $400 as a precautionary measure and used the other to frequently place a glass to his lips.

Albert Lafrance and Maria McKeown, his host and hostess, beamed on him, and replenished the glass when ever it became empty. The one from "down" home on the farm suddenly lost consciousness, and when he woke up in the street he had a headache—but no money.

SEIZURE OF ALL VESSELS WILL BE BRITAIN'S REPLY

Ships Which Attempt to Break Through Cordon of The Allied Fleets Will Not Necessarily be Declared Forfeit, Asquith's Historic Words

"The British and French Governments will, therefore, hold themselves free to detain and take into port ships carrying goods of presumed enemy destination, ownership or origin. It is not intended to confiscate such vessels or cargoes unless they would otherwise be liable to confiscation. Vessels with cargoes which have sailed before this date will not be affected. That is our reply. (Loud cheers).

"I may say that the suggestion which we see put forward from German quarters that we rejected certain proposals or suggestions made to Britain and Germany by the United States is untrue. All we have stated to the United States so far is that we have taken them into careful consideration in consultation with our allies"—Premier Asquith.

TERRIFIC GALES HALT ALLIES IN DARDANELLES

Dreadnought Queen Elizabeth Demolishes Light-house South of Fort Kilid Bahr on European Side—Athens Report Says Turks Sink Two Mine-sweepers

LONDON, March 2.—(Special)—Terrific gales, rendering impossible long-range firing and aerial observation, again have caused a cessation in the bombardment of the Dardanelles.

Halt was called on the operations of the allied fleet when they were 16 miles up the channel, and when the mammoth new Dreadnought, Queen Elizabeth, was hurling 1,950-pound projectiles into Fort Kilid Bahr, on the European side. A lighthouse south of the fort was demolished by one of the last shells fired before operations ceased.

The delay in the activities of the fleet was announced by the Press Bureau for the Admiralty last night. The announcement reads:

"Operations in the Dardanelles have again been delayed by unfavorable weather. A strong northeasterly gale is blowing, and the rain and mist is so heavy that long-range firing and aeroplane observation would be rendered difficult."

Further announcement by the Admiralty says that one marine was killed and three wounded on the battle-cruiser Vengeance during Friday's bombardment.

A despatch from Athens says that Turkish destroyers are reported from Tenedos to have attacked the Anglo-French mine-sweepers in the Dardanells during last night, sinking two of them.

The German newspapers now realize that important events are occurring around Constantinople, according to telegrams received in Copenhagen.

The Daily News publishes a despatch from Athens that Turkish forces are hurriedly concentrating on the Asiatic side of the Dardanelles, under Essad Pasha, the defender of Janina.

According to The London Daily Mail's Athens correspondent, Fort Dardanus, twelve miles up the Dardanelles, on the Asiatic side, has been silenced by the allied fleet.

The correspondent adds that diplomatic reports from Constantinople state that serious riots there were suppressed after many arrests had been made.

Child Burned To Death

Boy of Five Carried Baby of One Year Old to Place of Safety

BROCKVILLE, March 1.—Catharine Anthony, aged two and one-half years, daughter of Clarence Anthbny, of the township of Oxford, was burned to death in a fire which destroyed the Anthony dwelling. Mrs. Anthony went on a visit to a neighbor, leaving three children, James, aged five; Catharine, and Mary, a babe of one year.

Mrs. Anthony had almost reached her destination, when, on looking back, she discovered the place on fire. Before she could return the entire dwelling was a mass of flames, and several neighbors had arrived on the scene. James and the baby were safe outside, but sister Catharine had been left a prey to the flames. The boy's story to his mother was that they heard something fall upstairs and later fire and smoke came through the ceiling. He carried the baby to safety, but Catharine refused to follow.

Ship Adrift in Mid-Atlantic

Unidentified Liner Has Lost Her Propellers

NEW YORK, March 1.—An unidentified steamship is drifting with all propeller blades shorn off, near the middle of the Atlantic, according to the log of the American line steamer New York, which reached here today from Liverpool.

The New York was spoken by wireless on last Thursday by the British steamer Milwaukee, bound from Canadian ports for Liverpool. The Milwaukee advised the New York of the drifting steamer's plight and fixed her location as latitude 41, longitude 45.20. The name of the steamship was given as the Tritonian in the wireless message, but maritime records here failed to disclose any such name.

According to the wireless message, the Tritonian requested a tow and added that except for the loses of her propeller blades all was well aboard.

ENEMY'S TACTICS IN YPRES HAVE BEEN DECISIVELY CHECKED

Early Monday Morning Attack on Allies' Lines Repulsed—Princess Patricia's Canadian Light Infantry Captured German Trenches With Great Dash

(Canadian Press Special)

LONDON, March 2.—A report from the headquarters of Sir John French which was given out today by the Official Information Bureau, says, the enemy's activities in the neighbourhood of Ypres, reported in the last communiques have been checked. During the last three nights patrols which have been active in front of our trenches have found that the enemy has not ventured to leave his lines.

"Early Monday morning an attack, preceded by a heavy bombardment, was made on a portion of our line, but was successfully repulsed. On our left a party of the Princess Patricias Canadian Light Infantry captured some German trenches with great dash. After killing eleven occupants and driving off the remainder, they succeeded in blowing up the trench. Our losses were trifling."

On our right, near La Bassee, we gained ground steadily by skillful trench work and in this zone we obtained complete mastery over our enemy's snipers, and in consequence our casualties were greatly reduced.

On several positions along our front our artillery forced the enemy's batteries to change position and increased the ascendancy over the opposing guns which has been observable for some time past.

TRENCHES CAPTURED AND THREE HUNDRED METRES OF GROUND

(Canadian Press Special)

PARIS, March 2.—The official statement this afternoon says: Between the sea and the Aisne the enemy attacked only to the southeast of Stelce, where he was repulsed by the British. Rheims was again bombarded. Our progress continued between Perthes and Beause Jour. Confirmation has been received that the counter attacks by the Prussian Guards during Sunday cost them very heavy losses. In the Vosges we have captured trenches and gained three hundred metres of ground.

Princess Patricias In Gallant Work

LONDON, March 1.—Special—Premier Asquith paid a high tribute to the Princess Patricia's Canadian Light Infantry in the course of his speech in the House of Commons this afternoon. He said: "Our own Dominions and own great dependency of India have sent us a splendid contribution of men, a large number of whom are already at the front, and very soon the whole of them will be in the fighting line in one of the actual theatres of the war. We hear to-day that the Princess Patricia's Regiment have been doing during the last few days a most gallant and efficient work. The territorial divisions are now fully trained and capable of confronting any troops in the world, and the new army, which lately has been under the critical scrutiny of skilled observers, is fast realizing all our most sanguine hopes."

CARRIE DAVIES' FUTURE

Wants to Work Hard and go and See Her Mother

TORONTO, Mar. 2.—(Special.)—A fund of $800, that is expected to reach $1,500 was collected by the Bedfordshire Association for Carrie Davies, who has been acquitted on the charge of murdering C. A. Massey. Over 2,000 sympathizers contributed. Discussing her future yesterday, Miss Davies, who is staying with her sister, Mrs. Fairchild, in Morley avenue, said her one anxiety was to be at work that she could forget it all and be able to go home to England and see her mother.

SHORKEY'S CASE STANDS

SARNIA, Mar. 2.—(Special.)—Sidney Shorkey, who is charged with the murder of Archie Altman, a Walpole Island Indian, waived examination in the Port Huron Court, and was bound over to the Circuit Court for trial. When arraigned before Judge Law this morning a plea of not guilty was entered. It is probable that his trial will not be called until the April term of court. Judge Law fixed Shorkey's bail at $5,000, and it is understood that the owners of Russell Island will become bondsmen, and that the required bond will be furnished today or tomorrow.

EXCESS NOTE ISSUE WILL BE VALID

OTTAWA, March 2.—Special—During the parliamentary recess the Minister of Finance under authority of several orders-in-council issued Dominion notes in excess of the limitation imposed by the Dominion Notes Act to the extent of $26,000,000, out of which a loan of $10,000,000 was made to the Canadian Northern, and a loan of $6,000,000 to the Grand Trunk Pacific.

Mr. White gave notice today of proposed legislation to confirm and validate the excess issue and the loans.

Passengers Nervous In Submarine Zone

Some on American Liner St. Louis Stayed up all Night off Irish Coast

LONDON, March 2.—Special—Carrying nearly 500 passengers, a goodly portion of whim were Canadians, who had been unable to sail from Halifax, the American liner St. Louis berthed at Liverpool this morning flying the Stars and Stripes. As the boat was the first to leave New York for England since the declaration of Germany's policy of blockading these shores, coupled with the fact that nearly 90 per cent. of those on board were British subjects, no small amount of anxiety was felt regarding her passage. As a precautionary measure, however, these Britons had chosen to sail under the American flag and the voyage was accomplished without incident. Some nervousness was felt by the passengers at first, said H. W. Peet, editor of Sell's World's Press, who was returning from Montreal. It became less marked as they progressed, altbough a few people insisted on remaining on deck the whole of Saturday night when the Irish coast and the possible submarine zone was reached. The St. Louis also carried a heavy cargo and mail of 6000 bags.

Took Life With Carbolic Acid

Mary Leathwood Left Note Disposing of Her Goods

PORT HOPE, March. 1.—Mary Leathford, a Barnado Home girl aged twenty years, employed as a domestic at the home of Mr. John Ferguson, Lakeshore Road, committed suicide at an early hour this morning by taking carbolic acid. Deceased was about as usual yesterday and appeared quite cheery. About three o'clock this morning Mrs. Ferguson heard a gurgling sound emenating from the girl's bedroom and rushing in found the unfortunate girl dying with the empty bottle on the bed. Dr. Forrest was called but the girl was beyond medical aid. Coroner Aldrich decided an inquest unnecessary.

No reason can be given for this rash act, as the girl has always appeared in the best of spirits. That the act was premeditated was shown by a note disposing of her money and wearing apparel.

(Canadian Press Special)

LEMBERG, March 2.—It is stated here that when the Austrians recaptured Stanislau they executed two hundred civilians for alleged offences against the state.

"Our beloved East Prussia is free from the enemy," the Kaiser writes. Perhaps the message is but a "scrap of paper."

WALKED AISLE OF CATHEDRAL WITH BOMB IN EACH HAND

(Canadian Press Special)

NEW YORK, March 2.—The police this morning arrested Frank Abarno as he was walking up the north aisle of St. Patrick's Cathedral carrying two bombs and a lighted cigar. Later they arrested Charles Carbone, charged with making bombs. The police say Abarno attempted to wreck the Cathedral last year by similar means and that he and Carbone are members of a band of anarchists whose plots have been thoroughly ferreted out by detectives who gained admission to their membership. The police also say they have nipped in the bud a plot to assassinate with bombs John D. Rockefeller and his son, Andrew Carnegie, Cornelius Vanderbilt and other wealthy men, and to inaugurate a reign of terror during which banks would be raided and anarchists armed with rifles and shot guns would start robbing and shooting all over the city.

ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND TURKS POSTED ALONG SEA OF MARMORA

(Canadian Press Special)

PARIS, March 2.—A Havas Agency despatch from Athens says: A Russian admiral, travelling through Bulgaria and Greece, has joined the allied fleet in the Dardanelles to attend a council of admirals. One hundred thousand Turks have been posted along the sea of Marmora.

A note issued by the War Office says the exploits of the French aviators in the past ten days have been brilliant, while the German aerial forces have been comparatively inactive. The military value of Zeppelins is declared to be slight. The note tells of the destruction of four dirigibles. Bulgaria has protested to the Austrian, Russian and Servian governments against the placing of mines in the Danube.

Tummonds is described as being 40 years of age, five feet, eight inches in height, medium build, very white hair, scar on end of upper lip. He was dressed when last seen in a dark felt hat and dark overcoat. He is a jeweler and may be found going from house to house soliciting work.

ACID STOMACHS ARE DANGEROUS

Common Sense Advice by a Distinguished Specialist.

"Acid" stomachs are dangerous because acid irritates and inflames the delicate lining of the stomach, thus hindering and preventing the proper action of the stomach, and leading to probably nine-tenths of the cases of stomach trouble from which people suffer. Ordinary medicines and medical treatments are useless in such cases, for they leave the source of the trouble, the acid in the stomach, as dangerous as ever. The acid must be neutralised, and its formation prevented, and the best thing for this purpose is a teaspoonful of bisurated magnesia a simple antacid, taken in a little warm or cold water after eating, which not only neutralizes the acid but also prevents the fermentation from which acidity is developed. Foods which ordinarily cause distress may be eaten with impunity if the meal is followed with a little bisurated magnesia, which can be obtained from any druggist, and should always be kept handy.

NEW ENGLISH RIFLE

General Hughes Receives Sample Of Latest Type

OTTAWA, Mar. 1.—A sample of a new English rifle has been received by the Minister of Militia. The weapon, which has been approved by the War Office, is a clip-loaded, like the Ross, but has the turn-bolt, as used in the Lee-Enfield. It is of 2.76 calibre.

In the new pattern, the sights are in pattern and location similar in certain respects to the sights of the Ross rifle. The sight has, for example, been moved from the middle of the gun, back close to the eye. As in the Canadian weapon, it is a dual sight, arranged for both target and battle shooting, but it is a peep sight in each case. In the Canadian rifle the target sight only is a peep sight, the battle sight being open for quick adjustment. The stock of the weapon is of one continuous piece, as in the Canadian rifle.

THE DACIA WAS INSURED

NEW YORK Mar. 1.—E. N. Breitung who bought the Dacia from the Hamburg-American line, said last night at the St. Regis that he was not worried because the vessel had been captured and that he did not expect to lose any money.

"All the questions that could come up concerning the Dacia were looked into by good lawyers before the ship was purchased and I believe that I am protected. The ship is insured in a British company, as a matter of fact, and insured against capture.

"The insurance company satisfied itself that the ship was not open to seizure and condemnation before it issued the policy. I did not ask the United States Government to insure the ship because I did not wish to embarrass it. In fact, I informed the State Department before I had bought the ship that I would keep out of the deal if there was any danger that it might embarass the Government. I was assured that the Government approved of it before I went into it."

Seventy-five per cent. of rheumatics are cured and ninety per cent benefited. Reached direct by the Grand Trunk Railway System.

A GRUESOME DISCOVERY

WINDSOR, March 2.—Special—Encased in a black cotton stocking, the entire lower portion of a woman's leg was found this afternoon lying on the public highway a short distance from the village of Maidstone Cross. The gruesome discovery was made by two boys driving into town from Woodslee.

Crown Attorney Rodd is inclined to believe that the limb is a portion of a body stolen from a graveyard in the vicinity of Woodslee, and which it is thought was to have been sold to some Michigan medical college.

WHAT HE IS PAID

The minister of justice in parliament told Dr. Edwards that Major W. S. Hughes, inspector of penitentiaries, received $3,700 salary. As lieutenant-colonel of the 21st Battalion of the expeditionary forces he also received $7.25 per day.

ELEVEN FOREIGNERS ARE INTERNED IN BELLEVILLE

Ten Men and One Woman Comprise the Party—It is Alleged They Were Making for the United States—Hungarians and Austrians Their Nationality—Detained as Prisoners of War

Yesterday afternoon it came to the ears of the military authorities of this city, that a number of foreigners who had been employed at the Cement Works at Point Ann, were about to leave the city owing to the fact that the cement works were closed down and had been closed down for some weeks. These foreigners comprised Hungarians, Austrians and others who were formerly residents of countries who are at war with Great Britain and other allies. It was also ascertained that these parties had not registered in this country and as far as was known were not at all in sympathy with Great Britain in the present titanic struggle.

The result was that a detachment of the military force in this city, in company with Sergt. Harman, and officers Donovan and Thompson, of the police department, at an early hour this morning visited the G. T. R. station and the C.N.O.R. depot and apprehended ten men and one woman, who were about to leave the city. The party, it is alleged, had made every arrangement to leave the city for Detroit, but their plans were temporarily frustrated. Five were apprehended at the G.T.R. station, and six at the C.N.O.R. station. They were taken in charge and escorted to the police station, where they were detained, nominally on the charge of leaving the country without the proper passports.

This morning, Col. Marsh, commanding officer of the Fifteenth Regiment of this city, who was exceedingly active in the matter, was in communication with Col. Hemming, District Officer Commanding for Kingston district, in regard to what was to be done with the party; whether they were to be detained here, or allowed their liberty. Up to the time of going to press nothing definite had been done in the matter; Col. Hemming advising Col. Marsh to retain the parties here until further instructions were given.

At the police station this morning an interpretor was engaged and he learned that the parties were anxious to get away from here owing to the fact that they were unable to procure employment in this vicinity. Three of them at least were anxious to remain in Canada, and all of the men stated that they were by no means friendly to Germany in the present conflict.

In the meantime the men and woman are being retained at the police station and the outcome is being watched with considerable interest. The woman in question, is the wife of one of the men being detained. An effort to obtain the names of the parties proved futile.

Some Marine Men Look Forward for Speedy Operation

ALBURY, Ore., Mar. 1.—Married before he was 17 years old and now, at 68, the father of 17 children, Leslie Walters of Foster sat on the witness stand in the state circuit court here and said that the day had passed when young marriages were desirable. He was appearing as a witness for one of his daughters, who had married before she was 16, and now, before she is 17, was applying for a divorce, after a few months of married life.

Fifty years ago, he said, young marriages were desirable, because young people were serious, and the earlier they got started in life the better. But now, he asserted, young people were thoughtless and careless and he deemed it advisable to wait.

The divorce was granted on the young woman's promise not to marry again before she should reach the age of 18 years.

GRAMPIAN'S FAST TRIP

Some of the Passengers Tell Story of Chase by Submarines

HALIFAX, N.S., March 2.—Special —Fast time was made on the voyage to Halifax from Liverpool by the Allan liner, Grampian, chartered to the C. P. R., which has arrived here. The Grampian had fine weather and only a little fog. Her officers say that the voyage was without incident, while some of the passengers averred that when coming through the Irish Channel she was chased by a German submarine. They say that she maintained a zigzag course at the time, and that naval signals had been received from the shore giving warning that a German submarine was in the vicinity. The next day Marconigrams stated that a steamer had been torpedoed a half hour after the Grampian had dropped her pilot, and at the same place.

Letter to Montreal Man Tells of Heavy Recruiting Going on in England

A letter received by a Montrealer from a resident of Manchester, England, gives some interesting information regarding the recruiting for active service abroad. The following is an extract:

"Up to the present time there have been considerably over 70,000 young men enlisted for the new army from Manchester only, and they are still coming at the rate of over 100 per day. In addition to this there is a force of about 6,000 special police, Volunteer Training Corps, and also a lot of ambulance corps, so that you will see that we are taking the war seriously. England at the present time appears to be just one huge camp, but the secret as to the number of men enlisted is being well kept—it must be simply enormous. We have a tremendous lot of prisoners of war located near Manchester. At Handforth there are the crews of the "Emden" and the recently sunk "Bleucher" and other naval prisoners.

WONDERFUL FOR THE BLOOD

CURES SALLOW SKIN, HEADACHE, LANGUOR AND TIREDNESS.

You don't need to be told how you feel—blue, sort of sickish, poor appetite, vague pains, tired in the morning. This condition is common at this season.

Fortunately there is prompt relief in Dr. Hamilton's Pills which immediately relieve the system of all poisons and disease-producing matter.

Thousands have been so utterly depressed, so worn out as to be despondent but Dr. Hamilton's Pills always cured them. "I can speak feelingly on the power of Dr. Hamilton's Pills," writes C. T. Fearman, of Kingston. "Last spring my blood was thin and weak, I was terribly run down, had awful headaches and a gnawing, empty feeling about my stomach, I couldn't sleep or work until I used Dr. Hamilton's Pills—they did me a world of good." A Nation On The Water Wagon

(From Collier's Weekly)

The loss of five hundred thousand men in war can be made good in less than ten years through complete abstinence from alcohol by all the inhabitants of Russia. This is not the statement of some professional temperance booster: it is the estimate of Arthur Hunter, actuary with the New York Life Insurance Company. To the Association of Life Insurance Presidents he recently read a paper based on the study of the deaths of two million policyholders during twenty-five years. This was his statement: "Total abstainers have a mortality during the working years of life of about one-half of that among those who use alcohol to the extent of at least two glasses of whiskey a day." Do facts mean anything to you? How much of your life and its energies are you cashing in for whisky?

The secret of the quality in "SALADA" packets is in the immensity of the sales. The more people who buy "SALADA," the smaller becomes the necessary profit per pound, and consequently, the greater value it is possible to give you for your money. With the bulk tea merchant the temptation is to make a greater profit at your expense by supplying an inferior tea.

Tell Washington That They Will Stop all Supplies Going to the Germans

WASHINGTON, March 2.—Special—Sir Cecil Spring-Rice, the British Ambassador, and M. Jules Jusserand, the French Ambassador, delivered personally today at the State Department notes conveying Britain's decision in answer to Germany's blocade declaration.

The British note is in the words used by Premier Asquith in his speech in the Commons yesterday, and the French note is in similar language.

MUST BE "AIR-TIGHT."

It is asserted by some navy officials that if Great Britain and France mean that they have declared a blockade of the German coast along the North Sea they must maintain there at all times a sufficient number of ships to make that blockade good and effective, as it has been understood in the international law of the past. Other navy and war department officials say that it does not require as many ships nowadays to justify the maintenance of a blockade as it did in the olden times. This opinion is based on the longer range of modern guns, the great speed of modern cruisers, the capabilities of wireless apparatus, the large number available of swift scout cruisers, torpedo boats, and the practice of counter-mining.

CONSIDERING U. S. PROPOSAL

The British Ambassador has also presented the following instructions from his Government:

"When presenting joint Anglo-French communication you should inform the United States Government that the communication received from them through the United States Ambassador at London respecting a positive limitation of the use of submarines and mines and an arrangement for supplying food to Germany is being taken into careful consideration by his Majesty's Government, in consultation with their allies."

CALIFORNIA EXPOSITIONS

The Grand Trunk System will put in effect on March 1st, reduced fares to California that will include San Francisco—in which city the Panama Pacific Exposition is being held, from Feb. 20th to Dec. 4th—Los Angeles and San Diego—at which latter point the Panama California Exposition is being celebrated during the entire year.

The same fares in most cases (and an additional charge on low excursion fares to cover the cost of meals and fares on Pacific Coast Steamships.) apply on the magnificent new scenic route opened up by the Grand Trunk Pacific, as on the more direct routes from Chicago and other points.

The new Transcontinental is as great in magnitude and interest as the Panama Canal. You see the Canadian Rockies at their best, with Mount Robson, (13,700 ft.) the highest peak in the Canadian Rockies, as the show place of America; the wonderful Fraser and Skeena River of British Columbia; besides enjoying a two-day's trip between Prince Rupert, Vancouver, Victoria or Seattle, through what has become known as the "Norway of America," on the Grand Trunk Pacific Coast Steamships, the finest, surest and fastest in the service.

A short side trip can be made from Prince Rupert to Alaska, which time and expense might not permit from a southern port. No other Transportation Company can offer the choice of routes that the Grand Trunk System has arranged for 1915, to California and the Pacific Coast.

COMPELLED TO ADMIT WITHDRAWAL

Much as it is against their will, the German authorities are compelled to publicly admit the inability of their troops to stem the tide of Russia's oncoming forces. The admission that the German army has withdrawn from Przasnysz—a town in Northern Poland, which they captured on Wednesday with 10,000 prisoners, means much more than the words imply. On the other hand a confirmed Russian bulletin says: "The German retreat is spreading over a constantly widening front, at some points assuming the character of a disorderly flight." The Germans, of course, admit nothing like this, but their bulletin shows clearly that the Russian right is again on the offensive. The retreat from Przasnysz was "before superior forces." A Russian attack northwest of Ostrolenka was repulsed. A Russian advance northwest of Grodno was beaten back. Everywhere the Russians are the ones who are advancing and the Germans are either merely standing their ground or retreating. This change in the tone of German bulletins, which up to two or three days ago were chronicling steady German advances, can have but one meaning. The German drive from the north has failed temporarily, at least so far as it was intended either to strike the Petrograd-Warsaw railroad or to turn the flank of the Russian army which is defending Warsaw. The Germans retain the fruits of their great victory in the Mazurian lake region to the extent that East Prussia is free from invaders, but the results go no further than that. The early reports that represented the Russian tenth army as so nearly annihilated that it never could be rallied and fight again were clearly exaggerated. The army withdrew to its railroad base, where is could receive reinforcements and supplies, and then rallied and turned back the pursuers. That is exactly what every army—Russian, German, French, British and Servian—has done after every defeat in this war, the Austrians alone excepted.

In the south also the Russian reports show that the Russians have met their reinforcements and are again forcing the fighting. They have retaken Stanislau and Kolomea, according to the Petrograd reports. The Vienna bulletin does not admit this, but is claiming no further advances. To all appearances the strong movements against the Russian wings have both been checked without seriously weakening the general Russian position.

THE TORONTO TRAGEDY

Notwithstanding the natural repugnance in a British country to an affirmation of an unwritten law in murder cases the public will not be disposed to quarrel, we believe, with the verdict of a Toronto jury which has acquitted Carrie Davies, the young English domestic. This case, because of its unusual features, has attracted much attention.

The evidence went to afford proof accepted by the jury that the contention of the accused, that she acted in defence of her honor, was true. It was not denied that in the house at which the killing took place certain loose conduct had been displayed, and evidence was also given in advances made by the master to the servant. Under such circumstances the defence showed that a virtuous and conscientious girl took the law into her own hands and shot the man who attempted to betray her.

The case is not without a moral which may be taken to heart wherever it might be useful in improving the relations between master and servant. The honor of a virtuous woman and the honor of a good name are both worthy of respect.—Montreal Mail.

CURRENT COMMENT

Anyway, the Dacia saved a lot of argument and worry by falling into the hands of French ship of war. Someone must have done some fine steering.

In Vermont the State Senate has killed the woman suffrage bill which was passed by the Lower House of the Legislature. Senators everywhere seem to be a fearless and hardened lot.

A change has been made in command of the German battle fleet. Is that a punishment for the foolish raid which cost Germany the Bluecher, or does it mean that the German naval policy is to be changed to one of greater activity?

The United States Congress has recently passed a Child Labor Bill. This measure has for its object the prevention of child labor in the States, where formerly it was the practice to have children under fourteen working in factories, or employed at night.

Lethbridge has been confronted with the possibility of having to close down the schools, the Board of Education not being able to arrange funds. The average boy, whose favorite dream is a fire that totally destroys his school, cannot be expected to adopt a very sympathetic attitude.

Hamilton Herald: "It is something of a joke on Uncle Sam that a French cruiser has seized the Dacia, and not a British one, as anticipated. This unexpected turn of events affords material for a quarrel with France. It may yet be the painful duty of Uncle Samuel to doff the garments of neutrality and declare war on Germany, Britain and France at one and the same time!"

The Broad Arrow: "For years past we have been trying to obtain an army, but have only been grudgingly allowed a striking force after weary wasted hours of wrangle and vituperation. Now, thanks to the benevolent intervention of a philanthropic people, we have obtained an army equal to our present requirements without divulging its cost and have no doubt that our navy will be provided for in the same open-handed manner.

Evidence is accumulating that Belgium is suffering untold misery from the war and the occupation of their country by the ruthless Huns. At the outbreak of the war the country had a population of over 7,750,000; of these it is estimated that 200,000 have been killed in battle or lost their lives through the bombardment of cities and towns. Another 500,000 are refugees in other countries, 300,000 of them being in Holland, 100,000 in Great Britain, and the balance in France, which leaves in round numbers 7,000,000 people in the country; of these 1,400,000 are absolutely destitute and are dependent upon outside food supplies to keep them from starvation.

Forecast for Month of March

(By Irl R. Hicks)

The First Regular Storm Period is central on the 2nd, coming over from the closing days of February, and extending to March the 5th.

As we enter the month of March, a wave of warmer weather will be advancing from western extremes, the barometer will be falling and cloudiness increasing. On an touching the 2nd and 3rd, storms of rain, wind and thunder will visit wide localities in their regular sweep across the great central valleys and on to the eastward. Before the first stages of these storms reach central and eastern extremes, rain will have turned to sleet and snow westward, and something approaching a first class March blizzard will follow across the country as a sequel to the period, with rising barometer and much colder. Unsettled, cloudy and threatening conditions, growing out of the prevailing Mercury influence, will continue between the storm periods at this time. Phenomenal sleet storms will be natural characteristics of all storms during this Mercury period.

The First Reactionary Storm Period will be central on the 7th, 8th and 9th. This will be at the center of the Mercury equinox, with Moon at last quarter and at extreme south declination. On and touching these reactionary storm days, look for return of low barometer, change to warmer, and renewal of very active storms of wind and rain, turning again to sleet and snow, and followed by rising barometer, and much colder, clearing weather.

The Second Regular Storm Period will be central on the 14th, extending from the 12 to the 17th.

Disturbing Causes and What to Look For.

The annual magnetic and electrical crisis which reaches its culmination about the 10th to 15th of March, will mark this period with added severity. The Moon will be on the equator and in conjunction with Earth and Sun on the 15th. The indications are that very severe storms will pass generally over the country on and touching Saturday, Sunday, Monday and Tuesday, the 13th, 14th, 15th and 16th. The first stages of these storms, if preceded by sudden rise in temperature and marked fall of barometer will bring vicious thunder and lighting, with very probable tornadoes in sections central and southward. The crisis of this period may be looked for within about twenty-four hours of 6 p.m. on the 15th. Watch your barometer and all other storm indication, during and about the days mentioned. Sudden change to high barometer and cold northwesterly winds and freezing weather, will rush suddenly on the heels of storms at this time.

The Second Reactionary Period falls centrally on the 19th, 20th and 21st. This period is at the culmination of the Earqth's vernal equinox, which fact calls for uncertain, if not continued stormy weather through much of this part of March, even outside of this storm period. But marked increase of storm conditions—which always mean a change to warmer, falling barometer thickening clouds and intensified storminess—will appear on and touching the 19th, 20th and 21st. The regular rise of the barometer, change of winds to westerly, with cold, clearing weather, will follow immediately on the heels of these storms. Watch at this, and all other storm periods, for the regular processions of the different phases, marching eastward across the country. Sometimes they will be a few hours late or eary, but any ordinary observer can always see that the elements are undergoing the regular periodic changes, and make correct and practical calculations, as to when the storms and other features of the periods will pass his locality. This is a fact which we desire to repeat and insist upon, until it is thoroughly impressed upon the mind of every one of our readers. To see and understand that storms are going to culminate, locally a day or so early or late will prove incalculably valuable to any intelligent observer who keeps his affairs well in hand, and is ready to act promptly, or to defer action until the opportune moment.

The Third Regular Storm Period is nearly coincident with the center of the vernal equinox. It is central on the 25th, and extends from the 23rd to the 29th.

Disturbing Causes and What to Look For

The March equinox, being at its crisis, will blend with and greatly intensify this regular Vulcan storm period. The Moon will pass its first quarter at greatest north declination on the 23rd. It will also pass southward over the celestial equator on the 29th and reach its opposition with Earth and Sun on the 30th. This astronomic outlook will tend to prolong and scatter disturbances at this time, bringing in all probability two marked paroxysms of storms, and weather changes—one at the beginning and one at the close of this period. Normally, the 24th, 25th, 26th and 27th, are the central days of storm and danger, and it will be wise and prudent to keep an eye on your barometer, and all other indications of possible disturbances on and next to these dates. These disturbances will culminate in cold March rains, with very probable spurts of snow—change to much colder, with rising barometer, which is certain to bring up the rear of storm areas on the west. Unsettled and threatening weather conditions will probably be prolonged into the reactionary period beginning on the last day of March.

It is said that Roumania will enter the war in April. "Everybody's Doing it" should be a popular tune soon.

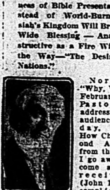
WHY, WHEN AND HOW THE SECOND ADVENT

"Billy" Sunday's View Is Better Than That of "Orthodoxy".

Bible Views Long Buried Now Coming to Light—Erroneous Teachings of the Creeds—Reasonableness of Bible Presentation—Instead of World-Burning, Messiah's Kingdom Will Bring World-Wide Blessing—Anarchy Destructive as a Fire Will Prepare the Way—"The Desire of All Nations."



Norfolk, Va. February 28.—Pastor Russell addressing a large audience here to-day, discussed "Why, When and How Christ's Second Advent," from the text, "If I go away, I will come again and receive you." (John 14:3.) He complimented "Billy" Sunday by saying that although "Billy's" teachings do not come up to the Bible, nevertheless he is far ahead of so-called "orthodoxy" on this subject.

Mr. Sunday preaches considerably as I do on this subject, said the Pastor, yet still comes far short of my conception of the Bible teaching. Mr. Sunday's presentation recognizes that the Lord Jesus at His Second Coming will establish a world-wide Empire which will bless the entire world with light, knowledge and fullest opportunity to walk in the ways of righteousness. To this we agree.

But we disagree with Mr. Sunday's theory that the thousands of millions who died during the past six thousand years in ignorance of Christ are to suffer tortures to all eternity because of that ignorance. Amongst these billions he includes all who have never heard of Jesus' name in the true sense in heathen lands, and at home where, he explains to us, some of them were led straight down to Hell by the churches. These billions, according to Mr. Sunday, were very unfairly treated—very unlucky.

We disagree with this and present the Bible thought, that the dead are neither in a fiery Purgatory nor in a fiery Hell, but in the Bible Hell—the tomb. We insist that the Bible teaches that "all that are in their graves shall hear the voice of the Son of God and come forth." The saintly will come forth to the rewards of the Church in glory with Christ in His Kingdom. Others will come forth to a resurrection—a raising up out of sin and death—by judgment. See Revised Version, John 5:28, 29.

These billions who have not intelligently heard of Jesus and His salvation are not on trial now. Their death is the penalty of Adam's sin and not of their personal rejection of Jesus, whom they never knew. It is to give these the opportunity of a judgment, or trial, during the thousand years of Christ's Reign, that they will be called forth from the tomb. As all died through one man's disobedience, all are to be awakened and brought forth to an opportunity of everlasting life through the obedience of the other man—Christ. The resurrection of the dead, both just and unjust, is their hope. (Acts 24:15.) Aside from a resurrection, there is no hope. It is in view of this that the whole world, good and bad, are said to "sleep with their fathers."

Those who style themselves "Orthodox" are still further astray from the Bible than is Mr. Sunday. While the latter proposes Millennial blessings for the fortunates living at the Second Advent, "Orthodoxy" declares to the contrary—that there will be no Millennium—that there will be no hope for anybody except the Elect few. They hold that, instead of establishing His Kingdom at His Second Advent, Jesus will destroy the earth and its inhabitants with fire. They overlook the teachings of the Lord's Prayer—that His people should pray, "Thy Kingdom come," and expect it; and that they should believe that ultimately God's will shall be done on earth as fully as it is now done in Heaven. They neglect the Scriptures which tell that Paradise, lost as the Garden of Eden, is to be restored world-wide—that "the earth is God's footstool," and that "He will make the place of His feet glorious."—Isaiah 66:1; 60:13.

They neglect the Bible declaration that "the earth abideth forever", and that God "created it not in vain, but formed it to be inhabited." (Ecclesiastes 1:4; Isaiah 45:18.) They neglect St. Peter's declaration that the Restitution Times mentioned by all the holy Prophets are to be realized at the Second Coming of Jesus. (Acts 3:19-21.) Instead, they hold, and express it in all their creeds—Catholic and Protestant—that at Christ's Second Coming the earth and its inhabitants are to be consumed with literal fire. They are led to thus give a literal interpretation to St. Peter's symbolic statements, which portray the fire of anarchy which will destroy present institutions and make way for the New Heavens and the New Earth—the New Dispensation of Messiah's Kingdom.

They fall into this error because of another formed during the Dark Ages: namely, that the only kingdom of God that this world will ever see will be such an one as it is now enjoying, while the various so called kingdoms of God are butchering each other. Each is trying to justify its own selfish course, and all unite in saying that the civilized nations of to-day are Christendom—Christ's Kingdom.

This theory began in the year 800, with Pope Leo III., since which time Catholics claim that the Church is glorified, reigning with Christ, and the Pope serving as the world's king—vicegerent, or instead of Messiah's English, German and other reformers coming out of Catholicism brought with them the same theory, which has been falsely added to the Lord's Prayer in the words, "Thine is the Kingdom and the power and the glory forever," which words do not appear in the oldest MSS. nor in the Revised Version. Protestants generally, refusing the Pope as the vicegerent of Christ, are much confused when they attempt to explain the Kingdom for which they pray, "Thy Kingdom come," and the reference in Revelation to its lasting a thousand years. Protestant preachers are becoming Higher Critics, Evolutionists, etc., and take little account of the Bible testimony. What a pity that such do not instead resign their pulpits and enter business life, where higher standards of honesty prevail!

There are honest preachers who believe the Bible, yet find it difficult to believe respecting Messiah's Kingdom. Properly enough these argue that if Jesus has been glorified for eighteen centuries as a Spirit Being, at the right hand of the Father, and has been preparing the Church for the Heavenly Courts, it would seem to be a retrogression for Him to return to earth and establish an earthly kingdom with soldiers, servants, courtiers, etc. Properly they reason that the Lord Jesus to leave the Throne of Heavenly Glory, and return to sit upon a throne of gold and ivory, would seemingly be taking a backward step.

The difficulty is that these ministers have slipped a few cogs in the great Divine Plan of the Ages. What they need yet to note in the Bible is that Christ and His Church, His Bride class, the Royal Priesthood, the Household of Faith, are the only ones of the human family promised a share in the Heavenly rewards and blessings—that the Divine arrangement for the remainder of mankind is an earthly Eden, or Paradise, and human perfection in the Divine likeness. They fail to see that the saintly Church, now being gathered from the world for eighteen centuries, will compose a Spiritual Kingdom which, backed by Infinite Wisdom and Power, will be better able to serve the world's interests than could any earthly kingdom; and that, furthermore, the Divine Plan provides that the Ancient Worthies, from Abel down to John the Baptist, are to be resurrected perfect human beings, who will be honored by being made "princes in all the earth"—representatives, agents, of the invisible Spiritual Kingdom then in control

Our Lord's many parables refer to His Church as a Kingdom class, a Royal Priesthood. This does not signify that He intended them to occupy places of honor and distinction now. The Master Himself was neither a King nor a Priest on earth. His is the Melchizedek Priesthood of the Messianic Age. Then He will also be the great King over all the earth. Well did He declare to Pilate, "My Kingdom is not of this Age" (John 18:36). As His saintly followers are to share in His Kingdom, they also must wait for its establishment. While waiting they pray, "Thy Kingdom come; Thy will be done on earth, as it is done in Heaven."

Of this Royal Priesthood the Apostle John declares, "The world knoweth us not." We are kings and priests only from the Divine standpoint, which none are able to recognize except "the brethren." Only in embryo are God's saints spoken of as the Kingdom class. They are now on probation. Jesus says that the overcomers will be granted to sit with Him in His Throne, as actual members of the Royal Priesthood, to reign with Him a thousand years.—Revelation 3:21; 20:6.

After telling about the resurrection of the dead, St. Paul explains that the resurrection of the Church to glory, honor and immortality will be first on the program. Subsequently all will come forth, "every man in his own order," and Christ shall reign until He shall have put down all insubordination. Other Scriptures clearly inform us that the length of His Reign will be a thousand years.

From the Bible viewpoint the Thousand-year Day of Christ is ample for the great work to which it has been consecrated by the all-wise Creator from before the foundation of the earth. Nor should we forget that all power in Heaven and earth is vested in the One who then will take the Throne. Neither should we forget that for eighteen centuries the Church has been under special preparation and instruction in the School of Christ, training for their work as a Royal Priesthood. They will be able to sympathize with the groaning creation and to be merciful, even in the administration of stripes necessary to many for their assistance along the Highway of Holiness, then opened up.

Some of the noblest minds have been repelled from faith in the Second Advent by the thought of an earthly Kingdom with Christ and the saints in regal state. They were quite right in thinking that earthly court and state would be beneath the dignity of Messiah and His Bride. The Scriptures declare that Jesus left His glory, humbled Himself to become a man, in order that He might become the great Sin-Offering for our race. But the Redeemer prayed to be glorified with the glory which He had with the Father before the world was; and He promised His Church a share in His Heavenly glory. Did He lead us to expect a Heavenly glory, Heavenly inheritance and glorious change from earthly to Heavenly conditions, and will He give us, instead, earthly glory and merely perfection in the flesh?

How slow we have been to see that God never purposed that either Jesus or His faithful Elect should remain in the flesh! A few Bible statements misunderstood got us into difficulty. We read, "Every eye shall see Him," and forget that there are eyes of understanding as well as natural eyes. We forgot that Jesus declares that very few now see or hear—only the saintly, whose eyes of understanding have been opened by the anointing of the Holy Spirit. We forgot that Jesus said, "A little while and the world seeth Me no more." When once we discern that He has been glorified—that He has been given a spirit nature again, that He no longer has the human nature which He surrendered as a Sin-Sacrifice, then we see why the world will see Him no more, and why the Church must be changed by resurrection power before she can see Him.

Jesus left the world, not so much in the sense of going so far away that He could not see His disciples and communicate with them, but rather in the sense that He would not see them or communicate with them. He would compel them to "walk by faith and not by sight," to "search the Scriptures," and to receive their spiritual blessings through the fellowship of the Spirit of Truth. By His Holy Spirit He would be with them, and not by personal contact or further manifestations.

His Second Coming would be at the end of the Age, to awaken His sleeping saints and to change them to the Heavenly state. Thus He would come again and receive them unto Himself—first the sleeping ones and subsequently those alive and remaining, who would experience their resurrection change in the moment of death. Additionally, in the Harvest with which the Age ends, He promised to take special supervision of the gathering of His Elect.

This stage of His Coming is called, in the Greek, His Parousia—His presence. The world is not to know of His Parousia. On the contrary, it is described as secret—"as a thief in the night." Jesus described His Parousia, saying that at that time the world would be eating, drinking, planting, building, and knew not of His Coming in the Harvest of the Age, even as the world in the days of Noah knew not. The intimation is, however, that some of God's people would be made aware of His Parousia; while others of God's people, the Foolish Virgins, would be overcharged with the cares of this life, and know not.

If Jesus really meant it when He said, "A little while and the world seeth Me no more," how can humanity know about the new, invisible Kingdom? The Bible answers most distinctly. It tells of the shining forth, the Epiphania, of the Messianic Kingdom. It tells of His Apokalupsis, manifestation, or revealment—"He shall be revealed in flaming fire." This flaming fire signifies severe judgments, as elsewhere. These are to be so severe that the elements of society will melt with the fervency of the heat in a terrible Time of Trouble. Additionally, "the heavens," the ecclesiastical systems, will be involved, and will pass away with a great noise, or commotion. It is from this revealing in flaming fire, Divine censure upon the world, that the great, the high, the mighty, the poor, all, shall seek to "hide themselves in the dens and caves of the earth"—in the social orders and in affiliation with strong governments, etc.

Gradually mankind will see that it is "the wrath of the Lamb" that causes the "Time of Trouble such as was not since there was a nation." The plowshare of trouble will go so deep that the world will effectually learn the lesson. As their eyes of understanding open still more widely, they will discern the beauties and blessings of the Messianic Kingdom—"the desire of all nations."

But first The Christ, Jesus the Head and the Church the Body, Bridegroom and Bride, must enter into the glory of the Kingdom. Then will be established the earthly phase of the Kingdom in the hands of the Ancient Worthies. The world will "see Abraham, Isaac, Jacob and all the Prophets"; but they will not see the King, nor the Bride, nor "the virgins her companions" on the spirit plane. These will be as invisible to humanity as are Satan and his demon host at the present time.

One of our great obstacles in the past has been the failure to discern that God has been presenting two distinct salvations—that of the Church to the spiritual, Heavenly, Divine nature; and that of the non-elect, through the elect Church. To them will come the opportunity of earthly Restitution to human perfection, in the image and likeness of God, as was Adam—in a world-wide Paradise. Our Saviour's First Advent was necessary for the redemption of mankind. His Second Advent is for the overthrow of Satan and sin and for the release of sinners.

We cannot here discuss fully how Christ comes as a thief, but we offer free of charge a booklet which we have written with a view to making the matter very clear. Whoever will address me—Pastor Russell, Brooklyn, N.Y.—requesting a copy of Parousia Booklet—will receive a copy free.

New York continues to lower the death rate of children under one year of age. Unfortunately all New Yorkers cannot remain at that age.

"Barrow May Enter Washington Now," reads like a war-story heading but it is nothing more serious than a baseball deal.

A Spartan Mother.

Shawbridge Boys Farm, located a few miles from Montreal, is an institution which does excellent work in taking incorrigible boys and transforming them into useful citizens. When the call for volunteers for the second contingent came, a squad of eight of the boys marched in and presented themselves for enlistment. As they were all well-set-up, able-bodied and well-drilled, they were readily accepted, but being under age, they were required to obtain the written consent of parents or guardians. One mother apparently had little reason to believe that the Farm had altogether eradicated the tendencies which led to her son's residence there, as her letter of consent read as follows:

"I agree to allow my son to join your regiment, the Victoria Rifles, and the sooner he goes to fight for his country, the better I shall be pleased."

BELOVED IN IRELAND

ABERDEEN HAS WON A PLACE IN THE HEARTS OF ERIN.

Former Canadian Governor-General Who Still Owns a Ranch In Canada and Is Keenly Interested In the Affairs of the Dominion, Has Had a Very Successful Administration In Ireland.

Since the Act of Union came into force on January 1st, 1801, by which Ireland, like Scotland, was ruled by a common Parliament, the Emerald Isle has passed through many vicissitudes, and on the shoulders of the successive viceroys who have ruled at Dublin has fallen the arduous task of conciliating the proud Irish spirit, removing much bitter feeling, and fostering that fraternity which exists between the two countries to-day. And if a plebiscite were taken, there is no doubt that the name of Earl of Aberdeen, former governor-general of Canada, who will resign his position in February, would figure as the most popular representative of the sovereign who has occupied the castle at Dublin.

"His Ex.," as he is commonly referred to, first gained the good-will of the Irish people by the sympathetic and enthusiastic manner in which he entered into their interests when he first became Lord Lieutenant in 1886. This was when he was appointed by Mr. Gladstone, and when six months later the statesman was driven from office Lord Aberdeen paid a visit to Australia, and received an enthusiastic reception from the Irish residents in Melbourne, Sydney, and other big cities.

It was while in Melbourne that an incident characteristic of his lordship occurred. He was present at a concert at which Mme. Melba was the principal artiste, and his lordship, finding that the National Anthem was omitted from the program, and that at the close of the concert the audience were preparing to depart without that expression of loyalty being given effect to, jumped to his feet and in his clear voice commenced singing the first line of "God Save the Queen." The effect was electrical. The audience bounded to their feet with uncovered heads and swelled the chorus, clearly showing that the omission was not of their choosing.

In Canada, where he was Governor-General from 1893 to 1898, the Earl of Aberdeen is as popular as he is in Ireland or Australia. Indeed, the Canadians almost count him as one of themselves. He acquired a fine ranch, of which he is still owner, and his position in that respect has more than once been responsible for the suggestion that he should be elected to the Parliament of the Dominion.

Lord Aberdeen has, however, on more than one occasion confessed that his love lies in Ireland, where he finds full occupation for his energies. And not a little of his popularity in the Emerald Isle is due to the fact that he enters fully into the pleasures and pursuits of the Irish people. For instance, he dearly loves a dance, and although, as befits a viceroy, he only joins in quadrilles at the state balls given in Dublin, he foots it right merrily at the small informal dances. Indeed, in an age when young men are too blase to dance, it is a pleasure to watch Lord Aberdeen joining in a polka with the zest of a schoolboy.

On one occasion an attractive tune was played by the band, and Lord Aberdeen with a youthful partner commenced with the first bars and never paused until the end, when to the surprise of the guests he called out "Go on!" to the musicians, and without a moment's rest danced the entire encore through from start to finish.

Lord Aberdeen is a man of many hobbies and accomplishments. He is a skilled landscape gardener, quite an expert engine-driver—as a boy he took delight in traveling on the engines of the local railway, often acting as fireman—and plays a good round of golf. He is thoroughly democratic, and is idolized by his tenants in consequence. Two of his sons, the late Hon. Archibald Gordon and the Hon. Dudley Gordon, who, like their father, love all things mechanical, were apprenticed to a big shipbuilding firm, and used to go to work at six every morning, leading the life of ordinary apprentices, and submitting cheerfully to all sorts of rules and regulations.

Lady Aberdeen, who is a daughter of the first Lord Tweedmouth, has long been noted for her philantrophy, and has identified herself with all manner of educational and charitable reforms, being particularly active in combating consumption in Ireland.

The story of how Lord Aberdeen became acquainted with his wife is not without interest. When a young man he visited a shooting lodge in the Highlands. One day his host could not accompany him, and, being alone, he wandered unknowingly on to a neighboring estate. He was tramping along, gun on shoulder, when a gentleman asked him if he was trespassing. "Oh, no," replied Lord Aberdeen; "I am the guest of So-and-so." "Very probably," replied the stranger, "but you are on my property now."

Lord Aberdeen, of course, apologized profusely, and handed him his card. The owner of the soil was Mr. Marjoribanks, afterwards Lord Tweedmouth, and he promptly invited the trespasser to lunch with him. The invitation was accepted, and Lord Aberdeen met Miss Isabel Marjoribanks, who ultimately became Lady Aberdeen.

Milk Bottles Too Small.

Large quantities of milk bottles have been imported into Canada for use in the sale of milk, and as these have been found to be of wine measure capacity instead of imperial measure, the Inland Revenue Department has issued orders to hold up such imports until the department has satisfied itself that the shipments are with the tolerated percentage of error.

Improved production means increased production.

Better farming means better business. Better business means better profits.

Well prepared soil and well-selected seed result in abundant products.

The advantages of the times are all ours. It would be sinful to neglect the opportunity.

With a continuation of the war, the horses of Europe will be annihilated. Then will profit the wise Canadian farmer who keeps good stock.

With the waste and consumption that is proceeding, the demand for live stock and the value thereof in the next few years must increase greatly.

If Canada is short on male labor how much more so must be the nations at war? In every way, the advantage is with us.

The adverse balance of trade against Canada in 1914 amounted to $180,000,000. Strenuous effort now will help materially to turn this tide.

Canada is the right hand of Britain. It is her duty to fulfil the position with both heart and hand.

The farmer at work in the field is doing as much in this crisis as the man who goes to the front.—Premier Hearst.

Lord Kitchener says the war is to last three years. In three years, produce at the present rate of going, will be a scarce article in Europe.

From August 1, 1913, to July 31, 1914, Europe, including Great Britain, imported 487,949,000 bushels of wheat and 39,091,000 bushels of wheat flour. Canada exported 114,773,000 bushels of wheat, and 20,457,000 bushels of flour.

From August 1, 1913, to July 31, 1914, Europe imported 129,485,000 bushels of oats. Canada exported 34,947,000 bushels, and Germany 25,077,000 bushels.

From August 1, 1913, to July 31, 1914, Europe imported 254,655,000 bushels of barley. Canada exported 12,294,000 bushels.

After the devastation of war, there is always a revival of business. Preparation now will bring Canada her share of profits then.

The world's supply of meat cannot be produced as quickly as a supply of grain, and the man who stays with the live stock business will win in the end.—Hon. Duncan Marshall, Minister of Agriculture for Alberta.

THE ONLY CURE FOR CONSTIPATION

Is "Fruit-a-tives"—That Wonderful Remedy Made From Fruit Juices.

Avon, Ont., May 14th. 1913.

"I have used "Fruit-a-tives" for Indigestion and Constipation with most excellent results, and they continue to be my only medicine. When I first started about six years ago to use them, I took four at a dose but gradually reduced the dose to one tablet at night. Before taking "Fruit-a-tives", I took salts and other pills but the treatment was too harsh. I thought I might as well suffer from the illness as from these treatments. Finally, I saw "Fruit-a-tives" advertised with a letter in which some one recommended them very highly, so I tried them, and I have no hesitation in recommending them."

Do Postmen Get Letters?

Do you suppose the postoffice clerks care to receive letters? I have my doubts. They get into a dreadful habit of indifference. A postman, I imagine, is quite callous. Conceive his delivering one to himself without being startled by a preliminary double knock!

Pleasure at Death.

A wise man shall not be deprived of pleasure even when death shall summon him, forasmuch as he has attained the delightful end of the best life, departing like a guest full and well satisfied. Slow Delivery.

Mrs. Gotham—Who spoke at the dinner tonight, dear?

Mr. Gotham—Well, one of the speakers was the owner of that big department store.

In the Wrong Place.

Little Kitty had fallen down and cut her knee. Her mother promptly rendered first aid; but, as it was rather dark and she could not see the wound properly, she consequently placed the bandage rather too low. "Oh, mummie," complained the child, "this bandage is not in the right place! I fell down higher up!"

A Pessimist.

Capture All Enemy's Goods Only Policy, Says Times

LONDON, Mar. 1.—The Morning Post, says, editorially: "Today the Prime Minister is to make his long-delayed statement concerning the new measures to be taken in regard to the importation of supplies into Germany. That statement may either involve another attempt to prop up the existing system, which has acted greatly to our detriment, or it may indicate a return to the only right and only practical policy. That policy consists of capturing all enemy good wherever they may be found and carried under whatsoever flag.

"The full right of capture was given by the Declaration of Paris of 1856 and suffered further inroads under the Hague Conventions and the notorious Declaration of London. All that is now required—and nothing else will serve—is to resume the ancient right of capture, according to the law of nations, which is a very different thing than the amateur and partial agreements of the Hague Convention.

"As all treaties and agreements have been broken by Germany, the other parties to them are naturally absolved from obligation."

SUN LIFE HAS RECORD YEAR

Is Now in Strongest Position in its History. Largest of all Canadian Companies

When the history of the economic changes during 1914 comes to be written, more than usual interest will center around the assurance companies whose statements so far published have evidenced marked ability to weather the depression. In view of its prominent position among Canadian Life companies the Report of the Sun Life Assurance Company of Canada for the year 1914 is more than ordinarily significant and reveals a particularly satisfactory state of affairs.

The Company closed the year with the strongest statement in its history. Assurances issued and paid for during the year totalled over $32,167,000—the largest amount issued by any Canadian Life company. A total paid for issue of over $15,986,000 in Canada represents an increase of $383,665 over the record for 1913, a fact strongly suggestive not only of the popularity of Sun Life of Canada policies among the Canadian people but of the essential soundness of Canadian business conditions. Assurances in force now total over $218,299,000. Assets increased by $8,461,000 during the year to $64,187,000, the largest annual increase in the Company's history. At Dec. 31st, net surplus had increased over 13% to $6,503,000. Cash income totalled over $15,000,000, an increase of $1,000,000 over 1913. A particularly favorable feature of the year was an increase of over 48% in the total profits earned during the year. The prosperity of the Sun Life of Canada is reflected in the fact that during the present year the Company is in a position to maintain its increasing scale of policy dividends and that accordingly five-year divident and reserve divident policies will receive larger dividents in 1915 than were received by similar policies in 1914.

It is noted that the Sun Life of Canada again maintained its leadership among Canadian Life companies in amount of new assurances issued, total assurances in force, assets, surplus and income.

Altogether, the record of the Sun Life of Canada during the past year will prove a source of much pride and satisfaction to both the policyholders and the shareholders of the company.

Five Dollar Tax On Slot Machines

Quebec Government Expects to Derive Considerable Revenue From This Source

QUEBEC, Mar. 1.—By the terms of the Government bill respecting automatic distributors, better known as slot machines, each one will be taxed $5. It is expected a considerable revenue will be derived from this source. The definition of what is meant by an automatic distributor is wide enough to embrace the various kinds of these devices which are only by politeness called distributors, as in most cases they retain generally far more than they distribute.

"For the purposes of this act, the words 'automatic distributor' mean any apparatus, table, board, rack or device put at the disposal of the public, and operated by the introduction of coins or counters, or the operation of which is governed in any way by the skill or the exercise or judgment of any person, and not being such apparatus the use or the keeping of which is prohibited by law as being a gambling device or otherwise.

No person shall, under pain of the fines and penalties hereinafter promulgated, keep or make use of any automatic distributor, without having previously obtained from the Government in the manner and form, and after payment of the fees and duties mentioned in sections 4 and 5, a license for each automatic distributor so kept or used."

Clauses four and five of the bill state to obtain a license as required by the act the keeper of such a device must pay over and above the said license duties, a fee of one dollar for each license, of which one half shall be remitted to the Provincial Treasurer, and one half retained by the collector. Then the bill declares the duties exigible by the act shall be four dollars on every license for an automatic distributor.

TROTTER AND THE BURGLAR

(Uew York Herald)

The noise that two strange men made while they packed silverware and other valuables awakened Mrs. Helen Kornervitsch and her fox terrier, Trotter, in her apartment on the second floor at No. 224 Twenty-seventh street, Brooklyn, before daylight yesterday.

Trotter ran into the dining room and clamped his saw-like teeth into the calf of one man's leg. The other man fled down a fire escape and got away. Trotter held on, and as the stranger struggled to discourage him a large china cabinet was knocked over with a terrific bang.

Then the man, unable to loose Trottef, ran to a window, the terrier holding on, raised the sash, and, in desperation, leaped out. Trotter never released his hold for a second, but kept on sawing his teeth into the man's calf.

The man's cries, with the screams of Mrs. Kornervitsch, attracted Policeman Lee. He could not persuade Trotter to let go and they had to wait for Mrs. Kornevitsch to dress and appear. She uttered the mystic "Open Sesame" that caused Trotter to release his hold.

There is a Massachusetts specialist who says he can live on 10 cents a day. The Massachusetts girls will have to brush up on their cooking, for these bird-like appetites give them a law standing.

HORSE PRICES TO SOAR.

Canada Will Not Recover From Scarcity For Years To Come.

The great demand from Great Britain, France, Belgium and Italy for Canadian cavalry and artillery horses will, according to the Department of Agriculture here, practically absorb all the available supplies of light horses in Canada during the coming year. High prices for horses of nearly all kinds with the possible exception of heavy draft horses, are predicted in Canada for years to come.

Already some thirty thousand horses have been purchased in Canada for war purposes. The British War Office has purchased in Canada more than seven thousand out of the fifty thousand horses secured on this side of the Atlantic since the outbreak of the war. The Canadian Government purchased about seven thousand horses for the first contingent and another ten thousand are now being bought for the second and third contingents. The French and Italian Governments are also looking for horses from Canada. A Toronto firm was recently offered a contract for five thousand horses to be purchased for the Italian Government. The demand from all quarters for horses for war purposes is increasing.

It is estimated that the total number of horses now engaged in the war is one million. The estimated average life of the cavalry horse on active service is seven days; of the artillery horse it is thirty days. For army purposes in the next twelve months, therefore, more than twelve million horses will be required.

An estimate prepared by the Department of Agriculture of the available supply in Canada shows that there are about forty-six thousand horses suitable for cavalry or artillery purposes. Of these two thousand are in the Maritime Provinces, eight thousand in Quebec, twelve thousand in Ontario, four thousand in Manitoba, seven thousand in Saskatchewan, twelve thousand in Alberta, and one thousand in British Columbia.

A conservative estimate places the total number of horses owned by the allies at forty-eight millions, and by The enemy of 8,750,000. Of these, of course, only a small proportion would be available for war purposes. The supply in Germany and Austria is already pretty well exhausted, and those countries have not the resources of the United States and other neutral countries to draw upon.

It is probable that before the year closes the farmers of Canada will have sold for war purposes six or seven million dollars' worth of horses. When the war closes a good driving or riding horse may be as great a luxury as a good automobile.

A Cheap Holiday.

Four Toronto men were recently in the north deer-hunting, who had a comparatively cheap, but luxurious and happy holiday. Last spring they learned that the owner of the farm where they had headquarters for several successive seasons was willing to sell. The location was attractive and reasonably close to good railway connections at Sudbury. There is a ten-acre lake with good pickerel and bass always to be obtained in summer; there is sufficient duck food growing naturally around its margins to invite several autumn flocks to stop off on their southern flight; and the section is second to none with in fifty miles for a crack at the fleet creatures of the wild for which hunters are so often mistaken. The farmhouse itself with alterations could easily be made do duty as club-house. When they got down to brass tacks these Toronto men decided they could not finance the scheme yet awhile. This was where a young German friend of theirs came in—a draughtsman in a West-end works. He had lived a while in England before coming to Canada. At his own request he was allowed to advance half the money necessary to purchase the property, $600. "Ve'll all haf a goot time dis fall, vot?" was how he expressed satisfaction with such a great crowd of fellows. Further, he donated another $125 to have a builder sent to make the alterations designed by himself after a personal visit last summer. The local members of the club are not worrying about what this German draughtsman's business really was in Canada. He disappeared suddenly before the outbreak of the war, and the others spent the long evenings of a happy fortnight before his elaborate brick fireplace in the modernized farmhouse.

Pebbles For Gems.

Among the many curious trades that rely upon cleverness in deception is that of the seaside lapidary or gem cutter, who trades in expensive gems for worthless pebbles. His business is successful at some of the English seaside resorts. The customers are shown gems which the cutter claims to have picked up on the shore and polished. Then they start out in search of gems and carry to the cutter pebbles which he convinces them are gems. They leave the pebbles to be cut, and he sends back, in return for the valueless pebbles, topazes, aquamarines and other inexpensive gems, charging a price for cutting which gives him a fine profit on the transaction.

Chinaman Sells Carlton Shop

Little Piece That Has Held Buyers For Years Finally Secured

TORONTO, Mar. 2.—(Special.)—After a chase lasting four years and leading into the heart of China, the last piece of land in the famous Carlton mystery block has been secured.

The story that the property was bought at last was gossip of Toronto Chinese circles last night, and Russell Nesbitt, who was a solicitor in the transaction, admitted over the phone that the deal had been closed, but would not give any particulars.

The particular piece of property is 62 Carlton street. On it stands a Chinese laundry, and in the back room of the place was hatched the cunning plot that jumped the price of the property from the $3700 paid in 1907 to the hundred thousand dollars or more that the mysterious stock buyers undoubtedly paid yesterday.

Lem Gan and Lem Chong were the original buyers of the land eight years ago. When negotiations quietly began back in 1910 for all the properties from Church to George the two wily Chinamen scented something and wouldn't sell. As the story goes, after tedious negotiation the pair gave a sort of agreement of sale—from which they were to share profits—to another Chinaman. They seemed afraid they would not be able to resist the big offers being made them. This last Chinaman, when he couldn't get what he wanted, quietly slipped back home and then the buying agents set frantic chase after him. For a long time he eluded them and in the meantime many attempts were made in Toronto to get hold of the land, for it was the last piece.

Scheme Didn't Work

A scheme to widen Carlton street and expropriate the Chinamen's property was put forward, but the city wasn't ready to act. It was suggested that efforts be made to have the loundry permit revoked, but it was figured out that little thing like that wouldn't shake down Chinamen who had prospects of making a fortune by sitting tight. At last the quasi owner in China turned up, possibly of his own volition, more likely he was discovered, and the little syndicate is now wondering just what it will do with all its money.

Two years ago $90,000 was said to have been offered. For all that can now be found out fifty per cent. more has probably been paid. Anyway as much as would buy a piece of land around King and Yonge streets was given for the dingy laundry shop.

FRENCH HAUL DOWN U.S. FLAG ON DACIA

Crew Is Being Sent Back, But Washington Gives Contrary Orders

NEW YORK, March 2.—Special—The American flag which flew over the steamer Dacia, captured last week by a French cruiser and taken into Brest, is sending the Dacia's crew back to New York City, according to cablegrams received here to-day.

This information was contained in a message from Captain McDonald of the Dacia to Edward N. Breitung, the vessel's owner. The message read as follows:

"Dacia detained here; flag down; French official on board; American consul sending crew to New York. Will I remain and look after interests?"

Captain McDonald was instructed to remain and to insist also upon the crew remaining. To the American consul at Brest, Mr. Breitung addressed a message inquiring why the Dacia was detained and why her flag was hauled down and requesting the consul to look after his interests there.

Some domestic genius should devote the long winter evenings to inventing an automatic rug and fly swatter.

If the wheat shortage induces more women to teach the art of bread making all will not be in vain, by any means.

Refuses to Recognize Transfer of Dacia

PARIS, Mar. 1.—French marines were placed upon the American steamer Dacia at Brest today to relieve for active duty the sailors of the cruiser that captured the former Hamburg-American ship at sea.

The information was given out at the Ministry of Marine today that France will refuse to recognize the legality of the transfer of the Dacia's registry, but definite announcement to this effect will not be made until the sitting of a prize court at Brest next week.

A HUGE SLAUGHTER-HOUSE

WARSAW, Mar. 1.—The stretch of country from Kolno to Staviski is said on the eighteenth of February to have been like a gigantic slaughter-house as a result of the German onslaughts in that region.

Refugees from this district relates fearful tales of blood and iron. "No bouches inutiles" was the cry. That is, none but soldiers were to be fed. The German general ordered the inhabitants to be driven over the Russian lines. Many were shot for hanging back, while the Abbe Marsheveski, of Zembok, who has gone to Warsaw reports the burning of forty women and children locked in their houses in a village by the Germans in their retreat. The enemy refused to trust the peasants' oaths to keep silence as to the movement of troops. From Prasnysz four hundred families have arrived, declaring that three hundred remained in the cellars of the bombarded town, eating dogs and garbage.

The villages on every side are reported on fire despite and incessant fall of melting snow, which add immeasurably to the difficulties of transport.

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

"Figure improvement means health, and health always means beauty. The Gossard Corset which laces in front assures an immediate figure improvement with its attendant joys—health, beauty & comfort."

At this store, corsets receive more than the usual attention because our experience proves to us that corsets are the foundation of style. They help make the suit, gown and dress. At this time, when many women are questioning much of the style news published, we believe the

Eden Phillpotts on the War

Has Righteousness a Friend? Asks the Noted Novelist

LONDON, March 1.—Eden Phillpotts, the novelist, in an article entitled "Neutrality and Morals," published in The Daily Chronicle, says:

"One is tempted to ask just now if righteousness, by which is understood the sense of honor, integrity and justice, has many friends left in the Chancellories of civilization?"

The writer refers to the recent published "war book" of Germany, which he says leaves neutral nations quite unmoved, adding:

"There is a simple explanation. The neutral principle is now tacitly permitted to enter the domain of morals and Christendom has determined that to protest against avowed evil, even in the name of its founder, is a duty prohibited to neutral nations during time of war.

MEN SHALL BE DUMB.

"We may control the individual who preaches assassination, and we may destroy him if he practices it, but should a civilized nation proclaim her right to murder peaceful citizens and their wives and burn the houses over their heads, we must be dumb, be he president or pope or hereditary monarch, because to assert that such methods are contrary to righteousness and belong to a period of man's evolution now far passed, is to commit an unfriendly act against the state that practices them.

"We are convinced that every high-minded man in neutral countries must from his heart deplore the ethical downfall of a great ingdom until now respected and admitted with good welcome to all the civilized earth, but while the man mourns diplomacy decrees that the world of men shall be dumb.

WHERE AMERICA FAILED

"Wherefore, what right has this discredited, stultified concert of high diplomacy to come between a state and its honest soul? Why must the privilege of uttering his faith, which we do not deny to the least of mankind, be refused to the monarch and the statesman—to the leaders of men and nations whose word under all constitutions is held to be the united word of those for whom they stand?"

Mr. Phillpotts concludes:

"Ex-President Roosevelt has publicly declared that had the United States protested at first against the threat of the German invasion of Belgium's neutrality it would have been respected, and no man is in a better position to judge than he is.

NO FRIEND OF THE FALLEN

"Is it too late to hope that the world's sense of honor may yet succeed where diplomacy for ever fails? Cannot the highest human motives find a friend whose voice is powerful enough to resound over the cry of dying women and children and reach the ear of this nation before she has added to the multitude of her crimes against honor and justice, truth and the sacred laws of life?"

Lord Kitchener Started Yarn

"Russians Troops Through England" Was War Office Ruse Kept Germans Guessing

LONDON, March 1.—The famous hoax of the first weeks of the war, when a body of Russian soldiers said to number 100,000 to 200,000 men, was reported to have circled around from Archangel, landed in Scottish ports, and been shipped through at night to reinforce the British force in France, originated with Lord Kitchener himself, according to a statement made by a British officer to a correspondent of the Daily Despatch.

It is a noteworthy fact that although the myth spread like wild-fire through the United Kingdom, with any number of witnesses to swear that they had seen and talked to the Russians, in their native language, the press bureau did not issue an official contradiction for a long period.

The Russian story, says the British officer, was designed to impress the German commanders in Belgium and Northern France, and to keep them in fear of a surprise either in the rear or on the western flank. It accomplished its purpose, for this dread was real among the German staff, and accounts to some extent for the retreat of Gen. von Kluck from Paris. To give color to the report, Lord Kitchener is said to have caused a hundred transports laden with sundry goods to be sent from Scottish ports to Archangel after insuring them in Holland. And when the British troops were moved from various points in Scotland and the North of England to the channel ports he ordered the blinds of the trains to be lowered so as to arouse popular popular curiosity and speculation.

Universities are collecting books on the present war. But have the universities room enough for this large enterprise?

EARLY MARRIAGES WERE O. K. IN DAD'S DAY

So Testifies a Father in Divorce Suit of His Daughter

OSWEGO, Mar. 1.—Marine men of this city are anticipating an early opening of navigation and old time followers of the water are looking for boats to cross between Oswego and Canadian points the latter part of March. April has usually been the time of opening but this year the lake and harbor on the American shore are practically free from ice and what little ice is in the Canadian harbors will move out quickly, it is believed.

Food In Liverpool Would Last a Year

Never in History of Port Has Shipping Been So Great

LIVERPOOL, March 1.—Never in the history of the port has the congestion of shipping been so great; nor have the Liverpool warehouses ever been so crammed with foodstuffs as at present. It is the consensus of opinion here that even should the German submarine blockade prove effective, there is enough food now stored here to feed the country for a year.

Perhaps no city in England bears less trace of the war in the way of military or naval activity than Liverpool. Far removed from the fear of Zeppelins, it is brilliantly lighted at night, and the usually drab city is gay by comparison with London. Liverpool is not a naval base, its harbor being given over almost exclusively to merchant shipping. The activity along its miles of docks is feverish, because, in spite of the usually ample facilities for unloading merchant vessels, at least thirty heavily-laden steamers are chafing at their anchors in the stream and awaiting berths.

Owners of merchant ships are reaping a golden harvest. Some loss is caused by the failure of ships to get berths on their arrival, but this is more than compensated for by the increase in freight rates.

Peterborough M. D. Commits Suicide

Dr. Brown Was Charged With Criminal Operation—Swallows Strychnine

PETERBORO' March 3.—Special—The sensation over the arrest of Dr. W. Brown, on a charge of murder yesterday afternoon, in connection with the death of eighteen-year-old Helen Brown on Februray 24, as a result of an illegal operation, has developed into a double tragedy. The man charged with responsibility for the death of Helen Brown by a criminal operation, committed suicide by taking strychnine in the police station, about five minutes to six last evening.

Subsequent to his arrest, Dr. Brown sent for his solicitor, A. E. Dixon, to make his will. Chief of Police Thompson was present, retiring for only a few minutes when the business was concluded. Mr. Dixon said Brown seemd normal, though considerably depressed, and made an intelligent will. While the Chief was absent Mr. Dixon was reading the paper aloud, sitting sidewise to Dr. Brown, with the latter apparently listening.

During the reading Dr. Brown rose to his feet as if to stretch his legs, and Mr. Dixon saw him set down a glass that had been on the table during the afternoon. He had not seen him take it up. The Chief of Police had been previously examining two or three witnesses in the presence of Dr. Brown, as Brown had taken notes of the evidence, which were lying on the table. Referring to these notes, he spoke to Mr. Dixon on the evidence with great bitterness, and said there was an attempt being made to incriminate him though he was perfectly innocent.

The Chief of Police returning as Mr. Dixon retired, Brown said he was very tired, as he had been up all the previous night, and wanted to lie down. He added that his life was done. The Chief locked him in the cell and went out as far as Simcoe street, but on meeting Rev. R. G. Peever, who was coming to see Brown, one of his parishioners, he returned, and as they entered the station they heard a frenzied shriek, and found Dr. Brown in convulsions. Dr. Greer, Coroner, was summoned, but when he reached the station Brown was dead.

There is no doubt that his death was due to strychnine, which must have been cleverly concealed by the prisoner, as he had been carefully searched when arrested.

Disastrous Fire At Brantford, Ont.

Four Story Department Store of E. B. Crompton & Co. Gutted —Loss $175,000 to $200,000—Fully Insured

(Canadian Press Special)

BRANTFORD, March 3—Fire starting in the basement of the E. B. Crompton & Company's four story brick department store, about 11.20 today, swept up through the whole store, causing a loss estimated at $175,000 to $200,000 covered by insurance.

The blaze started in a furnace room and within fifteen minutes it had so spread that the roof at the back gave way and fell in. Every possible line of hose, all the firemen, police and soldiers and many citizens are now fighting the fire, which is being confined to the one block. It is not thought that any lives were lost.

PLOT TO DEPOSE RIO-JANERIO GOVERNOR

(Canadian Press Special)

RIO JANEIRO, March 3.—Several arrests have resulted from the discovery of a plot to depose the Governor of the State of Rio Janeiro, among those involved being sailors on two Brazilian battleships. The movement is believed to be similar to the naval mutiny of 1910.

DR. ROBINSON'S TRIAL IS OPENED AT NAPANEE

Charge of Murdering Miss Blanche Yorke—A Morbidly Eager Crowd—Evidence Submitted as to Girl's Clothes Seen in Office, Finding of Body and of Alleged Bloodstains—New Letter Produced

NAPANEE, March 3.—(Special.)—Interest in the mystery surrounding the death of Blanche ("Happy") Yorke on or about July 8 at Tamworth last year has not slackened. Immense crowds flocked into the town yesterday to attend the opening of the trial of Dr. C. K. Robinson, the young Kingston practitioner who is accused of having murdered her. Mr. Justice Sutherland is presiding over the session. Mr. J. A. Hutcheson, K.C., of Brockville is Crown Prosecutor, while Messrs. T. C. Robinette, K.C., of Toronto and W. S. Herrington, K.C., of Napanee are acting for Robinson.

A morbid, curious and unruly crowd fought for admission into the courthouse. Pandemonium reigned, when the doors were opened. Policemen with drawn batons fought vainly against a struggling mass of humanity eager to gain the "priceless" seats in the courtroom. All available seats being occupied, they crowded the aisles, climbed on the window-sills, sat in the Judge's enclosure, from which they were afterwards forcibly ejected, and sat on the rails of the dock.

Seated alongside the dock was Mrs. C. K. Robinson, heavily veiled, accompanied by brothers and other relatives of the accused. No sooner had his Lordship taken his seat on the Bench than Chief Constable Vankoughnet conducted Robinson to the dock. The crowd instinctively became deathly silent. People stretched their necks to take a fleeting glance at the accused.

Robinson, who pleaded not guilty did not show any traces of his confinement. Taking his seat in the dock, he chatted with his wife and other relatives. During the proceedings he quietly chewed gum and smiled faintly as he saw an artist sketching those prominently connected with the case He appeared quite confident of the outcome of the trial, and entered into eager conversation with his wife after witnesses had stepped out of the box.

The Happenings Reviewed

Following the swearing in of the jury Crown Prosecutor Hutcheson reviewed at length the happenings in connection with the disappearance of Blanche Yorke on July 8 last year, her subsequent death, and the inquest. He stated that the evidence to be submitted was purely circumstantial, and if the prisoner was not found guilty of a capital offence he should probably be convicted of a lesser offence. A life had been lost, and the Crown had seen fit to arraign Dr. C. K. Robinson.

Evidence of Fires and Odors

The Crown Prosecutor informed the jury that evidence would be submitted to show that fires were lit in the furnace of Dr. Robinson's house on July 10, and that strong odors of burning animal matter were smelt by the neighbors. Following this, the jury were informed that the doctor's house was visited by two Tamworth residents to "satisfy the other villagers that the girl was not there," and that the search was unsuccessful. Evidence would also be adduced to prove that Dr. Robinson had attended Miss Yorke for the stomach trouble. Inspector Miller of the Provincial Police and High Constable Vankoughnet also visited Dr. Robinson's house, but found nothing, declared Mr. Hutcheson. He further stated that on the following Wednesday more smoke was emitted from the furnace chimney.

New Letter and Statement

At this point the Crown Prosecutor read a letter addressed to Damond Floyd, a Tamworth dry goods merchant, from Dr. Robinson, which was not made public at the inquest. In the letter, which was postmarked July 18, ten days after the girl was missed, Dr. Robinson asked Floyd to collect certain accounts, gather together his medicine cabinet and diplomas and forward them to 247 Queen street Kingston. The Crown Prosecutor further stated that Robinson had made a statement to Inspector Miller of the Provincial Police, but that the Court would have to decide whether the document was admissible as evidence.

Finding of Bodies

Mr. Hutcheson then reiterated Inspector Greer's story of the finding of the decomposed and mutilated body of a woman identified as Blanche Yorke, and that of a dead baby, in the back cellar of Dr. Robinson's house at Tamworth, also of the discovery of stains on the bed, wall and floor of one of Dr. Robinson's bedrooms, which an expert had declared after analysis were blood stains. The result of the Coroner's autopsy was then explained, and the fact stated that she died from hemorrhage alleged to have been brought on by exterior force.

Was the Girl Murdered?

"By merely proving the death of the girl we do not declare at present that she was murdered," stated Mr. Hutcheson. "The criminal code expressly states that a doctor may perform an operation if he possesses a bona fide belief that such operation will save a patient's life. Under these circumstances it will have to be ascertained whether the girl was operated on with criminal intent. If this girl was operated on without wilful intent to commit a crime, why all this secrecy? That you must investigate. Can you reconcile the two facts and come to the conclusion that an honest attempt was made to save the girl's life. In order to convict Dr. Robinson of murder, it will have to be borne out that he performed an operation on Blanche Yorke with an unlawful object in view which resulted in her death."

Saw Deceased's Clothes in Office

Several witnesses were called during the afternoon. Mrs. Moss of Tamworth testified to having seen a hat and raincoat, said to have been worn by the late Blanche Yorke, hung up in Dr. Robinson's office on July 8. Mr. L. Irving corroborated this evidence, as did Wm. Jamieson, but he could not swear the clothes belonged to Blanche Yorke. Mr. E. Card and Mrs. A. Wagar testified to having seen smoke belching out of the chimney of Dr. Robinson's house on July 15.

Frank Yorke, not a relative of the girl, was placed in the box by the Crown prosecutor. He declared he saw "stealthy movements" around the Robinson home on the night of July 8. He also said he was present when the body of Blanche Yorke was exhumed in the cellar of the Robinson home. Mrs. W. J. Thompson, who did some washing for Dr. Robinson, told the court of the delivery of saturated sheets to her by the doctor, on which she subsequently discovered what she declared to be blood stains.

Girl's Brother's Inquiries

The late Blanche Yorke's brother Samuel told the court of his conversation with Dr. Robinson regarding the disapeparance of his sister. "I asked Dr. Robinson if he had seen my sister on July 8," declared Samuel Yorke, "and he told me he had so many Yorke patients that he didn't know one from the other. The doctor subsequently said she had visited his office on Wednesday night, July 8, and received pills for stomach trouble. Inspector Miller and I again visited the doctor on the 13th of July, when the latter was subjected to further questioning. Robinson then admitted that Blanche was in his office about ninety minutes. Mr. Miller then told him that I was under the impression he had been lying to me. I wondered why he told me he didn't know her, when she, on his own admission, was in his office one and a half hours."

Her Fiance's Testimony

Mr. Don McGregor, the late Blanche Yorke's fiance, corroborated much of the brother's evidence regarding his first visit to Dr. Robinson's house. He told the court that he didn't see Blanche Yorke after July 2. Although he denied any knowledge of the girl's delicate condition, MacGregor stated that he was responsible for it if succ

BRITISH ARMY CONTINUE IN REMARKABLY HEALTHY CONDITION

(Canadian Press Special)

LONDON, March 3.—The British army at home and on foreign service is in a remarkably healthy condition. The low death rate in the army, which began the war with half a million men, and has been raised to two and a half millions, is probably a record. There has not been one death from typhus fever or cholera; only one from smallpox, six from diphtheria, ninety-six from typhoid, twenty-six from scarlet fever, sixty-seven from measles. The report of the Canadians being mowed down by camp sickness is unfounded.

Border Shooting Case at Welland

County Grand Jury To-day Considering Evidence—Trial is Likely

WELLAND, Ont., March 2.—Welland County Grand Jury is this afternoon deliberating in cases of Joseph Delaney, of the Provincial Police, and Corporal Mayo and Privates McIntosh and Kinsman, who are charged with the killing of Charles Smith, a duck hunter from Buffalo, on the Niagara River some weeks ago. A bill will be returned by the jury some time this evening.

Smith and a companion were out on the Niagara River shooting ducks and came too close to the Canadian shore in contravention of the Canadian laws. The guards on the river bank saw the men in their boat and fired at them. It is claimed that they fired more to frighten the hunters than anything else. At any rate a bullet struck Smith in the forehead, killing him instantly. His companion was slightly injured. That Delaney ordered them to shoot will be the defense of the soldiers.

The case has been the subject of correspondence between the Washington and Ottawa Governments.

Killed While Working on Church

Marcus Thickron of Port Granby—Gust of Wind Swayed Building and Sent Him to Ground

PORT HOPE, Mar. 2.—Marcus Thickson was instantly killed last evening about five o'clock while tearing down an old church at Port Granby. Deceased, with his two brothers, had been working at the building all day and had made splendid progress. While engaged near the gable end a heavy gust of wind came up and that portion of the building swayed. The deceased jumped forward to escape the danger but was unable to get far enough. The crash came and he was pinned under the debris. His brothers had no difficulty in drawing him from underneath the mass of wood, but life was extinct, death being almost instantaneous. Deceased's chest was badly crushed and the base of his skull fractured.

The late Mr. Thickson was a quiet industrious man and the news of his tragic death will be learned with much regret by a large circle of friends. He was a member of the Canton Orange Lodge and took a very deep interest in the work. To mourn his loss he leaves a widow and one young son.

FIGHTING A LOSING GAME ALONG ENTIRE EASTERN FRONT

Situation of Austrians in Carpathians Unsatisfactory, While Russians Have Definitely Checked Them in Eastern Galicia—Four Ships Shell Interior Forts

(Canadian Press Special)

LONDON, March 3.—According to what appears to be the unanimous opinion of British observers, Germany and Austria are fighting a losing game along almost the entire eastern front. The situation of the Austrians in the Carpathians, judging from official and unofficial despatches from Petrograd, would appear to be unsatisfactory, while the Russians, it is said, have definitely checked them in Eastern Galicia. Furthermore, London advices continue to relate success of greater or lesser degree for the Russian forces in Poland operating against the armies of Field Marshal Von Hindenburg.

The Allied Fleet again bombarded the Dardanelles forts, according to despatches from Athens, but the British Press Bureau has not confirmed this report. The Athens message says four ships shelled the interior forts from the Gulf of Saros and that anxiety at Constantinople is increasing.

Strangulation of Germany Now is Inevitable

This is Washington View of Allies' Reprisal on German Submarine Warfare

"The measure in question has for its object the shortening of the war by increasing the difficulties of the enmy, and it is a justifiable step in war, if impartially enforced against all neutral ships."

This from Bismark, dealing with a similar situation, reveals the highest German authority justifying the extreme measures now announced by the allies. If as a result of these measures neutral commerce is temorarily embarrassed, this embarrassment will be more than compensated for by the earlier cessation of hostilities, since, with their ending neutral commerce will be freed of all shackles and will once more come into its own.

THAW CASE LEADS TO NEW LEGISLATION

Proposal Dealing With Cases of Insanity is Before the Washington House

WASHINGTON, March 2.—Enactment of legislation by the various states under which a citizen of one state acquitted in another of a crime on the ground of insanity may be allowed to return to his home state, and providing against detention in an asylum merely upon the order of a judge without a jury trial, is urged i na resolution introduced to-day by Representative Porter of Pennsylvania.

The object of the proposed legislation is to cover similar cases to that of Harry K. Thaw, who for more than six years has been endeavoring to get out of Matteawan Asylum in New York and return to his home state of Pennsylvania.

Representative Porter said he had interested himself in the matter in response to the numerous petitions to Congress urging legislation.

Carried 16 Men As Shells Came

Hamilton ex-Constable Mentioned in Despatches by Sir John French

HAMILTON, Ont., Mar. 2.—The conspicuous bravery and gallantry for which Constable Finlayson was mentioned in despatches by General French consisted in carrying sixteen wounded French soldiers from a blazing building, which was being heavily shelled by the Germans. He also took two wounded officers from one of the French trenches to a hospital two miles distant. Chief Smith received word to this effect today.

ALLIES HOLD FIRST LINE OF GERMAN TRENCHES NEAR PERTHES

(Canadian Press Special)

PARIS, March 3.—This afternoon's official communication says there is nothing of importance to add to last night's communication. In Champagne we hold the entire first line of German trenches from a point northwest of Perthes to the north of Beausejour, and at several points we have progressed beyond this line. The progress at various points which was reported yesterday is confirmed. This progress has been maintained everywhere. There has been cannonading in the Argonne. On the rest of the front there is nothing to report.

Only Ten Rescued From Pocahontas

HINTON, West Va., March 3.—Up to the present only ten men have been rescued from the mine of the Pocahontas Coal Company. One hundred and sixty three are still entombed, and it may be days before the workings are explored.

DIES AT AGE OF HUNDRED AND EIGHT

BESSEMER, Alabama, March 2.—Asa Goodwin, said to be the oldest man in Albama, died here yesterday in the eve of his 108th birthday of pneumonia. Goodwin was born in Georgia in 1807. He has 74 grandchildren, 227 great grandchildren and 15 great great grandchildren. Mr. Goodwin formerly was a noted wild turkey hunter and killed his last turkey when 101.

BILL IS WITHDRAWN FROM RAILWAY BOARD

Delegation From Belleville At Ottawa re. C.N.O.R. St. Crossing —City's Case Presented in an Unanswerable Manner —Proposed Bill Will Not be Presented to Parliament

Mayor Panter, Ex-Mayor Wills and City Engineer Evans, of this city, were in Ottawa yesterday and attended a meeting of the Railway Committee, in connection with the House of Commons. Sir Mackenzie Bowell, Hon. H. Corby, Mr. E. Guss Porter, K.C., M.P. for West Hastings and Mr. W. B. Northrup, K.C., M.P., for East Hastings were also present.

The Committee had under consideration a bill to confirm all agreements between the Canadian Northern and Ontario Railway and the City of Belleville, relative to street crossings, etc. If this bill had been allowed to pass it would mean that the present condition of the track crossing, certain streets would remain as they are at present, whereas there are many objections to them. This objection was pointed out by members of the delegation from the city, and was strongly supported by Mr. Porter and others. The result of the meeting was that the Bill was withdrawn from the Committee and will not be presented to Parliament.

Mayor Panter and other members of the delegation are much pleased at the result of their visit and are naturally giving high praise to our representative, Mr. Porter, who has taken a deep interest in the matter on behalf of the city.

Will Require Four Hundred Doctors

TORONTO, Mar. 2.—The War Office yesterday accepted the offer of the University of Toronto Medical Faculty to furnish and equip a hospital of 1,040 beds, and a committee consisting of President R. A. Falconer, Dean C. K. Clarke of the Medical Faculty, and Lieut.-Cols. J. T. Fotheringham and J. A. Roberts, was appointed at a meeting of the Medical Faculty to complete the plans. Miss Gunn, secretary of the Canadian Association of Trained Nurses, left last night for Ottawa to make arrangements regarding the nurses to accompany the hospital. The 400 doctors required will betaken from the University of Toronto and hospitals affiliated with it. The hospital will be financed by private individuals. It will cost about $100,000, and the salaries of the nurses alone will cost about $100,000, at the rate of $3.25 a day.

Four Lives Lost in Fire

(Canadian Press Special)

QUEBEC, March 3.—Four lives were lost in a fire in Saint Sauveur ward early this morning which destroyed a house occupied by the Talbot and Drouin families. Drouin, with his wife and five children escaped through the window. Arthur Talbot, with his three year old daughter, escaped by jumping through a second story window, burned and bruised. His wife's sister and brother were rescued with difficulty by firemen. The victims are: Mrs. Arthur Talbot and three sons, Arthur, aged nine; Paul, aged six, and Henri, nine months.

SILVERWARE FOUND IN TRUNKS AT STATION

MONTREAL, March 2.—Three trunks of silverware stolen in Winnipeg, Man., and "imported" to Montreal, were seized yesterday by Detectives, and shortly after the "importer" himself was taken into custody.

A telegram was received from Chief Constable McPherson of Winnipeg by the Detective Department here early yesterday morning, saying that Wilbroid Poisson was wanted on a charge of theft, and that it was believed the man had come to Montreal.

It was stated that Poisson was travelling with three trunks, which were believed to contain his personal belongings. When the train pulled into the Windsor Station, sure enough, the three trunks were found, and on being opened they were found to contain several thousands of dollars worth of silverware.

The accused had travelled on the same train, but took the precaution to disembark at Montreal West. It was apparently his intention to find a suitable boarding house, to which he would send the trunks. He was, therefore, looking over several places which might suit his purpose. Poisson was just emerging from a likely rooming house which he had selected when he walked into the arms of detectives.

CHARTER FOR NEW BANK.

MONTREAL, March 2—It is reported that the "Colonial Bank", which, as announced in a despatch from Ottawa on Saturday morning, is applying for a Dominion charter, is backed by the interests behind the English bank of the same name. The Colonial Bank of London has a large connection in the West Indies and at one time it appeared likely that negotiations for its purchase by the Royal Bank of Canada would be successful. Later there was talk of the Colonial Bank entering Canada by taking over the business of Banque Internationale; nothing came of that. Closer trade relations between Canada and the West Indies may be an influence in the reported new move to acquire a Canadian charter.

BELLEVILLE

Paymaster McAdams of Ottawa was in the city yesterday and his presence to say the least, was much appreciated by the men, who have enlisted.

A large number of the enlisters here were yesterday inoculated and as a result, were today feeling the effects of the operation.

Lieut.-Col. Ketcheson received word on Saturday that recruiting for the 39th Battalion should cease, and the order was immediately put into force. Yesterday he received word that recruiting for the 39th Battalion is to be resumed. The reason for the rescinding of Saturday's order is not known.

Jack Munro, a brother to the prize fighter, is a member of the 45th overseas contingent stationed at Lindsay armories. His brother, who was mayor of Cochrane, New Ontario, joined the forces several months ago and is now in the firing line with the Princess Patricias.

Members of the 15th and 49th regiments, who have enlisted, were today after the roll call, instructed in rifle and other drill.

It is confidently expected that uniforms will be issued in a few days to the members of the 15th and 49th regiments, who have enlisted here. The uniforms have arrived, and are in store at the Pinnacle street school building.

BELLEVILLE LIFE UNDERWRITERS BANQUETTED AT THE QUINTE

The local Life Underwriters' Association held a very pleasant banquet at the Quinte Tuesday evening, at which Mr. A. J. Meiklejohn of Ottwa, the President of the Life Underwriters' Association of Canada, was the guest. Besides the representatives of the several different companies doing business in this vicinity, there were present also Dr. Boyce, one of the local medical examiners, and Mr. Moffatt, manager of the Union Bank. A very pleasant hour was spent at dinner, after which the members retired to a committee room and with President S. Burrows in the chair, the local association listened with much interest to the address of the Dominion President.

Mr. Meiklejohn opened his address with a comparison of the condition in life insurance work to-day as compared with a few years ago, and pointed out that the improved conditions were due largely to the association movement. Life insurance men to-day have outgrown the old bitter spirit in competition, and have as their motto good professional service to their clients. As a result the attitude of the public toward insurance had much improved, and a much larger volume of business was being annually produced. The speaker suggested the advisability of joint action by the association in support of such public interests as conservation of health and life, good sanitation, education and other problems so closely allied with the work of the institution of life insurance.

The attitude of the Provinical Legislatures towards the taxation of life insurance premiums was referred to briefly but very pointedly by the speaker. Strong objection was raised to such taxation on ground that since insurance premiums represented that altruistic thrift and economy that saved the Government from expeditures for poor-houses, penitentiaries, and charitable institutions, they should be the last subjects for taxation. This tax or premium, is a tax on savings in the fond delusion that the "wealthy corporations" are being made to pay. Instead it is the thrift of the poor man who is struggling to save his family, in case of death, from the cold breath of charity, that has to pay the piper. The executives of the insurance companies instead of being "traitors" to the realm, are merely trustees of public moneys, their functions being to collect, invest and accumulate on the one hand, and to disburse when the time comes, and the trust is fulfilled, on the other. By such taxation incomes are taxed twice; first as incomes, and then as savings in the form of premiums. In Great Britain the portion of income spent in insurance premiums is freed from taxation. In the Province of Ontario, out of every $100 paid in premiums $1.75 goes out into the Provincial treasury.

Some comparatively new fields of insurance usefulness were briefly referred to; such as insurance for business purposes constituting a striking fund for the future contingency of the death of a partner or the head of a corporation; insurance as an efficient means of arranging bequests to public institutions; annuities, and the conservation of old business by taking paid up insurance instead of cash values.

Dr. Boyce also spoke along the lines of conservation, medical examination and kindred aspects of the subject, while Mr. Moffatt discussed the financial interests. After this there was a general discussion of President Meiklejohn's suggestions.

Y.M.C.A. GIRLS BLANKED BY HIGH SCHOOL TEAM

At the Arena last evening, between the hours of 7 and 8, one of the fastest games of the season, so a spectator was heard to remark, was played when the Y.M.C.A. girls and the High School met to decide which was the best team, and the High School girls, although perhaps a little smaller than the Y.M. products, came out on top by the score of 6 to 0.

The girls were after the puck all the time, and although the score was a little one-sided, the play was interesting to watch to the number of supporters of both teams. At half time the score was 4 to 0 and the final score 6 to 0, although the Y.M.C.A. claim it was 5 to 0. Mr. White refereed the game, and got through with his life intact, which is saying a lot. Following is the line-up:

Y.M.C.A.—Goal, Miss E. Ford; defence, Miss C. Leavens, Miss M. Sharpe; rover, Miss M. Waters; center, F. Archibald; wings, Miss Flossie Stafford, Miss Pearl Ruttan.

High School—Goal, Miss McCarthy; defence, Miss H. Thompson, Miss G. Panter; rover, Miss R. Sinclair; center, Miss H. Manley; wings, Miss V. Currie, Miss K. Manley.

The return game between these two teams will be played on Saturday, and the Y.M.C.A. girls, are confident that on Saturday that they can turn the table.

DESERONTO VS. ALL STARS

Don't forget the game at the skating arena tonight between the Deseronto and the All-Star team of Belleville. It will be worh seeing—and hearing.

WHITBY 7 O. B. C. 3

The game at Whitby last night between the O.B.C. ladies of Belleville, and a like team of that town, resulted in a win by Whitby, by a score of 7-3. It was up-to-date alright, but the home girls had struck a pace about fifty per cent. faster than that of their late visit to Belleville, hence the win. This game gives Whitby one goal to the good on the round. And they earned it.

MELVILLE.

The home of Mr. and Mrs. John Kinnear was the scene of a pretty wedding on Thursday, Feb. 25th when their elder daughter, Miss Mabel Gertrude, was united in marriage to Mr. Lewis Wellbridge of Huff's Island, Rev. E. H. Harston officiating. Mr. Fred Morton played the wedding march, the bridal couple, who were unattended, taking their places before an arch of evergreen and smilax intertwined with white. The bride, who was given away by her father, was charming in a dress of white silk crepe trimmed with lace and pearls and carried a bouquet of white carnations and roses, her only ornament being a necklace of amethysts and pearls, the gift of the groom. After the ceremony the guests, numbering about twenty-five, sat down to a sumptuous wedding dinner, the tables being artistically decorated with carnations, roses and ferns. Amid showers of confetti the bride and groom left for Belleville, where they entrained for New York City, where they will spend their honeymoon.

Chase, assisted by Miss Osborne, Miss Chase and Miss Harston in a full chorus, won the approval of all. A paper on "Health" was read by Mrs. C. H. THE CONFLICT IN THE DARDANELLES

The greatest fleet of warships ever assembled for battle is now engaged in the narrow strait between the Aegean Sea and the Sea of Marmora in forcing its way through to Constantinople. Thus far these ships of the allied powers fighting the Turks and their German supporters have been entirely successful. Three days ago they silenced and destroyed the four forts at and near the entrance to the Dardanelles, one of which, at the south-western point, was provided a dozen years ago with Krupp guns which were said to be the most powerful ever made. Monday night it was reported from Athens that they had since silenced some of the inner forts on the European side and were operating as far up the straits as Fort Kilid Bahr.

The power of even the most modern guns in the Turkish forts apparently counted for nothing in comparison with those of the newest English Dreadnought, the Queen Elezabeth, which send projectiles weighing a ton fully twenty miles: some reports say nearly thirty, but twenty miles is a far shot. One shell from Fort Sedd-el-Bahr, and only one, did much damage, according to the accounts of the action thus far received; it hit the battleship Agamemnon at 11,000 yards, killing three men and wounding five. In the further advance through the strait, however, after sweeping up the mines, the fleet is bound to encounter further perils and will probably suffer some loss. The new German fortifications at Nagara point and on an island in the Sea of Marmora, may not be so easily passed.

But that they will be passed and demolished, and that Constantinople will soon fall into the hands of the Allies, is not doubted by the military and political authorities at London and Paris, says The New York Times. It is safe to infer that a tremendous operation like this, entered upon with no undue haste, but obviously after careful consideration, would not have been undertaken without reasonable assurance of a triumph. That triumph will mean much. The very beginning of the operations has opened a new phase of the war, and the announcement yesterday by England and France of an embargo on all shipping to and from Germany may well be coupled with the Dardanelles action as a step which must quicken the progress of the great conflict of nations and lead to some definite result.

The capture of Constantinople will mean the extinction of Turkish rule in Europe and the collapse for all time of German plans for Asiatic dominion. It will not only check the Turks' plan to invade Egypt, but will stop all German supplies to the Turkish troops in Asia Minor and afford a free passage from Black Sea ports of vast stores of grain and oil, to the great betterment of Russian finances and the substantial relief of the Allies and neutral nations. There will be no more talk of fresh accessions to the alliance of Turks and Germans. Apart from the object of the naval warfare now going on in the Dardanelles and the far-reaching effects of a victory for the Allies, the engagement in its present stage is of tremendous interest as the greatest of its kind ever fought. The latest results of modern naval architecture and armament are being put to the supreme test. In this view, the defeat and destruction of well-armed forts at the mouth of the Dardanelles are particularly signficant.

THE BLOCKADE

It will be noticed, in announcing the reply of the Allies to Germany's submarine campaign of piracy and pillage, Mr. Asquith, in declaring that henceforth all ships taking goods to or from Germany would be "detained" and taken into port, which means the absolute strangulation of German commerce, added the important clause that "it is not intended to confiscate such vessels or their cargoes unless they, for other reasons, are liable to confiscation." This is where the difference between the policy now announced and that universally accepted as a blockade comes in, for it has always been admitted by all civilized nations that a breach of blockade involves confiscation of the ship and also of the cargo, if the owner of the cargo is the owner of the ship, or if cognisant of the intended violation.

That the trade of neutral nations with Germany will suffer goes without saying, but that is one of the inevitable consequences of war. No neutral can expect the Allies to accord to Germany rights which Germany has denied the Allies. Britain does not threaten to assassinate any neutral daring to approach within fifty miles of Germany, as Germany has threatened—and is trying to do—in regard to Britain. She says that Germany shall not be allowed to draw supplies from outside. Neutrals who might feel inclined to be disgruntled at this must remember that if Britain were to lie down under the German submarine "blockade," they would find their trade vastly more disturbed than it will be by the policy Britain now announces. An absolute blockade of Great Britain would dislocate the trade and finances of the entire world and cause panic and disaster in every land. That is why prices on Wall Street drop on the announcement of a German success and rise with every indication favorable to the Allies.

The course now announced will materially help in hastening the end of the war and will thus be to the ultimate benefit of all concerned, the neutrals in particular.

CURRENT COMMENT

From April on, the war will cost Britain ten million dollars a day. But it's a long, long way to the bottom of John Bull's pocket.

The latest report to the post office says to address letters to "First Contingent, British Expeditionary Force," army post office, London, Eng."

The Germans have a machine that sprays blazing liquid upon their enemies and the French are said to have a shell that spreads a poisonous gas. This war knows no humanities.

There will be no Bisley meet this year, it is announced. The Empire's shots will not suffer because of that. Most of them, and a host of others, are at war, where there is practice to be had at genuine targets.

Ottawa Journal: "All stories of the fighting in the war bear tribute to the deadly efficiency of machine-guns. If we in this country are up to snuff, we ought to see to it that our troops are liberally equipped with machine-guns, and trained well to use them."

Hamilton Herald: "As was expected, the Canadian soldiers have behaved well in the trenches. When men volunteer to fight and travel thousands of miles for the express purpose of fighting, they are not likely to funk when fighting time comes."

According to a despatch via Reuter's news agency, bridge and dominoes are forbidden in the clubs in Petrograd. If this reform movement keeps on in the Czar's Empire, after a while the Russians will not be allowed to do anything but fight in the army.

Ottawa Citizen: "A Berlin baker has produced a new sort of German war bread which contains neither wheat, rye flour, barley nor oatmeal. He thus takes rank with the scientist who invented the meatless railway depot sandwich and the oysterless hotel stew."

The Cornwall Board of Trade has decided to enter upon a vigorous publicity campaign, the desire being to attract industries, especially after the war. A championship lacrosse team for 1915 might prove at least a good advertisement for the hustling factory town and "cradle of Canada's national game."

Buffalo Express: "Lloyd George intimates that if Germany whips Great Britain, the United States would be the next to be attacked. Perhaps a similar result would follow a British triumph." Deep down in its heart The Express knows the future safety and liberty of the world at large depends upon Britain's triumph.

MOTHER RESTORED TO HER FAMILY

Jackson, Miss.:—"I shall feel repaid for writing this letter if I can help any tired, worn-out mother or housekeeper to find health and strength as I have.

"I have a family of five, sew, cook and do my housework and I became very much run-down in health. I had indigestion and stomach pains and headaches. Often I would be in bed for several days at a time, and before I took Vinol I tried too many remedies to mention, without benefit. A friend asked me to try Vinol. I did so and before I had taken one bottle noticed a big improvement. Now I am well and strong and my old time energy has been restored. Vinol has no superior as a tonic for worn-out, run-down, tired mothers or housekeepers."—Mrs. J. N. MELTON, Jackson, Miss.

We ask every tired, care-worn, run-down, nervous man or woman in this vicinity to try Vinol, our delicious cod liver and iron tonic without oil, and they too will soon be able to say that Vinol has built them up and made them strong. Remember, we will return your money if it fails to benefit.

What War Means to Liverpool

Old Montreal Steamship Official Describes Conditions in Big British Port

MONTREAL, March 2.—Conditions at Liverpool during the war time were graphically described in a letter received by a leading steamship company official here yesterday from a steamship man who was for years in a prominent position on the harbor front of Montreal, and is now engaged in a similar capacity at Liverpool. For obvious reasons it is not advisable to mention his name.

"We have had no end of ships here", he said in his letter, "the total, going as high as 23 at a time. And as the docks are frightfully congested, and labor is very scarce, it is most difficult to get the work done. Ships have been sailing any old time, not even the mail boats being exempt. Then the Admiralty people step in just when they bally well choose, and have commandeered vessels whenever it suited them. We have even had to discharge a vessel when she has been fully loaded and ready to sail because they wanted her.

'They had monopolized the coal tips and graving docks when it suited them, and swiped the coal, even when it has been alongside vessels, ready to go into their bunkers, because it has been wanted for a transport, and all the reply you get is: 'The Government requires it.' This is war, and you can see we have had a rosy time.

"You should be here to see what war conditions really are, and how everything has to give way to the successful prosecution of the war to a victorious end. Nothing else matters here.

"Lots of fellows have gone out of our offices from the different departments, and there are very few young men to be seen about Liverpool who are not in khaki.

"Shiploads after shiploads of guns and ammunition are leaving here every week for the Continent, and shiploads in numbers are coming here and being trans-shipped to France.

"Transports are arriving from all parts of the globe, bringing regulars that have been stationed abroad, from India, Egypt, Mauritius, West Africa and goodness only knows where. They land mostly at night and are gone away, by train, heaven only knows where, before sunrise, and more than two-thirds of the people in Liverpool never know a thing about it.

"It is a very different thing to the Boer war, I can tell you, and only those interested in shipping here know anything about the immense work that is really going on around them."

Submarine Chased Canadian Ship

Elder-Dempster Liner "Kawarra" Had Narrow Escape from German Craft—Was Headed for Shore

MONTREAL, March 2.—To have been chased by a German submarine within a few miles of the British coast, and to get away safely after an exciting pursuit, was the unusual experience of Capt. D. S. Davies, of the Elder Dempster Line steamer Kawarra, now at Halifax. For some time Capt. Davies expected that he would land in boats on the Irish coast, with his vessel at the bottom of the Irish Sea, the victim of a German torpedo, but by a combination of plucky seamanship and the fortunate fact that the machinery on the German submarine apparently broke down, he was able to make a clean getaway and bring his vessel safely to port.

Capt. Davies, in a letter to the Elder Dempster officials here, gives a graphic account of his warlike experiences.

"We had rather an exciting time on this trip," says Capt. Davies. "On the second day out from Liverpool, 20 miles off Quslar Rock, we were stopped by a British patrol steamer and ordered to turn back. The commander of the patrol warship said he was chasing a German submarine, so we started back at full speed.

"After we had had been going back for about half an hour I suddenly saw a submarine rise to the surface about two miles away. I said to myself, 'Well, the good old Kawarra is finished this time', and ordered all the boats get ready.

"I turned the ship around and started off full speed for the Irish coast, so that I would have less distance to pull the boats if he sank us. However, something seemed to have gone wrong, and the submarine did not come farther after us.

"Shortly afterwards a thick fog came up, and we lost sight of the submarine, which was a great relief to all of us. It is my belief that it was a German submarine, and that something happened to its machinery. Probably it was the one that sank the British steamer off the Mersey the day before we sailed."

After his exciting experiences within the war zone, Capt. Davies got his vessel safely out of danger, and arrived at Halifax last week-end with his cargo.

STANDARD RELIANCE CO. SHAREHOLDERS MEET

Fifty shareholders were present from all parts of the Province at the annual meeting of the Standard Reliance Mortgage Corporation held at Toronto, March 1st. The meeting was the second annual of the company as now constituted, although its chief component part, the former Standard Loan Company, dates back to 1873. A report of the meeting appears in another column. Several items of a gratifying nature were brought out, probably the most important to shareholders being the increase of $245,000 to the company's debentures owned in Ontario.

Net earnings reported to the shareholders showed that in this particular department the company, owing to the war, had marked time, but a substantial gain in assets, outside of those added through the absorption of the Sun & Hastings Savings & Loan Company of Ontario, showed that the directors had concerned themselves with strengthening the position of the company.

At the directors' meeting, which followed and from which only the Earl of [illegible] was absent, Sir Mackenzie Bowell was elected Honorary President, and Dr. John T. Gilmour, W. [illegible] Fawcett and Rev. Amos Campbell, E. B. [illegible] were added to the board.

Rheumatism, A Sneaking Disease Has At Last Met Its Conqueror

THROBBING MUSCLES AND SWOLLEN JOINTS MADE WELL

RUB ON NERVILINE

At first only a grumbling pain is felt. But, alas, it settles in the joints and muscles, and finally tortures its victims.

Today the disease may be in the muscles of the back, thigh, shoulder or neck—tomorrow in the joints of the hand, toes, arms or legs it may work with redoubled fury.

Because other remedies have failed, don't be discouraged. Nerviline has cured the worst of cases. It has brought health to those in the deepest despair, has ended years of awful suffering for those who never hoped to be well again.

There is a marvellous healing power in Nerviline which it derives from the extracts and juices of certain rare herbs and roots. It allays almost magically the awful pain that only rheumatics can describe.

Congestion is drawn out of the muscles, stiffened joints are eased and limbered up, the old time feeling of depression is cast off, and once again Nerviline brings the sufferer to buoyant, vigorous lasting good health.

Every home needs good old Nerviline, needs it for earache, toothache, headache, neuralgia, lumbago, sciatica, stiff neck, chest colds and sore throat. Wherever there is pain, congestion or inflammation, Nerviline will cure it.

"Roland" of Ghent Cathedral.

"Roland" is the alarm bell in the belfry of Ghent cathedral, and on it is engraved an inscription which may be thus translated: "My name is Roland; when I toll there is fire, and when I ring there is victory in the land." The bell has been immortalized by Longfellow in his poem "The Belfry of Bruges:".

Brutality at the Bar.

Cross examination by lawyers is much less severe today than it used to be. Sergeant Ballantine once cross examined the defendant in a civil action in England so fiercely that after a quarter of an hour of the ordeal she fell down flat in the witness box and could not be further questioned. Chief Justice Erie, summing up, described Ballantine's cross examination as "an exhibition of brute force which I have never seen before in a court of justice and hope never to see again."

"Madam," half a dozen men hastened to assure her, "this is the smoking car."

"I know it," she said, calmly seating herself, "but I am sure the men in here are more polite than they are in the car ahead. I couldn't get a seat at all in there. I don't mind the cigars, either. They're better than my husband smokes."

Oysters.

When in their natural condition oysters contain from one-eighth to one-fifth more nutritive material than when fattened. Speaking roughly, a quart of oysters contains on an average about the same quantity of actual nutritive substance as a quart of milk, or three-fourths of a pound of beef, or two pounds of fresh codfish, or a pound of bread. Oysters come nearer to milk than almost any other common food material as regards both the amounts and the relative proportions of nutrients.

AN OLD CURMUDGEON

He Was Alone in a Strange Land.

By F. A. MITCHEL

I met in Lucerne an old fellow named Markland, and he proved to me the Old Man of the Sea, who, having once got himself seated on the shoulder of Sindbad the Sailor, could not be shaken off. Arriving at a hotel, I entered my name and residence in the register, and the landlord, noticing the U. S. A., said to me:

"I see that you are from America. There is a fellow countryman of yours here who is ill. He has just asked me if any American is in the hotel, and if so he begged me to ask him to come to his room."

Realizing what it is to be sick and alone in a foreign country, I went at once to the man's room. I found an old man in bed. His name was Markland—so I found out later—and he hailed from Chicago. He appeared to be ill, but I fancied that his speech was not really gruff.

"Oh, you're here, are you?" he growled. "Fine lot of countrymen I have to leave me to die in a foreign land. I suppose you're not quite so hard hearted as the rest or you wouldn't have come."

Some persons at this reception from a stranger would have turned and walked away. I am of a different kind. To flatter me is repulsive to me. Grumbling frankness affects me favorably. I replied with equal brusqueness:

"Well, if you want anything out of me say so right away."

He looked at me for a moment, then said:

"Do you speak French or German?"

"I can talk in French."

"Well, get me a doctor and act as interpreter."

I brought the doctor and stood by the old man's bedside translating his symptoms and, when the doctor went away, procured the medicine prescribed. Mr. Markland ordered me about as if I were his paid servant. It didn't trouble me. I was rather amused. But occasionally I would turn upon him and tell him that if he didn't shut up I would have him carried away to a hospital. This was the only thing that impressed him.

For a week I permitted myself to be victimized in this fashion; then one day I told him that I was about to leave him.

"Oh, I suppose you must be paid to stay," he said. "How much do you want?"

I laughed.

"Nonsense!" I replied. "Do you think I could be hired to wait on such a curmudgeon as you? But I won't leave you—at least, not just now. I haven't seen all the sights of this place yet. I'll drop in on you occasionally during the coming week."

I did some sightseeing, but the principal part of my time was taken up with Mr. Markland. When he felt better than usual he would talk to me, and so intelligently that I was delighted. I was a young man with young ideas, and his experience, his evident ability to pick the meat out of questions, his knowledge of human nature, fascinated me. After getting this insight into his makeup I was better satisfied to devote myself to him. Becoming curious as to who and what he was, I one day asked him about himself.

"Have you a family?"

"Family? Yes—a devil of a family too."

"You mean you are the devil and they are the family."

"If you know more about my affairs than I do why do you ask me about 'em?"

"True. Well, tell me about your family. Why aren't they here taking care of you?"

"Because in the first place they wouldn't come, and in the second place I wouldn't have 'em if they would."

"That's the case in a nutshell."

"I've got a daughter that I would and could have with me if I were mean enough to impose such a burden upon her."

"I'm pleased to find one redeeming trait in you," I replied. "Judging from what I have learned, you would make it hot for her."

"I'd make it hot for any one, just as any one would make it hot for me. Young man, do you know that this is a world full of pure selfishness? We are of the brute creation—brutal. All the soft things we say to one another are pure palaver. The French are the only people in the world that I respect. They are so confounded polite that they know they're stuffing one another and don't attempt to conceal it. We Americans don't give so much taffy, because we know a surfeit won't go down."

This spending my time over an old grumbler, who was evidently at enmity with the whole human race, was ridiculous. One day I told him I would not trouble myself any longer; I was about to go on down into Italy.

"Well, why don't you go?" he growled.

I looked into his eye as he lay there on his bed, suffering and alone, and saw that his heart belied his words. I hadn't the will to desert him.

He grew worse after this, and one day he said to me:

"Get me a lawyer. I want to make a will."

"Oh, you're not going to die," I replied, with a view to cheer him.

"I reckon I know more about that than you do. Get me one of those things they call a notary in this country. But before you go bring me pen and paper."

I brought the articles, then went for a notary. When we reached the sick man he had written his will. All he wanted of any one else was to help execute the instrument.

"You'd better put in a thousand dollars for me," I said, "as some recompense for what I've endured from you."

"I thought you said you wouldn't be hired to take care of me?" he snapped.

"So I did. You needn't put it in. I was only joking."

"I've left you a hundred dollars, and that's more than you've been worth to me."

"Just so," I replied, and, seeing that he was in agony both of mind and body, I went to his bedside and placed my hand on his brow. He closed his eyes, and I knew that I had soothed him.

He did just what I feared he would do—died in a foreign land with no kin to make any arrangements for him. But he left written instructions for me. I was to place his body in a vault and cable his sister to come to Lucerne.

I took care to examine the clothing of the deceased, and I found a gold chain and locket. I removed both and opened the locket. Within was the miniature likeness of a young girl with a very sweet face. I could see some resemblance to the man I had nursed. This doubtless was the daughter upon whom he was not "mean enough" to impose the burden of his care. I took the locket and chain and placed them carefully in my trunk.

Having attended to everything concerning my late friend—for had I not felt friendly toward him I should not have sacrificed myself for him—I went on down into Italy, leaving word at the hotel for his sister when she arrived where a letter would reach me. The old man had said he had left me a hundred dollars in his will, and I needed it, for it would make up what I had paid to the landlord for board. I was at Milan when I received a letter from the old man's sister, Miss Markland, asking me to come to Lucerne at once. I was rather put out at this, for I saw no reason for my spending any more time on the affairs of strangers. So I wrote that I could see no necessity for my return. I did not mention that if a hundred dollars had been left me by her brother she could send me a check for it, but I presumed that she would do so.

To this letter I received a reply that her brother's will had been opened and I was a beneficiary. It was certainly to my interest to come to Lucerne.

It seemed a good deal of trouble for me to take to secure so small a sum which could as well be forwarded to me, but that I should not seem ungracious at a time of mourning I returned to Lucerne. On my arrival I sent up my card to Miss Markland and was received by an old lady and a young girl whom I at once recognized as the original of the likeness in the locket I had taken off. The elder woman bowed to me formally, but the younger one came toward me, her eyes filled with tears, and, taking my hand, pressed it warmly.

"I cannot express my gratitude," she said, "to you for your marvelous kindness to poor, dear papa."

"I am sorry I could not have done more for him," I replied; "that he could not have been spared to you."

I had not considered the matter as a special kindness on my part, but was glad for what I had done on this girl's account.

"And I am so glad," continued the young lady, "that papa was able to make an acknowledgment of the debt he owed you."

I remembered the $100, but did not consider this any acknowledgment since my stay with the testator had cost me much more. I was at a loss for a reply when the aunt spoke up:

"Are you aware of the amount my brother has left you?"

"He told me he had bequeathed me $100, but if it will not be convenient"—

The expression on my face denoted bewilderment.

"I assure you," continued the young lady, "that I am pleased with the bequest, though I think that since you and not I took care of him you and not I should inherit the bulk of his property."

"You are speaking in riddles," I said.

"My brother," said Miss Markland senior, "left a property of a million dollars or more. He left his daughter Grace all except $100,000, to be yours. You are also named executor of his estate."

My astonishment surely cleared me of any charge of exercising undue influence over the testator to secure an inheritance. Indeed, I declined to believe the statement until I was shown the will. Then I declined to accept the legacy.

But from this point begins a sequel to my story, which is a story in itself and would require much more room to tell than this one. I eventually married the younger Miss Markland, so it made very little difference whether the property stood in her name or mine.

I learned that her father was a character. The only truth he had told about himself was that he would not inflict his care on the daughter he loved better than his own comfort. He was considered quite a remarkable man in his prime and had he not been overgenerous would have left a far larger fortune than he did.

Blockade Brings Decline in Wheat

Drop of Over Seven Cents Greets Premier Asquith's Announcements

CHICAGO,O March. 1.—A drop of seven and one-half cents in wheat, as a tribute to the prestige of Great Britain's power on the seas, greeted the announcement by Premier Asquith in the House of Commons today of a blockade in force on all the coasts of her enemies. First the demolition of the forts on the Dardanelles struck their blow, and from the opening at 151 prices began at once to drop. Noon was 149 3-4 with 148 the lowest point then touched. Even more noticeable response attended the remarks of Premier Asquith, however, and just before the close some sales showed a drop of as much as 7 1-2 cents. May touched as low as 146 at the close.

Saucy Cub Bears Bagged By Hunters

Mother and Youngsters Were Enjoying a Sunbath When Surprised

APSLEY, March 1.—While engaged in a fox hunt on Friday last, Messrs. Hugh and Will Jones captured two fine cub bears. The latter had advanced into a swamp some 600 yards from where his brother was, when suddenly he beheld a huge bear and her two offsprings, enjoying a sun bath in front of their den.

Having no fire arms with him the hunter thiught it advisable to hold no discussion with Mistress Bruin and family but go and summon his brother to the scene.

He had only gone a few paces when, to his surprise Mistress Bruin was close in pursuit. However, he hurriedly climbed a nearby tree, while the cubs shrieked and the bear growled below. He called to his brother for help.

He was soon on the scene with his Winchester rifle, but not before the bear had disappeared in the thicket. After relieving his brother from his elevated perch they entered the den, and succeeded in capturing two fine cubs, which are quite bold and they perform many peculiar antics.

Keep Your Lungs Strong

This advice is doubly important with the knowledge that every three minutes some one in the United States succumbs to consumption and many refuse to realize they are afflicted until it is too late.

It is after colds or sickness, from overwork, confining duties or when general weakness exists, that tubercular germs thrive because the resistive powers of the body are weakened.

Only with fresh air, sunshine and abundant rich blood can one hope to arrest their progress, and the concentrated fats in Scott's Emulsion furnish fuel for rich blood, and its rare nourishment helps strengthen the lungs while it builds up the forces.

If you work indoors, tire easily, feel languid or run-down Scott's Emulsion is the most strengthening food-medicine known and is free from stupefying drugs. Avoid substitutes.

Baden-Powell Saw Germans Preparing War

Disguised as Hunter He Observed Officers Build Emplacements Near Liege

NEW YORK, Mar. 2.—A German, Baron von Stein, purchased in 1906 a villa three miles southeast of Liege and spent much time and money on fixing up the grounds. Last August the turf of the tennis court was torn away by the German invaders, who used the concrete foundation underneath as an implacement for one of their 16 inch howitzers with which they reduced the fortress. In the vicinity of Lille and Maubeuge it was later declared, similar gun implacements had been prepared. The following passage taken from Lieut. General Sir Robert Baden-Powell's new book, "Germany's Secret Plans" throws some additional light on the subject:

"Some years ago a report came to the War Office that a foreign power was making gun implacements in a position which had not before been suspected of being of military values and they were evidently going to use it for strategical purposes.

"I was sent to see whether the report was true. Of course, it would not do to go as an officer—suspicion would be aroused, one would be allowed to see nothing and would probably be arrested as a spy. I therefore went to stay with a friendly farmer in the neighborhood and went out shooting every day among the partridges and snipe which abound there. The first thing I did was to look at the country generally and try to think which points would be most valuable as positions for artillery.

"Then I went to look for partridges (and other things) on the hills which I had noticed, and very soon found what I wanted.

"Officers were there taking angles and measurements, accompanied by workmen, who were driving pegs into the ground and marking off lines with tapes between them.

"As I passed with my gun in my hand, bag on my shoulder and dog at my heels they paid no attention to me and from the neighboring hills I was able to watch their proceedings. When they went to their meals or returned to their quarters I went shooting over the grounds they had left, and if I did not get a big bag of game, at any rate I made a good selection of drawings and measurements of the plans of the forts and implacements which they had traced out on the ground.

"So that within a few days of their starting to make them we had the plans all in our possession. Although they afterwards planted trees all over the sites to conceal the forts within them and put up buildings in other places to hide them, we knew perfectly well where the implacements were and what their shapes were."

Dual Tragedy In a Hotel

Long Distance Telephone Told the Clerk His Guests Were Dead

PHILADELPHIA, Mar. 2.—The desk clerk at the Hotel Windsor was called to the telephone early this evening and was asked by a voice at the other end whether Mr. and Mrs. Charles St. Clair of New York, were registered at the hotel.

The clerk replied in the affirmative, and was startled when the person on the other end then said:

"Very well, if you'll go to their room you'll find them dead. I will be over there myself before midnight. I think I may still catch the 8 o'clock train from New York. Good-bye."

The clerk ran up to the room occupied by Mr. and Mrs. St. Clair and found the door locked. He called another employee of the hotel and together they broke into the room. In the bath tub lay Mrs. St. Clair, while her husband lay on the floor beside her, his fingers clutching a revolver.

On the bureau was a note which read:

"I am Charles C. St. Clair, 156 East 61st street, New York City. Please notify Mrs. Charles C. St. Clair, same address, 'phone 4413 Plaza. I am sorry for the trouble I am causing. Please take care of my cane. It is valuable."

To this the man added another sentence which was indiscernible, and signed his name. Then he went to the ghastly business that had its first expression in the telephone call from New York.

Early this morning St. Clair, who is the owner of the Mineola Garage on East 59th street, New York, mailed a letter. Doubtless this was the message to the man in New York who, it is taken for granted by the police is the husband of the dead woman. They were married on October 25 last. This much was told by the inscription on her wedding ring, which was found on her finger. St. Clair and the woman came to the hotel on Saturday. They brought several bags containing much expensive clothing.

The woman's forehead, it was found upon examination, was shattered by the explosion of the revolver, leaving no question but that the man held the weapon against her and then fired. From all indications there was no struggle in the room.

CANADIAN WOUNDED IN FRANCE TELL OF THEIR FIRST FIGHTING

Princess Pats Received Violent Attack After 72 Hours in Trenches—Succeeded in Holding Their Position Till Relief Came—German Snipers Busy—All the Men Will Recover

LONDON, March 2.—Special—Up the broad drive to the main door of the great white country mansion at Shorncliffe, which almost overlooks the Straits of Dover and which now bears the name "Queen's Canadian Military Hospital," there came this afternoon a couple of ambulances out of which hobbled seven men of the Canadian contingent, fresh from the blood-drenched fields of Northern France. Soon after their arrival they wer greeted by others of Canada's army who had made a like journey back to England Saturday and Sunday. All these are being attended by Drs. Stewart, Russell and Wallace and a staff of about a dozen nurses who are also from the Dominion.

Truly a striking colony of distress and succor has been established by Canada in one of the fairest corners in England. Eighteen [illegible] soldiers have been brought from the front to this hospital during the week end. They include Private John Davis.

It may be stated at once that all the above mentioned patients without exception are getting along very well, thanks to the good nursing and tranquil surroundings. They will in every case recover before the daisies come on the big lawn of the hospital. The present correspondent had the pleasure of chatting with several of these patients. One was comfortable in a bed, in a room tenanted by two other stricken Canadian warriors, and was forced to shake hands with his left hand, his right having received a dose of German ammunition.

Snipers Were Busy

"I went out with a party on the 16th, composed of Canadians and men from two British regiments", he said. "The fog was thick, and we intended to cut away entanglements. We cut them all right and came back a little later. We went out a second time, and were working in a fine style, when suddenly the fog lifted and directly a party of German snipers came out. My little party was made up of a corporal and sergeant and some other men. I was lying down when a sniper caught me in the shoulder. I crawled away to some bushes, and at length managed to get back, but the corporal and sergeant were both killed. I was lying behind that bush with an English captain and a lieutenant from 11 in the morning till dusk."

He went on to say that his regiment went into the trenches first on Feb. 16. The captain loved living in the trenches. Other men in the same room agreed that the trench was better than lying about in billets at the rear.

Six Days in Trenches.

The next patient visited was ill with gastric trouble and admits now he "ought to have gone sick earlier." His regiment went up on the 17th and remained in the trenches for six days, he said. "On the 17th", he added, "we had half the regiment in the foremost trenches for over 24 hours. Our fellows got used to the work from the start. They could not have been better, but, of course, they had a big stiffening among them of English troops who had been at work a long time. There were no casualties among our men in my neighborhood, but I won't speak for the whole of the regiment, and one knows only what is going on in the immediate vicinity." He was removed to his present pleasant quarters on Thursday.

One Stretch of 72 Hours.

Two members of the Princess Patricia Regiment shared another room, both having been wounded by the same shell on Feb. 15. The Pats, they said, were out on that occasion for 72 hours instead of the customary 48. The regiment had received a violent attack from the enemy and had been forced to relinquish a trench. The Pats came up in the night and held on until relief came. "If we had been relieved at the expected time neither of us would have been wounded," said one of the men. Both are getting on well.

New Rolling Mill To Operate Soon

Canadian Rolling Mills to Start With 200 Men Next Tuesday

MONTREAL, March 2—It is worthy of note that, despite the unfavorable conditions prevailing all over America in the steel industry, the Canadian Rolling Mills Company, located in the town of St. Paul, will open a new rolling mill next Tuesday and employ in the neighborhood of two hundred men. Construction of the new mill was started a year ago and, regardless of what happened since, the construction of the mill has gone steadily ahead and the management stated yesterday that "continuous operations were expected."

The Canadian Rolling Mills Company is controlled by the same management as the Canadian Tube & Iron Company and the Colonial Wire Company. All three mills are situated in St. Paul, bordering on the Lachine Canal, and employ between 800 and 900 persons.

The operations of the new rolling mill, for a time at least, will be confined to the manufacture of merchant bar iron and steel, and the greater part of this material will be used by the other companies. The plant is up-to-date in every detail and one of its features is a huge electric crane, which will unload a boatload of coal within 24 hours. The average coal boat carries 2,300 tons. There are also many other devices especially suitable for labor saving. The company when working at capacity will manufacture to the extent of 15,000 tons per year.

TWO MORE M. P.'S GOING TO THE FRONT

Col. H. H. McLean and Dr. Warnock Likely to go With Third Contingent

OTTAWA, Mar. 2.—Two more members of Parliament will likely leave for the front, making seven in all on active service. Col. Hugh Havelock McLean, M.P. for Queens-Sunbury will likely be appointed brigadier for the new brigade of infantry for the Third Overseas Contingent, and Dr. Warnock, M.P. for McLeod has offered his services to the Imperial Government for the veterinary corps.

There are now four members of Parliament in Europe. Hon. D. Beland is a prisoner in Antwerp. Col. J. A. Currie and Col. Harry McLeod are with their regiments at the firing line, and Col. J. J. Carrick is the assistant eyewitness for the Canadian forces. One member, Col. Harry Baker, M.P. for Brome, is commander of the new mounted regiment being raised in the Eastern Townships which will likely be sent to Egypt.

No More Use For Caruso

German Hate for Italian Because He is to Sing for French

AMSTERDAM, March 2.—The German newspapers have now declared war on Caruso, because the famous tenor accepted an invitation to sing in Monte Carlo for the benefit of the French Red Cross at the request of the Prince of Monaco. The prince has openly sided with France since the beginning of hostilities despite the friendship of the Kaiser for many years.

The Berlin newspapers now say: "We have no more use for Caruso than for Prince Albert."

MEDICO RECIPROCITY

LONDON, Mar. 2.—Members of the British Medical Council are interested in the bill introduced in the Ontario Legislature with a view to arranging reciprocity between British and Ontario medical men. The opinion is expressed that it would be better if such a bill were introduced in the Dominion Parliament. The general feeling is that a qualified British medico should be allowed to practice in Canada and other overseas dominions without further examination. There seems to be no objection to a reciprocal status being granted to Canadian doctors serving with forces in Great Britain or to those desiring to settle here.

AN ECRU LINEN SUIT

Fuller skirts are much easier for walking and if the fullness is kept in the proper place and not exaggerated, the effect is much better. Most of the coats have their basques open in front showing a width of the skirt. This model is a late style, having a short coat skirted and lined with black and blue striped wash silk. The high collar is also lined with silk. The braid trimming across the front gives it the military effect so much in vogue.

Mrs. Wiseneighbour says:—

"I should have told you the other day when I was speaking of "Eddy's" Washboards, that it is just as necessary to have an indurated Fibreware Tub to hold your clothes if you want to make a success of washday."

Mrs. Newlywed says: "I've heard of Eddy's Indurated Fibreware. What's the difference between Fibreware and Woodenware?"

"Fibreware is made from compressed fibre, baked at extreme heat, all in one solid piece, it cannot warp or fall apart, no chance of splinters—wears much longer—looks much better—and is lighter to carry. The latter point you should always take into consideration," concludes Mrs. Wiseneighbour.

IN AND ABOUT THE CITY

Condensed News Items for Busy Readers.

NOTE FROM THE FRONT

Mr. Fred Dixon of this city, has received a letter from his brother, Sergt. William Dixon, of the Royal Army Medical Corps, England, who having been at the front for four months, returned to Southampton, bringing a large number of German wounded soldiers. Mr. Dixon says the Germans are willing to be taken prisoners, as they are sick of war, which will not be a long one.

ENTERTAINED FRIENDS

Mrs. E. Wrightmeyer of Octavia street, entertained a few friends last evening, the gathering resulting very pleasantly. The occasion was made up of games and music, Miss Valiere contributing largely to the programme with her selections on violin and piano. Mr. W. H. Wrightmeyer favored the company with several solo selections. Dainty refreshments were served, the party breaking up at an early hour.

A SOCIAL EVENING

Quinteena Lodge, No. 133, Daughters of Rebekah in this city, last evening had a social gathering at the lodge room. A number of sisters and brethren of the I.O.O.F. Sosiety from Trenton were in attendance. After the business had been concluded some time was spent in social intercourse, songs, readings and instrumental selections being rendered. Dancing was also indulged in, appropriate music being furnished by the IO.O.F. orchestra. Refreshments were served during the evening. The affair was a most pleasant one in all of its features.

Secretary's Report of Children's Aid

The January meeting of the Board of Management of the Children's Aid Society was held on February 1st at the Y.M.C.A. rooms. Sixteen members were present, and the president occupied the chair. Much business of importance was transacted; committee reports received and adopted. The annual published report for the year ending November, 1914, was distributed among those present and ordered to be mailed as usual to subscribers and friends of the work.

The treasurer's report was received and adopted. Agent's report was received, adopted and filed. Agent's report:

The Quinte Chapter Imperial Order of the Daughters of the Empire, which has for two years financed the school teacher's salary at the Shelter, and so much appreciated by the Board, has, through its secretary, notified the Board that the Chapter cannot longer do so, but expresses the hope of further assisting the children's work in some tangible form.

The Board expresses its thankfulness for the much appreciated assistance rendered by the Chapter, and for the assurance of future consideration.

The maintenance committee reported through Miss Yeomans an expenditure of $41.62.—Adopted.

The clothing committee reported Mrs. J. J. Haines an expenditure of $8.69.—Adopted.

The Shelter location committee reported the purchase of the 120 ft. frontage immediately adjoining the Hospital on the West, which the Board had authorized the purchase of providing. The city engineer vouched for the drainage to the city sewer, and further reported that the committee had handed over to the Hospital Board said property at the cost and had purchased an additional 120 ft. frontage again to the west at a cost of $1,860. This latter lot is lower than the first but the committee reported that drainage could be secured with city sewers.

CARE OF THE EYES

Health as Well as Beauty Demands That Eyes Get Attention.

The woman who takes care of herself should give as much attention to her eyes as she does to her skin or to her hair. In the first place after driving or being in the dust of the city or country she should wash or bathe her eyes with tepid water. This removes the irritating dust or small particles. After reading or before going to bed she should bathe the eyes with salt water or tpid water to which is added a pinch of salt, and using an eye cup, will be surprised at the difference in the sparkle of the eyes. If inflamed they should be bathed several times a day. The dull, sunken eyes, the hollow circles and the sallow complexion of many women is due, however, to the complaints and diseases peculiar to women. The best thing I know for this is Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, because it is a temperance tonic, being made of roots and herbs with pure glycerine. Dr. Pierce publishes the ingredients on the wrapper so it is not a secret and I have seen many women cured by it and not only that; but the dull sunken eyes, the sunken cheek and bust, have taken on a sparkle and healthful appearance. Thousands of women have testified to having been cured of womanly diseases by this Prescription. It speedily causes all womanly troubles to disappear—compels the organs to properly perform their natural functions, removes pain and misery at certain times and brings back health and strength to nervous, irritable and exhausted women.

It banishes pain, headache, backache, low spirits, hot flashes, dragging-down sensations, worry and sleeplessness surely and without loss of time.

Keep the bowels healthy by using Dr. Pierce's Pellets. They don't gripe.

Dr. Pierce's medicines are manufactured in Canada at the World's Dispensary, Bridgeburg, Ont.

A Favor To "The Elevator"

The Belleville High School, through its magazine, "The Elevator," has attempted to give credit in its roll of honor to all the B. H. S. boys who are now at or going to the front. Despite the fact that the greatest care was taken, several ommissions have occurred, and, in other cases where accounts of the boys were given, photographs were not available. The Elevator staff regret very keenly any such ommission.

In our next number, which appears shortly, we intend publishing the photographs and accounts already given, and also those of the 3rd Contingent boys, and hope that the relatives of each B. H. S. boy who is now with the 1st, 2nd or 3rd contingent, will, as a special favor, mail to the Editor of The Elevator a photograph, if already one has not been received, and a few facts concerning the subject. We trust that relatives of the boys will do this as soon as possible so that all will receive the credit they honorably deserve.

NO INDICATIONS

Belleville, Ont., March 2, 1915.

To the Editor:—

I am writing you to find out if there is going to be any Old Boys' Reunion this year. This is the 5th year and there should be a big celebration. A friend of mine out West wants to know, so that he can arrange to come home for it. Thanking you.

CITIZEN.

Editor's Note.— From enquiries made, the impression prevails that there will be no Old Boys' Reunion here this year, owing to the fact that the war is on, and hundreds who would wish to attend the celebration are unable to do so.

LETTER FROM SOLDIER BOY

Mr. Jesse Harris received on Monday, March 1st a letter from his son, Bombardier Albert E. Harris of the First Canadian Expeditionary Force. Br. Harris has been ill in Hospital and was not able to go with the First Battery to France. He says in part:

Devizes, Feb. 15, 1915

My dear Dad, mother, and sister,—

Just a line to let you know that I am well and still billetted in Devizes. I have been sick the last month or so with fever, but am now coming around fine. Although in one respect I have had the hardest kind of hard luck. I suppose you will hear the news before this letter reaches you. that all or nearly all of the Canadian Artillery have left for France and as I was sick in the hospital at the time, of course I could not go, so I was transferred along with Steve Sword to No. 1 Depot Battery, which is still located in England, and very likely will not leave the country at all. Steve Sword was transferred because he refused inoculation. I think that was what brought on my attack of fever. I was inoculated, and got a double dose, and instead of staying in the next day, I reported for duty, and went on horseback thirty miles up the country for remount horses. I got wet through and caught cold, and cold and inoculation is a dangerous thing. However, you do not want to worry as I am alright now. Do not write any more letters, till you hear from me again, as they will only go astray. I am going to ride out to the village of Coulson and see if I can get a transfer to the R.C.H.A., which are leaving for Egypt, on Tuesday. That will be a little better than staying in England all winter. And now, before I close, I must tell you again. Don't write till you hear from me again, as I will not get the letters. Well good bye all and don't worry.

Your loving son
A. E. HARRIS

Gossard CORSETS

They Lace in Front

And the reason for their choice is completely described in the sentence which follows:

"Figure improvement means health, and health always means beauty. The Gossard Corset which laces in front assures an immediate figure-improvement with its attendant joys—health, beauty & comfort."

At this store, corsets receive more than the usual attention because our experience proves to us that corsets are the foundation of style. They help make the suit, gown and dress. At this time, when many women are questioning much of the style news published, we believe the

issued by The H. W. Gossard Co. through this store is of the most vital interest. During the next two weeks the new Spring models will be shown in our corset department, and we promise to corset you in the model, material and design of your liking at $2.00, $3.50, $5.00, up to $25.00. A fitting or visit to our department does not obligate you. We welcome your visit.

was the case. Regarding his personal conversations with Dr. Robinson, he stated that the latter had suggested that Blanche Yorke had gone insane. As to his knowledge of the action of the dead girl, he stated she obtained medicine from Dr. Wilson as well as the prisoner for indigestion. Questioned by Mr. T. C. Robinette, MacGregor stated emphatically that he was not aware of the girl's condition. Mr. J. S. Taylor, undertaker, of Tamworth, testified to having entered the Robinson home with the bailiff and discovered the alleged blood stains in the bed room.

At this juncture the court adjourned until 9.30 Wednesday morning.

(Canadian Press Special.)

NAPANEE, Mar. 3.—The trial of Dr. C. K. Robinson continued today. Bruce Richardson and A. B. Carscallen both testified to having traced a trail of blood spots, leading from the prisoner's house in the direction of Miss Yorke's house. Detective Miller also testified he had noticed these blood marks on July thirteenth. These three also testified to having searched the prisoner's house on his invitation, and finding nothing They were looking for a living woman.

The Crown's case was still unfinished at noon. In the cross examination of Detective Greer, it came out that a letter head, belonging to Dr. Wilson, the other Tamworth physician, at present ill in a hospital at Toronto, had been found by the detective with the body of Blanche Yorke. The letter head was filed as an exhibit.

Boat House and Boats Burned

At a few minutes after 2 o'clock this morning the fire brigade was called out. A boat house, situated on the bank of the harbor, near Allen's coal yard in the western part of the city, was discovered to be on fire. The blaze had gained considerable headway when discovered, and all efforts to subdue same proved futile. The structure was destroyed as were also two motor boats which were stored therein. Messrs. L. Allore and Norman Hall owned the bot house and also the two motor boats, named "You Bet" and "Wren". The latter boat was the craft from which three parties met a watery grave near Trenton last fall. The boat house and the motor boats were partially insured. How the fire occurred is not known.

THE HIGH SCHOOL ELEVATOR

The Editor, Intelligencer.

Sir: The last record issued of the High School Elevator is worthy of the energy, enterprise, and ability of the editors and contributors. The only suggestion that an "old hand" would make is, that in all subsequent issues devoted to historical rolls of honor such as that to which a large part of this issue of this excellent periodical is most appropriately devoted, the Editor should have a consultative committee of real old boys, so that no names may be omitted, and so that the result may be thoroughly satisfying, and may not wound by omission the feelings of relatives. For instance, there is no mention of Captain Gordon B. Johnson, son of Mr. J. W. Johnson, M.P.P., who crossed two oceans from Japan to rejoin his old regiment, the Royal Engineers, and is now on active service; nor of Sergeant Lawrence Sewell, son of Mrs. Sewell and grandson of Lieut. Col. Henderson, with the Montreal Regiment; nor of Sergeant Newton Alford, son of Mr. Walter Alford, of the machine gun battery; and last, but not least, the Florence Nightingales of active service who are doing the greatest work of all in life saving, viz.: Miss Ethel B. Ridley, daughter of the late Dr. Ridley, Superintendent of Nurses at La Toquet Hospital, being the second Stationary Canadian Field Hospital in France; Miss Celestina Geen, daughter of Reverend A. L. Geen, Nursing Sister at the Base Hospital, and Miss Ida Denmark, daughter of Mrs George Denmark, Nursing Sister, in immediate touch with the trenches at the advance hospital in France, all of them pupils for years of the Belleville High School, and all of them adding to the traditional "chronicles of the drum," and all answering to the School call:

"Oh, sons and daughters unforgot," we cried,
"Come you again, or come no more?
Across the world you keep the pride,
Across the world we mark the score."

I have written suggesting that an extra leaf be inserted in this wonderful number of the School paper so that the records may be complete. Other names may also, no doubt, be suggested.

Yours truly,
W. N. PONTON.

New Evidence in Storstad Case Found in Log

MONTREAL, March 2.—A water-soaked Marconi telegraph blank with notes hastily scribbled in pencil was the cause of a sensational break in the lengthy and somewhat tedious argument in the Empress of Ireland-Storstad case this morning, before Mr. Justice Dunlop.

A. W. Atwater, K.C., one of counsel for the owners of the Storstad, produced the scrap of paper with the statement that it had been found yesterday afternoon by one of counsel for the Storstad while he was looking through the log of the Empress of Ireland.

The paper, Mr. Atwater said, was found in one of the back pages, where it had been left unnoticed even during the enquiry before Lord Mersey at Quebec. The log was found on the wreck of the Empress by divers some time after she had foundered and was still in fairly good condition.

Mr. Atwater contended that the memorandum made on the Marconi blank is in Third Officer Moore's handwriting. Moore, it will be remembered, went down with the Empress. The log, Mr. Atwater continued, was kept by him, and the memorandum was to be entered, had time permitted.

Strenuous objections to the exhibition of the memorandum were made by the counsel for the Canadian Pacific Railway. R. A. Holden, K.C., claimed that it was not by any means proved that the memo was really in the log when the Empress sank. It might easily have been placed there later. Also it was not proved that it was in the handwriting of Third Officer Moore.

Mr. Justice Dunlop, after a motion by F. E. Meredith, K.C., counsel for the C.P.R., decided to adjourn the court until this afternoon, but when the court again met the argument on the admission of the evidence was resumed again.

Mr. Atwater stated that the memorandum disproves statements made by Captain Kendall at Quebec and agrees with the contentions of witnesses for the Storstad. The text, however, was not read in Court.

Vol. 48 BELLEVILLE, ONTARIO, THURSDAY, MARCH 4, 1915. No. 249

DR. ROBINSON TELLS TRAGIC STORY OF MISS YORKE'S DEATH IN HIS HOME

His Mind a Blank After He Saw the Girl Was Dead— Deceased Was In Desperate Condition—Tells of Disposition of the Body

NAPANEE, March 4.—(Special.)—Dr. C. K. Robinson made a full confession of his connection with the death of the late Blanche Yorke, during the second session of the trial here yesterday afternoon, and on the plea that the girl called on him late on the night of July 8, suffering from what he later found to be a lateral placenta praevia. He apparently hopes to escapes capital punishment, under the provision of the criminal code which demands that it must be proven that he committed the deed or performed the operation with intent to commit an unlawful act.

Standing erect, with his arms folded his face pale, and in quiet tones he recited the horrible details of a girl calling on him who was bleeding to death, of how he worked over her in an attempt to save her life, and how the girl died through loss of blood.

Victim of Horrible Sensation.

Following this he became the victim of a horrible sensation. The reaction acted like a "weight pressing him down." He lost control of himself. During the early hours of the morning of July 9 he realized his position, but thought only of concealing what he had done.

Dr. Robinson claimed that he did for the girl what he should have done under the circumstances and could not leave his patient to call in any assistance.

Experts Exonerate Physician.

Expert medical testimony was obtained by Mr. Robinette with a view of proving that Robinson was not guilty of unprofessional conduct, and that he could not have done better than he did. Among these men were Dr. E. Mundell, professor of surgery at Queen's University, and Dr. J. W. Campbell, a general practitioner at Kingston.

The cases for the Crown and the defence were completed last evening and an adjournment was made until this morning, when the respective counsel will address the jurors. The case will be placed in their hands and a verdict is expected today.

Outlines His Career.

To Mr. Robinette's preliminary questions Dr. Robinson stated that he was 27 years of age when Blanche Yorke died at his home in Tamworth and that he was graduated from Queen's University, Kingston, in 1912. Upon graduation he immediately entered a hospital in Ottawa where he served four months. Next he went to the Kingston General Hospital, where he practised for nine months. From Kingston he went to the Algoma district, and was six months in a lumber camp. He opened practice at Tamworth in the month of January, 1914. The doctor said he was married and had one child. On the night of the death of Miss Yorke his wife was in Kingston, where she was receiving treatment for an ailment.

Dr. Robinson stated in reply to questions by Mr. Robinette that twice before July 8th Blanche Yorke had been to see him, and he had treated her for stomach trouble.

"On July 8 did Blanche Yorke come to your office?"

"She came there about 8.15 p.m."

"Did you give her any treatment?"

Doctor Makes Full Statement.

The doctor answered this question by making a general statement of the whole affair. He proceeded to describe the various measures he resorted to to save the girl's life, which were the usual obstetrical practices, but in spite of all the treatment he gave her the patient quickly pased into a state of coma and death.

"When I saw the patient was dead." said Dr. Robinson, "I can hardly tell what happened. I felt as if a weight was pressing me down. I can hardly explain my feelings. I came to myself a little while later on. I found myself sitting on the floor. I realized I was alone in the house with a dead woman there before me. During all this while I had not thought of my own position in the matter, in my endeavor to help that woman.

Must Conceal Evidence, He Felt.

"The question then came to me. What shall I do? Something seemed to tell me I must conceal all that evidence, or there would be an inquiry in which my name would figure very largely, and it would mean a loss of my reputation and my practice. I commenced to conceal all evidence of her condition of pregnancy. I am not clear on all what happened after that for several hours. I know that I carried the body downstairs and concealed it in the cellar. The idea came to me that I must get rid of the body, and without knowing just why, I started to cut it up. I only cut off two of the limbs when I realized it would be futile, and went upstairs again to try to get rid of what was left. I worked all that night trying to clear hings up and was not until morning that I realized what a foolish thing I had done, and committed an indignity on that body. I would readily have given my own limbs if I could have put them back. I then realized that I had taken a step from which I could not turn back, and from then on I tried to conceal all evidence of what had taken place. I had to deny everything. My whole life was a lie. I might have stayed there, but I went away on July 16."

Finally Had to Give in.

Mr. Robinette—You did use the furnace to burn up the evidence?

"Yes, and later I burned more. I knew I should have come forward and faced the whole thing, but I had cut up he body. I felt I had to give in, and on the first of September I gave myself up."

In reply to Mr. Robinette, Robinson said that he had not thought of calling Dr. Wilson to assist him.

"What do you know about the Wilson letter-head being with the body?"

"I don't know anything about it. I never had a Wilson letter-head in my office, nor did I know anything of it until it was presented in court today.

"Neither did his counsel," interjected Mr. Robinette.

Prof. Connell of the Pathological Department, Queen's University, was called by the Crown and identified the autopsy statement he made at the inquest at Tamworth last year. Asked by Mr. Robinette if he thought Robinson had done wrong by staying with the patient if she was bleeding profusely, Dr. Connell said, "His first duty was to his patient, his second was to call in help."

Dr. J. W. Campbell of Kingston was then called. Questioned as to what he thought of the diagnosis of the Yorke case made by Robinson, and his explanation of his difficulties the witness stated that Robinson had acted as a practitioner should, and his statements corresponded with those of Prof. Connell's.

"Would you like to leave the girl alone in the condition described?" asked Mr. Robinette.

"No, I wouldn't."

"Would you expect the mental and nervous strain he spoke of?" asked the Crown prosecutor.

"His predicament was close to fades itself," was the reply. "I had a similar case myself once, and was confined to the house for a week after it. The strain is almost inconceivable."

Interval of Thirty Minutes.

Dr. Andrew J. Harrington of Toronto was sworn in as a witness for the Crown. After hearing the medical testimony and that of Robinsen, he declared that the latter had stated that he at one period waited an interval of 30 minutes between treatments of Miss Yorke, which, he submitted, was ample time to procure assistance.

In reply to this, Mr. Robinette argued that Robinson, at the time spoken of by Dr. Harrington, did not realize the serious condition the girl was in.

Mrs. Wilson appeared in court to state that Dr. Wilson is now a patient at Dr. Myer's hospital in Toronto, and could not be present. His evidence of the finding of the body as given at the preliminary hearing of Robinson was admitted by the court.

ROBINSON CASE GOES TO JURY

(Canadian Press Special)

NAPANEE, March 4.—Counsel for the prisoner and for the Crown in the trial of Dr. Robinson, addressed the jury rather briefly this morning, but Mr. Justice Sutherland was very deliberate and thorough in summing up and the case did not go to the jury until nearly one o'clock.

HOVER OVER CEMETERY DURING AVIATORS' BURIAL

CHALONS-SUR-MARNE, France, March 3.—A fleet of aeroplanes, many of the machines driven by the better known of the military aviators in this region, flew slowly above the cemetery at Lepine today during the burial of Lieut. Menchard and Sapper Maillard. The two men were killed when their aeroplane caught fire and fell. The accident occurred during the night patrol and the flames from the burning aircraft were seen for miles.

MAY INVITE NEUTRAL SUGGESTIONS AS TO DEVASTATION OF BELGIUM

(Canadian Press Special)

LONDON, March 4.—In the House of Commons today Sir Edward Grey was asked whether the government was willing to invite suggestions from neutrals with a view to avoiding further devastation of Belgium by the great powers which are contending for its mastery. The Foreign Secretary replied that the only solution of this question is the evacuation of Belgian territory by German troops, the restoration of her independence and reparation for the wrong done her. Unless neutral powers are prepared to assist in securing that solution, I don't see what could be gained by the course suggested.

ALLIES HAVE 52 SHIPS NOW IN DARDANELLES

Five of Them Entered Straits, Four Shelled Turk Positions

PARIS, March 3.—The Havas News Agency gave out a despatch this afternoon confirming the statement published in the Paris Matin this morning that an allied fleet resumed the bombardment of the Dardanelles yesterday, Tuesday morning.

This despatch which is dated at Athens, March 2, reads:

"The bombardment of the interior fortification of the Dardanelles was resumed this morning. The allies have a total of 52 warships on the scene. Five of them entered the straits. While this movement was going on four battleships began the bombardment of the Turkish positions fronting on the Gulf of Saros, which is separated from the Dardanelles by the Gallipoli Peninsula."

Mr. Evanturel is Still a Liberal

TORONTO, March 3.—Mr. Gustave Evanturel, the member for Prescott, may be called away from the Legislature today, owing to the serious illness of a relative in Prescott. If during his absence the House is divided on party lines he wants it understood that he would vote with the Opposition. In a letter sent to the Press Gallery he said that he had been elected by the Liberals of Prescott, and had run as a straight supporter of Mr. Rowell and the Opposition. The fact that the Liberals read him out of the party last session, when he was forced to resign from the House, and that they refused to be responsible for seating him this year does not seem to have affected the member for Prescott.

TOMMY LOOKS LIKE CRUSOE WAR STRIKES AT "SMARTNESS"

LONDON, March 2.—War has struck a blow at both military smartness and military picturesqueness. These two features, which distinguished European wars of the past are now yielding to the practical. The British Tommy in the trenches, wearing goat skin coat, rubber boots and knitted cap pulled down over the head, looks more like a Robinson Crusoe than a soldier. French Zouaves still wear baggy trousers, Morish jacket and fez, but the cloth is colored a greenish yellow like the British khaki. Belgians have changed their regulation foolish little cap for a good, warm cap which looks as if made for a chauffeur.

Among the changes undergone in the British field uniform is a Sam Browne belt made of webbing instead of the more conspicuous leather. The belt, designed a couple of generations ago by a British officer in India, supports sword, pistol and canteen and is suspended by a strap crossing the shoulder. It has lately become the rage among Belgian officers. In view of the short range in trench fighting, the British officer has been forced to do away with the minor elegances of a khaki flannel collar and khaki colored necktie. His full skirted overcoat early gave place to a short coat of the model of the seaman's peajacket, which is found warmer than the old model, besides being free from the annoyance of skirts. The men of the ranks have of their own accord cut off their overcoat tails, because of their dragging in the mud.

France is reuniforming its troops in the new tri-color cloth, a combination of the three colors of the national flag and of a bluish color. It is used for the characteristic great coats of the men and for officers jackets.

Russian Aircraft Helped in Retreat

Guided Men Through the Enemy's Lines, Brought Ammunition

LONDON, March 3.—A brief description of the very efficient work of two Russian aeroplanes is transmitted in a despatch received here today from Warsaw, Russian Poland. These aeroplanes, it is related, saved two Russian regiments of the 29th division during the recent Russian retreat in East Pursia. Hovering over the heads of the soldiers, the airmen guided them in their retreat through the enemy's lines in safety, and by frequent trips to and from the Russian base kept the column supplied with ammunition.

ARTILLERY OF ALLIES DEMOLISH TRENCHES OF THE ENEMY

(Canadian Press Special)

PARIS, March 4.—An official statement says: In Belgium on the Dunes, our artillery demolished the trenches of the enemy. To the north of Arras near Notre Dame de Lorette, the enemy captured an advaned trench recently constructed by us in immediate contact with the German lines.

The bombardment of Rheims lasted all day, shells falling every three minutes. In Champagne it is confirmed that German counter attacks against a crest taken by us to the northeast of Mesnil were of a very violent character. Two regiments of Guards fought with great ferocity. The defeat of these efforts was complete.

There has been cannonading in the Argonne with fresh progress on our part in the region of Vauqueis.

DEVILISH CONTRIVANCES FOR HEDGING RUSSIANS

Standard Oil Steamer Detained—Turkish Officials Profess to be Unconcerned—German Staff Officer Confesses Hoplessness of Army in Belgium

(Canadian Press Special)

LONDON, March 4.—A semi-official communication issued last night at Petrograd says the Germans are energetically appropriating all sorts of supplies in North Poland and are also making desperate efforts to effect the capture of Russians, resorting to special devices such as pits and sunken fences with a view to thinning the Russian forces.

The Russians have completely routed the Austrian thirty-sixth division near Stanislau. Geneva reports that Austria lost twenty-three batteries of her very best artillery in the recent fighting.

The Standard Oil steamer Platuria, bound for Sweden, has been detained at Kirkwall by order of the Admiralty.

Turkish officials at Berlin profess to be unconcerned by events in the Dardanelles. They declare the fortifications are impregnable and that the Allied Fleet have not yet reached the real defences.

A Daily Express correspondent on the Belgian frontier says a German staff officer frankly confesses that the German position in Belgium is hopeless. "It would have been wise to have retired weeks ago but the government feared the effect on the people at home. If the German people ever believe that they have made sacrifices in vain and that Germany is beaten, look out for earthquakes, but they do not yet believe it. We can hang on in our trenches till doomsday, but I fear the Allies can do the same. Meanwhile the people at home are waiting for food and victory."

The British steamer Wrexham, of thirteen knots speed, from Harwich for Wrexham, pursued by a submarine, steamed forty miles through minestrewn waters until the submarine abandoned the chase.

A Daily Express despatch from Amsterdam says German newspapers are beginning to break the news to the people that the peace which the government hopes for will not add one inch to German territory.

A Copenhagen despatch says it is rumored in Berlin that if the Allies force the Dardanelles and occupy the Gallipoli peninsula, the Turkish army will evacuate European Turkey, fearing to be surrounded.

Border Shooting Case is Dropped

Grand Jury Returns "No Bill" and Four Men go Free 'Mid Cheers

WELLAND, Ont., Mar. 3.—At six o'clock last night the Grand Jury at the Assize Court returned "no bill" in the case of Thomas Delaney, Ontario police officer, and the three militiamen charged with manslaughter in connection with the shooting of Smith and Dorsch, American citizens, at Fort Erie.

Chief Justice Boyd accepted the return of the jury, and the four accused men stepping outside the courtroom were besieged with congratulations.

His Lordship in reviewing the evidence to be presented in the case to the Grand Jury outlined the circumstances of the shooting, and laid stress on the fact that large indemnities had been paid, thereby making reparation as far as money could do it. He intimated that might be taken into consideration in what further action, if any, was necessary.

The Grand Jury were given three other cases, and were closed in until after six o'clock. Two of the cases yet to be reported on are charges of treason.

6,000 Students Join the Army

LONDON, March 2.—Earl Kitchener's call on Oxford and Cambridge Universities for recruits has been met with what Premier Asquith termed in addressing the House of Commons today, a "magnificent response."

Mr. Asquith's remarks were made in support of a bill granting to the universities special powers in financial matters to enable them to tide over the period of the war.

Two-thirds of the undergraduates of the two universities have joined the army, the total being close to 6,000. All undergraduates who are physically fit for service and are still in residence at the universities have joined an officers' training corps.

Eighty of the eighty-nine members of athletic teams at the two universities have joined the army. Eighty-nine members of the staffs of the colleges at Oxford have gone into active service.

SUPPLIES DENIED TO BELLIGERENT WARSHIPS

Drastic Powers are Given to President Wilson in Resolution Passed by the Senate and House—Heavy Penalties for Violators of the Regulations

WASHINGTON, March 4.—Special

By unanimous vote, the Senate late tonight adopted a substitute for the joint resolution passed earlier in the House, enlarging the power of the President to prevent infringements of American neutrality by vessels leaving ports of the United States with men or supplies for beligerent warships.

The Senate substitute later was agreed to in the House. The resolution now goes to President Wilson for his signature.

The amendment did not materially alter the original resolution.

The resolution authorizes the refusal of clearance except under heavy bonds (double the value of the vessel and cargo) to American ships suspected of loading men or supplies for belligerent warships, and for the internment of foreign merchantmen engaging in such traffic, and would impose heavy penalties for violations, including fines, imprisonment and forfeiture of the vessels.

The resolution is to take effect immediately and continue "during the existence of a war to which the United States is not a party."

It authorizes the withholding of clearances from American vessels which the President believes to be "about to carry" men, arms or supplies to any beligerent warship, tender or supply ship, or commit other similar acts in prosecution of hostilities in violation of neutrality obligations.

The resolution would extend the treatment accorded a belligerent warship under international law, including provision for internment, to any vessel of foreign register "acting or preparing to act or intending to depart from the United States jurisdiction to act as a tender to a belligerent's armed forces, or otherwise aid hostilities."

The resolution applies to "all lands and waters, continental or insular, and to all air spaces that fall within the jurisdiction of the United States.

BOMBARDING RESUMED

(Canadian Press Special)

LONDON, March 4.—A Reuter despatch from Athens says the bombardment of the inner forts of the Dardanelles was resumed this morning. Ten big warships took part in the operations. According to a British officer two of the Turkish forts remain intact. Allied landing parties found the charred remains of soldiers in the damaged forts, showing that the Turks had buried their dead before evacuating these positions.

BRANTFORD THEATRE IN FLAMES ADJOINING BLOCK THREATENED

(Canadian Press Special)

BRANTFORD, March 4.—Fire in the Gem Theatre shortly after twelve o'clock threatened to destroy the end block, which is situated exactly opposite the Crompton block, which was destroyed yesterday. Every fireman and piece of apparatus is engaged in fighting the fire. The building is owned by A. C. Lyons and is valued at $15,000. The cause of the fire is believed to be an explosion of chemicals used in developing picture films of yesterday's fire. At one o'clock the flames had spread to two adjoining buildings.

Fifty Seven Aliens Interned

About Thirty-Five Hundred Aliens Are Now Reporting Regularly at Toronto

TORONTO, March 3.—Fifty-seven alien enemies have already been interned by the Registrar in Toronto.

"About 3,500 alien enemies are now reporting weekly, every two weeks, or monthly at the office at 34 Adelaide, east. More names are being added daily to the list of those who have recently come to town, or who, for some good reason, have not previously registered.

It is known that there are some alien enemies in Toronto who have not registered, and detectives are hunting them up.

CLAIM CAPTURE OF ALLIES' TRENCHES

(Canadian Press Special)

BERLIN, March 4.—An official statement says the Germans captured nearly a mile of the enemy's trenches northwest of Arras yesterday morning, capturing eight French officers and 558 soldiers, with several cannons. French counter attacks failed.

French attacks in Champagne and the Argonne were easily repulsed.

RECEIVED A LETTER FROM LIEUT. PONTON

Col. W. N. Ponton received a letter yesterday, which was mailed in France, from his son, Lieut. Ponton. "Dick", at that time, had been in the trenches, and when writing was bivouacked with a number of his regiment in a barn. The letter was not stamped, and from marks on it had evidently passed through the hands censor.

Defeat is sometimes a good thing for the fellow who can learn from it how to win a bigger victory next time.

Carry a laugh with you and you will find a welcome almost everywhere—with the exception, possibly, of a funeral.

TRENTON BRIDGE ON FIRE

The large covered frame bridge which spans the Trent River at Trenton, at an early hour this morning narrowly escaped destruction by fire. The blaze was discovered in its inception and the fire brigade was called out. A small quantity of water extinguished the fire. A lighted match or a cigar stub thrown amongst the rubbish on the structure, was no doubt responsible for the blaze. The structure has been on fire several times.

LETTER FROM GUNNER WM. M.PATERSON 34TH BATTERY

France, Feb. 16, 1915

Dear mother,—

We are in France, ten miles from the firing line. We are not allowed to tell where, how or when. We can hear the gun fire distinctly. I was in a nearby village last night and saw a shell burst ten miles away on the firing line. We are billeted at a farm house, and sleep up in a loft over the barn—it is great.

We landed on the west coast of France and came across to the front by train. It has been raining ever since we landed until today. Now it is fine weather, and nice and warm, with the sun shining. It is sure La Belle France, when the sun shines.

When the Germans were advancing in France they slept in the barn that we occupy now. This is the last piece of paper I have got, so with your reply send paper and envelopes. My address it: Gunner Wm. M. Paterson, 4th Battery 1st Artillery Brigade, 1st Canada Contingent, British Expeditionary Force, France. Your loving son,

BILL

SOME PHASES OF AN ARMY ON THE FIELD

An Interesting and Instructive Address by Major Barragar—A Blackboard Talk That Was Highly Appreciated

Many ladies, members of the Woman's Canadian Club in this city, and not a few gentlemen, gathered in the assembly room of the High School at 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon for the purpose of hearing an address by Major Barragar, of this city.

Mrs. J. F. Wills, President, occupied the chair. Previous to the address an appropriate hymn was sung, and Miss Falkiner read an interesting article relative to the early settlement of this section of the community, the article coming from the pen of a relative of the reader.

Major Barragar was then introduced and he gave what may be termed a blackboard talk relative to the war. His subject was Some Phases of the Army Upon the Field. In his opening remarks the Major showed how the armies were mobilized and how they were divided and how fed. The feeding of an army of some millions of men was minutely explained by the speaker. He showed upon the blackboard where the base of supply was situated and how the same was distributed to the army corps and even to the men who were fighting in the trenches. How the troops were cared for, and how the wounded are tended to was also explained. The number of men comprising an infantry battalian, the number of guns in a battery and the moving of the same were explained in a manner both interesting and instructive. The quantity of provisions allowed each man on the firing line, and the emergency rations were dealt with. The Major drew upon the blackboard a diagram of the construction of the trenches and showed how the soldiers were protected in them. The supplying of soldiers with ammunition and the detailing of the men to bring the same was explained. Each soldier carries with him some articles which can be used in first aid if he becomes wounded. If, however, the wounds are of a serious nature the victim is taken in a field ambulance to what is termed a collecting station, and from there to the clearing hospital, some distance in the rear. At the latter place there are every appliance for the performing of surgical operations which are necessary.

The address was listened to with rapt attention, and at the close a vote of thanks, moved by Mrs. J. Downey, and seconded by Miss Lester, was tendered to Major Barragar, who fittingly acknowledged it.

"Barrow May Enter Washington Now," reads like a war-story heading but it is nothing more serious than a baseball deal.

Mother and Children Flee in Night Clothes

Kingston Man's Family Had Narrow Escape From Being Burned—Nothing Saved

KINGSTON Mar. 3—Awakened from their slumbers by the crackling of a raging fire, and the presence of a large amount of smoke, Mrs. Jos. Downey and her three children, had a narrow escape from being burned to death when their home at Ida Hill, one mile from Sunbury, was burned to the ground early this morning.

The family had retired early in the evening and were awakened about one-thirty this morning by a big fire in the house. How the blaze started is a mystery, but it is thought that an over-heated stove might have been responsible for it. Finding the house in flames, Mrs. Downey roused her three small children, and attired in her night garments, made her escape into the cold night. The alarm was soon sent out and farmers from all directions came to the scene in an endeavor to put out the fire, but they were unsuccessful as the house was burned to the ground.

Mrs. Downey and her children went to the house of a neighbor, Mrs. Thos. Makin, where she was given protection. Her husband is employed in the elevator of the Montreal Transportation Company in this city and was boarding here. It was a surprise to him to learn this morning that his domicile had been burned to the ground and that not one article was saved

The house was a brick structure, and a very comfortable residence. It had been built about five years ago and was formerly owned by Mr. John Kelley. There was a small insurance carried on it, but it will not nearly cover the loss.

Red Cross Supply Committee Meeting

The regular meeting of the Red Cross and Patriotic Supply committee was held on Monday evening in the Liberal Club rooms, the President, Mrs. Lazier, in the chair. The meeting was well attended, about fifty being present, and every one was most enthusiastic.

Mrs. O'Flynn, convenor of the Supply Committee, reported 400 pairs of socks in one box and in another 100 pairs, 84 army shirts, 50 colored handkerchiefs; also donations from a number of friends which were gratefully received. Mrs. Wills, convenor of the Soldiers' Wives Committee, reported 32 families visited during the month and all seemed well satisfied. Miss Green, convenor of Hospital Supplies, reported one box nearly finished.

Mrs. H. A. Yeomans, convenor of the Rainbow Circles, co-convenor Mrs. Langford; Treasurer, Mrs. Mather, reported 25 circles, in all 276 members. The following are the convenors of the circles — Mesdames Hyman, Waters, Bogart, T. E. Ketcheson, MacLaurin, Seymour, F. Ketcheson, Graham, Clark, Munns, Waddell, S. D. Lazier, Sprague, Borbridge, Finnigan, L. W. Yeomans, Strom, Stewart, Scantlebury, Campbell, Mitchell; Miss Herbert, Miss Libbie and St. Agnes School.

The Hastings Liberal Club gave a most enjoyable evening, Mr. O'Flynn's address was a treat and added a nice amount to the funds of the Women's Patriotic Association.

The following subscriptions are gratefully acknowledged: Deacon Bros., $10; High School Glee Club, $10; Money received from the sock shower, which included $100 from The Ritchie Co., $149.97; Miss I. A. Sutherland, $5; Mr. Wheatley's concert, $45; Mrs. Palmer, Kingston Road, 75c.; Mrs. J. Williams per Y's, $2; Miss Miller per Y's, $1; membership fees, 75c.—in all $717.10. Expenditure, $297.02. CHICAGO, March 4—Special—A banking firm here announced to-day that it would receive subscriptions for the new German Imperial Government 5 per cent. loan of 1,200,000,000 marks (about $300,000,000). A German circular issued by the bank says the opportunity to subscribe permits "the Germans in America to show their sympathy for the fatherland." This is the first public offering of a war loan here by any of the belligerents.

What is Transpiring Among the Soldier Boys at Belleville and Kingston.

BELLEVILLE

Today several of the enlisters were busily engaged in unloading box cars containing bedding and supplies for the 39th battalion, which will be mobilized here. The supplies were stored in the old Pinnacle street school building.

A route march was indulged in this morning by a number of the members of 49th regiment, who have enlisted.

Many of the men were unable today to participate in active drill, owing to having been inoculated.

Captain J. Welch of Kingston, has been detailed to take charge of the A.S.C. supply depot for the 39th Battalion in Belleville and reported here today.

Major Hamilton, A.D.T.S., arrived here yesterday for the purpose of getting the work of the A.S.C. thoroughly started in this city.

Sergt. McManus of the R.M.C. clerical staff, Kingston, has accepted the position of orderly room clerk to the 39th Battalion, and left for Belleville today. The sergeant has had a great deal of experience in military-clerical work. He has served in the Imperial Army and belonged to the Essex Regiment, the unit to which the late Commandant, Colonel Carlton belonged. The long experience of Sergt. McManus will prove of great value to Lt.-Col. Preston in the work of organizing the administrative side of the 39th Battalion.

KINGSTON

The work of breaking raw recruits at Tete du Pont barracks is progressing nicely and all the men are showing keen interest in their work.

It is said that Major Barrett of the 5th Field battery has succeeded Lt.-Col. Rathbun as officer commanding the 9th brigade C.F.A.

Lieut.-Col. Bennington, O.C. 4th Hussars, came to the city yesterday morning with two war prisoners from Prescott. Both are Austrians and were trying to leave the country.

Major Hamilton has started to issue white fish to the local troops. These fish were brought by the government from the lake country north of Saskatoon, a district noted for the finest white fish securable in any part of Canada.

There are 25 cases of spinal meningitis among the members of the infantry quartered at the exhibition grounds in Toronto. It is said that this fact has something to do with the delay in sending the 4th Brigade overseas. The 21st Battalion is in the 4th Brigade.

There are seven officers and five non-coms. attending the provisional school of cavalry now in charge of Maj. Burritt, of the 5th P.L.D.G., of Ottawa. The major says the men are keen to acquire all the school has to offer them, and he is very pleased with the class

The new depot battery just organized at Tete du Pont Barracks, and now in command of Lieut. Steacy, will be known as "C" Battery, R.C.H.A. When "C" Battery was organized for South Africa it was commanded by Lieut.-Col Hudon and participated in the relief of Mafeking.

Mr. Grant Dickinson, of Napanee has been attached to the office staff of the A.S.C. at Tete du Pont Barracks. Mr. Dickinson's parents lived in Kingston some years ago and his father is very well known locally. Mr. Grant Dickinson will go overseas with Captain Craig, and will do clerical work at the A.S.C. training depot.

Identification discs will soon be issued to all overseas volunteers. The discs are about an inch in diameter and on them are stamped the regimental number, name, unit and church.

Pte. W. Carruthers, No. 4 company 21st Battalion, was in such a hurry to get to the front that he deserted from the battalion and paid his own fare to England. He was arrested when he tried to enlist in another regiment, and will be held until the 21st Battalion reaches England. Every man in the battalion is very anxious to get overseas, but this is the first man who had adopted such a radical course.

BRITAIN'S SEA POWER

Many lessons are to be learned from the present terrible conflict abroad, and that some of them will be of a painful nature is a foregone conclusion, some of importance, others merely useful. The realization of the vital significance of sea power, suggests The Montreal Daily Mail, is changing day by day from a splendid idea to a still more splendid fact, and it is a fact of which the British nations have good reason to be proud.

The lesson of sea power is being driven home in a very painful manner to Germany, who sees her overseas trade paralyzed by the silent and invisible leviathans of the North Sea. Turkey, too, has good reason to know something of the British and French navies because it is in what are, or were, Turkish waters that the allied navies are thrusting their way through the Dardanells with such a terrific rain of shot and shell as the world has never witnessed.

Kaiser Wilhelm said, in one of those moments of perspicacity that seem to alternate with him with long years of foolishness, that the German future was on the water. Except that he should have said "under" the water, he was quite correct, but that by the way.

We are more directly concerned with the future of Canada, and that is being decided right now on the blood-stained battlefields of Belgium and France and in the North Sea. That is a statement which has been flogged forward into print by a great many newspaper writers, but it will bear repetition until its force is realized by every man and woman in the Dominion.

The future of Canada is being defended by the allied armies and navies, but it is with the latter that the maintenance of that future will chiefly lie. A political leader said in one of his least inspired moments that Defence, like Charity, begins at home; but he would scarcely echo that statement now. The defence of any part of the British Empire begins with the defence of the whole of it, and for that task the navy is supreme, and the first problem before our rulers after the war is the maintenance of our share of the burden of Imperial sea power.

That is the greatest lesson to be learned to-day.

THE QUEBEC MARRIAGE

The full text of the judgment of the Privy Council in the Tremblay-Despatie marriage case, which deals with the legal standing of marriages of persons related in the fourth degree of consanguinity, has been received in Canada. The Privy Council directs that the case be reheard, and recommends that the Attorney-General of Quebec be advised of the character of the case, so that he may consider the advisability of the Government intervening in the case. The marriage laws of Quebec, as interpreted by the Supreme Court in this case, give to the civil courts the right to give effect to the laws of the Roman Catholic Church concerning marriage. The Privy Council, however, argues as follows: "It may well be argued that the intention of the article in the civil code dealing with marriage was to make no change in the marriage law so far as the various religious communities are concerned, but to leave it in the same position as it was before the passing of the code. In other words, that the effect of the article is to leave the marriage law in these respects uncodified, and not to create a new marriage law based entirely on the code. If it should be held that the intention of the article is that the marriage law in these respects should be unchanged, the case will necessarily require to be decided as it would have been prior to the passing of the code, and it will be necessary to find out the law as it existed." In the reargument of the case this question is to be discussed, and the marriage conditions which existed in old Quebec will doubtless be thoroughly ventilated. Under the old regime it seems pretty well decided that the church law as it stands to-day was certainly not enforced.

NOT ENTITLED TO MERCY

If half the story reported from New York of endeavor made by anarchists to indulge in wholesale murder after blowing up the splendid St. Patrick's cathedral and destroying most important banks is true, there is something in it to set people thinking, asserts a prominent New York paper:

The enemy of society, that is, the individual who sticks at nothing in order to gain property for himself without earning it or working for it, who is ready to commit murder and arson, as well as mere robbery; is the kind of person who ought to be wiped off the face of the earth.

It is false sentiment which urges that the extreme type of breakers of laws should be merely imprisoned for life, instead of being executed within a reasonable time after a capital crime is proved against him.

The plan to destroy St. Patrick's and to murder leading citizens, as well as to destroy and rob great banking houses, is a kind of business that might be taken on a lesser scale in smaller places throughout the Union. It remains for society to stamp such movements out promptly and without mercy.

CURRENT COMMENT

The seizure of the Dacia by a French cruiser will help to impress upon the American mind that, if Great Britain is usually most in evidence in such matters because of her command of the seas, the other allies are as one with her in her policy.

A give-a-man-a-job movement has been started in Toronto with a committee of 140 leading citizens named by the Mayor. The idea is such a worthy one that it deserved every success. Work is vastly better than charity in the eyes of every honest man.

The budget debate in the House of Commons is being prolonged, but hardly for its usefulness, says the Montreal Gazette. It would seem that some are talking in expectation of something turning up to help them before they conclude. What they say can hardly of itself help either the country or the Opposition.

General French, in one of his reports, states that he and the principal commanders under him consider that the Territorial Force "has far more than justified the most sanguine hopes that any of us ventured to entertain of their value and use in the field." A fine compliment to the British volunteers and a bouquet for Haldane, the man responsible for their establishment.

The brilliant success of the British and French fleets in reducing the outer Turkish forts on the Dardanelles, with the promise of further success along the road to Constantinople, is unquestionably one of the most important results of the war to date. The quick influence exerted upon the world's wheat market by this operation is an evidence of its far-reaching importance.

The Canadian Club of Montreal has done the right thing in starting a campaign in aid of recruiting, based not upon hysteria but upon an intelligent exposition of the facts of the war. This is treating the public in a self-respecting way, suggesting that the opinion is held that the public will respond once it realizes better the demands of the occasion.

The House of Commons acted with judgment in declining to pass a resolution in favor of controlling the export of foodstuffs and so regulating the prices at which they should be sold for home consumption. Such action may be necessary when a country is in a state of siege or when war has shut off its supplies. Even then, however, it is an extreme measure of public safety, and it implies the creation of burdens against which producers may reasonably protest. The export of surplus foodstuffs also is a means of raising money, and Canada at present has much need of money, for peaceful as well as for warlike uses.

Montreal Mail: "Since the start of the present war, Germany's incompetent diplomacy has been the jest of students of government the world over. It launched her upon her reckless course of warfare without a minimum of the advantages she might have acquired. Against the background of her military efficiency her diplomatic force stood out as ridiculously inadequate as her effective naval efficiency. What turned her into a wrong course, at the start, has now hurried her along a mischievous and erroneous course towards the finish."

Toronto News: "Members of the Opposition have been trying to make party capital out of the tariff changes. They have sought to make it appear that the Government was decreasing the British preference. The fact is that Mr. White is increasing the preference on imports from the Mother Country. The general tariff is raised 7½ per cent. and the preferential tariff 5 per cent. Thus, while the duty on British goods is advanced 5 per cent., the preference on the same goods is advanced 2½ per cent. There is no getting around this truth."

GLOOM IN HOLLAND

Blockade a Blow to Dutch Shipping Interests

ROTTERDAM, March 3.—Mr. Asquith's declaration, while not causing a great surprise in Holland, has nevertheless created something like gloom in Dutch shipping circles. When the war commenced all German exports were diverted from German ports to Holland, whose shipping lines have since been carrying on a big trade in goods not on the contraband list. All this is now stopped and the very big trading interests are naturally affected.

It is computed, for instance, that quite sixty per cent. of the trade of one line wil be stopped. By the Allies prohibition of exportation of several things that can only be obtained from Germany, the need of these, it is believed, will be sorely felt in the neutral countries, while the duties paid to colonies which use large quantities of cheap German machinery, will also be affected.

In Amsterdam there is a disposition to do nothing at present owing to the fact that cargoes now at sea are not affected by the declaration.

It is also pointed out that the stagnation which followed the declaration of war has not lasted, and the shippers prefer to wait and see if some means cannot be found to bridge the new difficulties satisfactorily.

The fact that a man sits up to 11 p.m. studying the seed catalougue does not necessarily mean that he will work in the garden until 11 a.m., some of those warm spring days.

Horses for farm work may be scarce next summer as the result of big shipments to Europe. But there is no cause to worry as long as the automobile is assured for pleasure riding.

TORTURED BY CONSTIPATION

"Fruit-a-tives" Cured Paralyzed Bowels and Digestion

ST. BONIFACE DE SHAWINIGAN, QUE.
Feb. 3rd. 1914.

"It is a pleasure to me to inform you that after suffering from Chronic Constipation for 2½ years, I have been cured by "Fruit-a-tives". While I was a student at Berthier College, I became so ill I was forced to leave the the college. Severe pains across the intestines continually tortured me and it came to a point when I could not stoop down at all, and my Digestion became paralyzed. Some one advised me to take "Fruit-a-tives" and at once I felt a great improvement. After I had taken four or five boxes, I realized that I was completely cured and what made me glad, also, was that they were acting gently, causing no pain whatever to the bowels. All those who suffer with Chronic Constipation should follow my example and take "Fruit-a-tives" for they are the medicine that cures".

MAGLOIRE PAQUIN

"Fruit-a-tives" are sold by all dealers at 50c. a box, 6 for $2.50, trial size, 25c. or sent postpaid on receipt of price by Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

GRAIN RESERVES.

B. W. Snow estimates the farm reserves of wheat at 169,000,000 bushels, against 166,000,000 bushels a year ago, and 171,000,000 bushels two years ago. The present reserves are 60,000,000 bushels smaller than figures of crop estimates, and known distribution to date would indicate only 55,000,000 bushels wheat left for export in four months and carry-over stocks in all positions June 30. Corn reserves, 961,000,000 bushels, against 883,000,000 bushels last year and 1,362,000,000 bushels two years ago. Consumption since November first was 229,000,000 bushels greater than a year ago.

Oats reserves, 361,000,000 bushels, against 390,000,000 bushels last year and 567,000,000 bushels two years ago. The present reserves are the smallest in five years with the exception of 1912.

German Sniper Is Gradually Disappearing

British Sharpshooters are Proving too Good at Marksmanship for This Pest

LONDON, March 3.—The annoyance of snipers, to which the British troops have been subject ever since they began operations in France, has now been practically stopped, according to "Eyewitness" accounts from British general headquarters.

"The activities of the enemy's snipers", he writes, "have diminished of late owing to the markmanship of our sharpshooters. These snipers frequently cover themselves with ferns or straw so as to render themselves less easily distinguished when crawling on grass or stubble. At one place on this day (February 8th) out of five German snipers who had crawled out in front of their trenches and were trying to annoy us, three were promptly shot dead. At another point one of our marksmen recently accounted for six, single-handed. Similar rounding-up of snipers by our patrols is taking place on other parts of the front and is an encouraging indication that this nuisance is being effectively dealt with."

He adds two other interesting paragraphs: "A party of our officers had an extraordinary escape on this day. They were on the point of sitting down to dinner in a dug-out when a bomb from a German trench mortar landed in their midst. When the smoke and dust of the explosion cleared away the dinner had completely disappeared, but not a single man was hurt.

"An incident recently occurred on the left which serve to show the nature of the present under-ground fighting. An old disused communication trench, which led from one of our trenches towards those of the enemy, had been blockd by us with a barbed-wire entanglement. One night a party of Germans cut the entanglement. When this was discovered one of our men repaired it, and on the next night lay in wait in hope that the enemy would come again. They were not disappointed. Six Germans came cautiously up the narrow trench to the entanglement and were all shot dead at point-blank range. The endeavor to get the better of the enemy in all sorts of little ways such as this makes up the daily life of the soldier."

What Dyspeptics Should Eat

A PHYSICIAN'S ADVICE

"Indigestion and practically all forms of stomach trouble are, nine times out of ten, due to acidity; therefore stomach sufferers should whenever possible avoid eating food that is acid in its nature, or which by chemical action in the stomach develops acidity. Unfortunately, such a rule eliminates most foods which are pleasant to the taste as well as those which are rich in blood, flesh and nerve building properties. This is the reason why dyspeptics and stomach sufferers are usually so thin, emaciated and lacking in that vital energy which can only come from a well fed body. For benefit of those sufferers who have been obliged to exclude from their diet all starchy, sweet or fatty food, and are trying to give up a miserable existence on gluten products, I would suggest that you should try a meal of any food or foods which you may like, in moderate amount, taking immediately afterwards a teaspoonful of bisurated magnesia in a little hot or cold water. This will neutralize any acid which may be present or which may be formed, and instead of the usual feeling of uneasiness and fullness, you will find that your food agrees with you perfectly. Bisurated magnesia is doubtless the best food corrective and antacid known. It has no direct action on the stomach; but by neutralizing the acidity of the food contents, and thus removing the source of the acid irritation which inflames the delicate stomach lining, it does more than could possibly be done by any drug or medicine. As a physician, I believe in the use of medicine whenever necessary, but I must admit that I cannot see the sense of dosing an inflamed and irritated stomach with drugs instead of getting rid of the acid—the cause of all the trouble. Get a little bisurated magnesia from your druggist, eat what you want at your next meal, take some of the bisurated magnesia as directed above, and see if I'm not right."

"WAR"

Our New Serial Story

THE MOST FAMOUS WAR NOVEL OF MODERN TIMES, SHOWING GERMANY'S RUTHLESS HAND IN FRANCE, AUSTRIA AND DENMARK

Under the title "Disarm" this novel won for its author, Baroness Bertha Von Suttner, the Nobel Peace Prize

The story contains some passages strangely prophetic of the present world struggle, although the final scene of the story is the Franco-Prussian War of 44 years ago. The hypocrisy of a nation adopting conscription and a policy of huge armaments and pretending to hope for peace is proven to the hilt.

GIRL DEAD BESIDE LOVER

"By the side of a young French cavalry officer, who had been hit in a fight on the Aisne we found the body of a pretty girl," says Sergeant Payne, who is at Bristol, wounded. "Both were dead. Their story was as sad as anything I have heard of in a war full of tragedies. When the young man joined his regiment the girl left a convent school and attached herself to the Red Cross.

"Hearing that her sweetheart had not returned from a charge in which his regiment was engaged, she had gone out with the ambulance men to look for him. Going in advance she had found him, and while attending to his wounds was hit by a stray bullet, which penetrated her right lung and killed her. They were buried side by side."

Marvelous Balsamic Essences Cure Catarrh

No Drugs to Take--A Direct Breathing Cure

Statistics Prove Ninety-seven Per Cent of Canada's Population is Infester With the Germs of Catarrh.

This disease is most dangerous owing to its tendency to extend to the Bronchial tubes and lungs, where it causes Consumption. Unfortunately the people have had faith in sprays, ointments and snuffs, which can't possibly cure, and in consequence catarrhal disease has become a national curse. Science is advancing every day, and fortunately a remedy has been discovered that not only cures but prevents Catarrh. This new treatment "Catarrhozone" has sufficient power to kill the germs of Bronchitis, Catarrh and Asthma. It contains pure pine essences and healing balsams that go to the remotest part of the nose, throat and lungs, carrying health-giving medication to every spot that is tainted or weak. You don't take Catarrhozone like cough mixture—you inhale its healing vapor at the mouth and it spreads all through the breathing organs, soothing and curing wherever Catarrh exists. This is nature's Way of supplying the richest balsams, the purest antiseptics known to science.

A sneezing cold is cured in ten minutes. A harsh cough is eased in an hour, the most offensive catarrh is thoroughly drawn from the system.

For Asthma and Bronchial irritation nothing can equal Catarrhozone—every physician and druggist say so, and we advise our readers to try this treatment if suffering with an winter ill. The complete outfit costs $1.00, medium size 50c., at all dealers.

LIVE STOCK GROWTH IN WEST

The remarkable growth in the live stock industry of southern Alberta which has taken place during the present year has been reflected recently in an interesting statistical statement submitted by Alderman H. W. Riley of Calgary to the Council of that city. During the ten months of 1914 ending October 31 the following record of the movement of live stock through Calgary was taken: Horses, 9,952; cattle, 33,169; hogs, 155,744; sheep, 20,990; making a total of 219,855 head. This compares with the following receipts during the same period in 1913; Horses, 6,651; cattle, 27,255; hogs, 19,627; sheep, 10,735; making a total of 64,268 head.

Still more significant is the comparison when expressed in terms of dollars. Three years ago the total live stock business handled through the Calgary stock yards amounted to $2,500,000. Last year it amounted to $3,000,000; while this year for ten months only the total trade is valued at $9,000,000. The reason given by the cattle and stock men for this phenomenal increase, so Alderman Riley says, is the presence for the first time on the Calgary market of other big buyers than those of the local P. Burns Company. Never until this year has Alberta's live stock industry felt the stimulus of a competitive demand from Seattle, Vancouver and Chicago, as well as from the packers of Alberta.

A WORD TO THE EMBALMERS

A. Wilson, Vennachar, writes with regard to the alleged experience of two Kingston embalmers with wolves near that place recently. He says it was too bad there was not strychnine on the meat the embalmers say their driver threw out of the sleigh to halt the progress of the oncoming wolves, for there is a bounty of $15 for a wolf skin. However, Mr. Wilson says that there are some wolves back there, but old trappers cannot coax them to chase them or to eat pieces of meat they leave for the animals.—Kingston Whig.

The New Way Ends It

Some folks still cling to liquids, to inefficient plasters, or to merely paring corns.

They wrong themselves.

They apply one in a jiffy, then forget the corn. In 48 hours, without pain or soreness, the entire corn comes out.

A famous chemist found this way which makes corns out-of-date. One can't prevent them easily, but to keep them is folly.

Millions of people know that.

EMBARRASSES THE GOV'T

Circular Alleged to Have SanctionedTrade With Enemy

LONDON, March 3.—Criticism of the Government's doctrinaire adherence to free trade as shown in the answer given by the President of the Board of Trade to a parliamentary question is not confined to Unionist newspapers. Recently the president issued a private circular to certain users of aniline dyes, which expressly sanctioned trading with the enemy for them, and explained how the law could best be evaded, so putting money into the pockets of the enemy rather than grant temporary protection to Biritsh industry.

When Premier Asquith was asked to reconcile this circular with his own declaration that all goods would be prevented leaving Germany under the new blockade, he refused to answer the question without notice.

ON WAY TO ENLIST WHEN DEATH CAME

TORONTO, Mar. 3.—An inquest was opened last night at the Morgue by Coroner Dr. Geo. W. Graham into the death of George Rowlings, Jjr., of St. Thomas, who was killed by a train on Monday night at the foot of Strachan avenue. From a letter found on the dead man it appears as if he was on his way to enlist at the Exhibition Camp and had wandered on to the tracks. The letter was dated Feb. 25, and was written in Guelph, being written to his father. In the missive the writer stated that he had been recommended by the Colonel of the regiment with which he had been doing orderly duty at Guelph, for enlistment in Toronto. The young man had been unable to obtain employment in Guelph, where he had stayed over the week. The inquest was adjourned until next Tuesday night. The body will be shipped to St. Thomas today for burial.

Submarine Holds up Dutch Ship in North Sea

LONDON, March 3.—When the Dutch steamer Princess Juliana arrived at Tilbury from Flushing yesterday evening, one of the crew stated that when about half-way across the North Sea a German submarine was sighted. The submarine approached the Princess Juliana and her crew examined her carefully. The name of the Dutch steamer had been painted in large white letters on each side and the crew of the submarine, having apparently satisfied themselves as to her nationality, made off.

CHAPTER I.

At seventeen I was a very highly-strung girl. I should hardly realize this to-day, if it were not for the diaries so carefully laid away. In them I find again my long-lost enthusiasms, thoughts, and feelings now utterly forgotten, convictions of which now not a vestige remains, and sympathies which have long been dead and buried. I catch a glimpse of the emptiness and silliness which filled my pretty little head. But, as I painfully learn from my mirror, of the prettiness little trace is left, although the old portraits assure me that it once existed.

I can imagine what an envied little creature the Countess Martha Althaus must have been, pretty, popular, and petted. These quaint little red diaries however, recorded more of sadness than of joy in her life. I think now "How could I have been so silly not to realize how singularly blessed I was with privileges?" Perhaps I was only expressing an unbalanced sentimentality, and I tried to express it in somewhat poetic prose. Imagine my discontent when I wrote:—

"O Joan of Arc! heroic, heavenly virgin! If only I too might have waved the oriflamme of France, crowned my king, and died for my fatherland!"

Alas! this modest ambition was never gratified.

Again, I longed to be torn in the arena by lions like the Christian martyrs. But the heroics were not for me. I must frankly admit that my life was a commonplace failure, and the glories for which my soul thirsted were for ever closed to me

Often the little red book exclaimed, "Oh that I had been born a boy!" Then I should have been able to win fame. But feminine heroes are few. How seldom we have Gracchi for sons, and not often may we hope to carry our husbands on our backs through the Weinsberg Gates, or to be a queen and hear the sabre-swinging Magyars shout, "Long live Maria Theresa, our King!" A man need only gird on the sword and dash to fame and laurels, to capture a throne like Cromwell, or a world-empire like Napoleon.

My highest type of manhood was always a military hero. I had slight respect for mere poets, scholars, and discoverers. The heroes of many battles were the object of my adoration and devotion. Were they not the chief pillars of the state, the makers of history, the builders of empires? Did they not tower in God-like grandeur over all other heroes, as did the Alps and Himalayas over mere grass and valley flowers?

From all this it need not be concluded that I possessed an heroic nature. My enthusiasms and passions naturally took their bent from my education and environment. My father was an Austrian General, who had fought under "Father Radetzky" at Custozza, and therefore adored him. I listened untiringly to the unending stories of this campaign. My dear father actually pitied other men who had not had these proud and glorious experiences, and I always regretted that I, being a girl, would never have these magnificent opportunities; and, having heard some mention of the question of the equal rights of women, I felt sure that the only additional right I should ever keenly desire would be the right to go to war. How charmed I was with the story of Semiramis or Catherine II. when I read: "She made war upon this or that neighboring kingdom, or she conquered this or that people."

The history books are responsible for this warlike ideal of the young. That the God of Battles has constantly decreed wars stamps itself upon the mind from the first, and one early accepts the belief that war is necessary to regulate nations, and is almost a law of nature, like tornadoes and earthquakes, which from time to time cannot be avoided. History does not cover up the wickedness, the sorrow, the anguish of it all, but presents it as a part of the inevitable, bringing advantage to the nation, through the sacrifice of the happiness and life of the few. That there is no nobler death than that of the soldier martyr is the clear and unanimous verdict of all our school histories and texts. Long lists of battles are given, and entrancing tales and poems of glory and heroism are told, for must not patriotism be taught, must not every boy grow to be a defender of his country? So he must be made a war-enthusiast early. His spirit must be hardened long before he questions through his natural sympathies why we inflict these horrors and sufferings upon others. Such doubts must be carefully repressed.

History as it is taught aims to warp the inborn, divine impulse to hate barbarism and inhumanity. The tale is so told as to belittle that part of the story which appeals to the sympathies.

And the same books, the same subjects, the same system, encouraging a like admiration for war and military heroics, are given to the girls—delightful pictures for the tender souls, who otherwise are taught that they must be gentle and mild. The frightful stories of carnage and rapine from Bible days, from Macedonian and Punic times down to the Thirty Years' War and Napoleon, repeat the horrors of the thing until the senses become callous. To read of cities burned and the people put to the sword with the victims trodden under foot was a keen enjoyment, and to heap one horror upon the other blunted the perceptions till war no longer could be regarded from the point of view of humanity, but was received as something quite special, mysterious, majestic, and sanctified.

The girls could readily see that war alone could give the highest honor and dignity, so they learn all th military and glorifying odes, and they become, like the Spartan mothers of old, the women who present battle-flags and regimental colors, and are the admired and happy belles during the ball season, when they receive the attentions of the brass-buttoned officers' corps.

As a child I had tutors and a governess at home, and was not reared in a convent, as was often the case with children of my position. My mother had died early, and the four children were watched over by an elderly aunt. We spent our winters in Vienna, and our summers on the estate in Lower Austria. Having a good memory and being ambitious, I was the delight of my teachers. Since I was denied the career of an heroic female warrior, I made it my enthusiasm to extol all who had helped to make the world's history through war. I mastered the French and English languages perfectly. I learned all that was considered necessary for girls in natural history, physics, and astronomy, but in the reading of history I knew no limit. The ponderous records of wars and nations I fetched from my father's library and spent with them my leisure hours.

On March 10, 1857, I celebrated my seventeenth birthday. "Already seventeen," I set down under this date. This "already" was a bit of symbolism, and undoubtedly was meant to signify "and as yet I have done nothing immortal."

The Season was approaching, and it was arranged that I should be introduced into society, but the prospect did not fill me with the keenest pleasure. I felt that my aims were higher than ballroom conquests. I could not have explained to myself what were the triumphs for which I longed. I was hardly aware of the romantic attitude which possessed me. I was full of glowing dreams and aspirations, such as swell the hearts of youths and maidens, and fill them with a longing to work out their ideals in all sorts of ways. It is at this age that the love of knowledge, action, travel, adventure, show themselves, and are perhaps only an unrecognized activity of the soul filled with desire to express itself.

Aunt Marie was ordered to try the waters at Marienbad during the summer, and found it convenient to take me. My coming-out in society was not to take place till the following winter, and this trip to the fashionable springs gave me a little preliminary practice in dancing and conversation, so that I could wear off some of the shyness before my first season.

Naturally at my first ball I had no eyes for anything but the brilliant military uniforms which were present in such array. But of all the splendid Hussars, Count Arno Dotzky was the most dazzling, and with him I danced the cotillion and several waltzes.

The acquaintance quickly ripened into an attachment, and we were betrothed on my eighteenth birthday, after which I was presented at court.

CHAPTER II.

After our marriage we took an Italian journey, having been granted a long leave of absence. Retirement from the army was never mentioned between us. We both possessed handsome fortunes, but my husband loved the military services, and I was proud of my elegant Hussar, and looked forward to his certain promotion. He would rise unquestionably to the rank of major, colonel, or even general. Who knew but he might be even called to the highest rank, and add his name to the history of his country, great as a conqueror!

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

BRITISH NOW THE TOP DOG AT THE ESPIONAGE GAME

Have Turned Tables on Germans Since War Began in This Direction—Knew of North Sea Raid—Admiralty Had Perfected Plans to Trap the Enemy Squadron Which Fog Frustrated

NEW YORK, March 3.—The English information service, which was practically of no assistance at the beginning of the war, is now much better than the Germans, said a man today whose own resources of information are unusual and who has just come back from England.

"When the war broke out," he went on, "the German system of espionage was, as has since become known, the most complete in the world, and for many months it was terror of the commanders of the Allies. Many an attack in France failed because the Germans seemed to know just from which source it came, and at just what point it would be directed. Time after time a new disposition of forces had hardly been made when German shells would begin to find the headquarters and cause a hasty abandonment of the spot. In Berlin what was done in London or in Paris seemed to be known always long before the news had found its way outside of a small English and French official coterie.

"It was the same way with some of the naval movements. The German information service on the coast of South America was able to keep Admiral von Spree informed of every move made by the squadron that the Scharnhorst and her companion ships later destroyed.

"The British information service had to be practically re-organized in every particular, and the work of reorganization has been so complete that the German spy system does not compare with it now.

"I happen to know, for instance that the British Admiralty knew in advance of the proposed raid on Scarborough, and, not only that, but knew the name of every German ship in the expedition. Plans were made to meet it, and had it not been for an interposition of natural forces, the first fleet would have been cut off from its base.

"Two divisions of the British North Sea fleet started out to meet the invaders. One started from a base north of Scarborough and the other from a base some miles south of it. They laid their course for a spot in the North Sea at which a junction would have meant the surrounding of the German squadron.

"The German vessels, even not knowing or unheeding the trap that was being prepared for them, steamed straight across toward the British coast. After they had passed the spot where the two British divisions were to join a heavy fog set it, and this became so thick that it proved impossible for the British plans to be carried out. So that when the Germans started back, after having delievered their attack, the junction could not be effected and their ships got out of the danger zone, the only British vessel getting a shot at them being a destroyer that managed to hit one in the stern with a torpedo, inflicting damage, the extent of which has not become known.

"Then when the Blucher and her companion ships started out on the second raid, the Admiralty had full information as before. This time the elements did not fight for Germany, and, as everybody knows, Admiral Sir David Beatty was able to deliver a crushing blow.

"The Allies have had to take several leaves out of the German book since the war began. And you will find before the war is over, that there is many a thing that the Germans spent years in perfecting as they thought, which the Allies, after studying, have been able to improve upon."

Captain O'Flynn Writes From France

Mrs. O'Flynn, Bridge Street East, received a letter this morning from her son at the front. He described the voyage from England to France, saying that it was a very rough but interesting voyage. He said they had good quarters in France, and he found the French he studied under Mr. Milburn was coming back to him and he could make himself understood, although he could not speak it well.

He mentions especially Lieutenant Ponton and Lieutenant Ackerman of Peterborough; writes they are all well and pleased that they have reached the battle line, where they can do their part for the Empire and the Flag. The letter was written, as subsequent cables show, two days before going into the trenches.

SPORTING NEWS

BELLEVILLE WON 17-8

A picked Belleville team last night crossed sticks with the Deseronto team, supposed to be the champions of the Bay of Quinte district, and what was thought would be good game turned out as a burlesque, as the Deseronto boys were no match for their much heavier opponents, and Belleville were able to score almost at will.

Although outclassed the Deseronto team played together nicely, showing some fine combination, which Belleville lacked, and playing a clean game. Their two wing men played a star game, Houle being a shining light and securing most of the goals. For the locals Finkle and L. Arnott showed up most prominently. The final score was 17 to 8. G. White refereed and gave the best of satisfaction to both the teams. The lineup:

Belleville—Goal, Phillips; defence, Marshall, Finkle; rover, Tulte; center, G. Arnott; wings, L. Arnott, Bowen.

Deseronto—Goal, Stephenson; defence, Roach, Cole; rover, Masters; center, Thompson; wings, Howard, Houle.

During the intermissions and before the game the Fifteenth Regimental Band was present, and rendered suitable selections, which were much appreciated by the fans.

MAKES A SUGGESTION

Dear Editor,—

Thurlow Township having refused to respond to my appeal, for equal treatment with the soldiers' wives of Belleville regarding Patriotic pay, they should insure my husband. Surely there can be no objection here. Why should I be the only wife of the contingent whose claims are ignored? It is another instance of advantage of town over country. Belleville has been generous in her treatment of soldiers' wives. Thurlow has shown herself unjust and niggardly.

Trusting you will give me space.

MRS. C. GATCUM.

What Inoculation Has Accomplished

Treatment Undergone as Prevention Against Typhoid Fever

The inoculation of the soldiers at Belleville Armouries as a precautionary measure against typhoid fever, has prompted this query: What success has attended this measure among the soldiers at the front?

Sir Frederick Treeves, in an address delivered in London last week, made known the extraordinary fact that not a single man in the British Expeditionary force who was inoculated against typhoid fever has died of that disease, the common scourge of armies. Sir Frederick said that when the history of the present war comes to be written an astonishing feature of it would be the sanitary precautions successfully taken to secure the health of the soldiers. As to the success of inoculation againt typhoid there is no kind of doubt. Sir Frederick said:

"The results in the present Expeditionary Force have been positively astonishing. Since the war began there have been in the British Expeditionary Force only 212 cases of typhoid fever. Of these 201 were unprotected men. Of the 201, 173 were not inoculatd at all, while 28 had received either one inoculation, or had not been inoculated for over a period of two years. Of the 212 only 11 men had been inoculated. These figures cannot be gainsaid. Moreover, amongst these 212 patients there were 22 deaths. All these deaths were in the cases of non-inoculated men. Not a single man had died of typhoid fever in the British Expeditionary Force who had been inoculated. (Applause.) I imagine that there is nothing more to be said on the matter, if facts are of any value, and those who attempt to persuade the soldiers not to be inoculated are playing into the hands of the enemy and giving him exactly the advice the Germans would be only too pleased to give him."

THINKS BERNARD SHAW SHOULD GET THE IRON CROSS

Nineteenth Centuary Article Flays Him for His Services to Germany—H. G. Wells Also Rapped—Writer Says Their Irresponsible Opinions Gives Americans Wrong Impressions of Their Importance

LONDON, March 2—Bernard Shaw, H. G. Wells and the influence of their writing about the war on American opinion are the subject of a forcible article by J. O. P. Blaind, a journalist, in the March issue of the Nineteenth Century.

"Englishmen are no doubt justified in treating the political opinions of Shaw and Wells with contemptuous indifference", said Mr. Blaind, "but are not justified in shutting their eyes to the possible effects of these utterances on public opinion abroad, leaving them to do their pernicious work unchallenged and unrebuked."

Speaking of Mr. Shaw's "Common Sense pamphlet, Mr. Blaind says:

"The mass of his countrymen since the outbreak of the war have had enough serious things to think about and to do without troubling themselves to digest the masquerades of this literary harlequin. To judge from current opinion most Englishmen regard these eccentricities and excesses of Shaw's genius much the same way as they regard the well-advertised Red Cross activities of certain ladies of the theatrical and fashionable world but in America, where he commands a far wider circle of readers, there can be no doubt he has rendered services to Germany sufficient to entitle him to the Iron Cross at the hands of the Kaiser. The conditions under which his mud-slinging is done makes it certain that some of it will stick to the prejudice hereafter of our national interests in the day of reckoning. It is not for nothing that the German Press Bureau has given wide circulation to his pamphlet, as propaganda literature calculated to strengthen Germany's position in neutral countries.

"In the exuberance of his own performance, however, Shaw has overdoen it. Even the little Broadway shop girl, digesting him through the columns of New York papers in her diligent perusal of culture, must experience an uneasy feeling that this idol of American press is not to be taken seriously. It is not easy at a time like this for the master cynic to pose successfully in the minority of one against all Europe as the sole repository of true wisdom."

Mr. Blaind's conclusion is: "The irresponsible opinions uttered astensibly in the name of English liberalism by writers whose names are household words on both sides of the Atlantic, have encouraged a belief, already widely prevalent in America, that the United States eventually will be required to act as mediator and arbiter of the terms of peace in Europe. They personally have created the feeling that, the Monroe Doctrine to the contrary notwithstanding, America has a moral right to be consulted whenever the re-drawing of the map of Europe takes place. The reiterated appeals of these writers to the United States as a moral force find their answer in Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler's expressed belief that because 'we (America) are the first moral power in the world to-day', and 'have made good our right to be appealed to on questions of national and international morality.' 'These views', says a writer, 'must make every American's heart first swell with pride and then thrill with the realization of the responsibility.'

"Therein", concludes Mr. Bland, "lies their mischief and their possible danger. For this war will not end in arbitration, nor by any outside intervention, but only by Germany's complete surrender."

REFORM OF SENATE IS BROACHED AGAIN

Major Sam Sharpe Asks for a Conference of Committees

OTTAWA, March 3.—Major Sam Sharpe is the latest member who proposes to reform the Senate. Major Sharpe has given notice of a resolution which proposes that a committee of the House should be appointed to meet a similar committee from the Senate during the session or during recess "to consider and report upon a plan for the reform of the Senate as now constituted."

The resolution goes on to say that "the present condition of the Senate is inconsistent with the Federal principle in our system of government, and is in other respects defective, as it makes the Senate independent of the people and 'uncontrolled by public opinion." It should therefore be amended so as to bring it into harmony with the principles of popular government.

And no doubt the Berlin newspapers issued special editions to describe the heroic work of the German armies in capturing a number of French doctors, nurses and attendants.

Says Germans Jailed Americans In Belgium

London Express Reports Hostility Due to Wilson's Note on the War Zone

LONDON, Mar. 3.—A dispatch to The Daily Express, dated "On the Belgian Frontier," says:

"German resentment against America, which has grown to a dangerous extent in Germany since the failure of the blockade warning to intimidate the United States, is now also apparent in Belgium. I am told that the relations between the German officers and the Americans engaged in neutral work in the occupied territory, while still polite, are far less cordial than during the campaign of conciliation waged in the United States by the Bernstorff-Dernburg bureau.

"Several significant incidents which have occurred recently show how the altered attitude of Berlin is faithfully reflected by the army. A closer watch is being kept on American workers for the Belgian relief organization. They are shadowed during their periodic journeys between Holland and the German lines, and there is a growing disposition to regard them as potential spies because, in the words of one German staff officer at Antwerp, who was educated in England, 'American neutrality now means friendship for England.'

"Two Americans, engaged in distributing the food supplies, received from the United States were twice sent back from the frontier to Antwerp within a week while travelling from Brussels to Rotterdam in a neutral motor car. On the second occasion a sergeant commanding the frontier guard, locked them in a guard room for a preliminary examination and then ordered them back to the Kommandatur in Antwerp, escorted by two Mannheim Landsturm infantrymen, who ostentatiously loaded their rifles before they entered the car.

"On arriving at the office of the Kommandatur in Antwerp the Americans were detained for three hours in custody before being cross-examined separately. Then they were told that they were free, without any explanation or apolgy being vouchsafed for their detention. They were allowed to travel into Holland the next day."

ASKED TILE DRAIN FOR THE FARMERS

Request of Member for Cochrane Was Opposed by the Premier

TORONTO, March 3.—On the discussion in the Legislature yesterday of the bill in committee to assist the farmers of Northern Ontario by supplying them with seed grain this spring, Mr. Malcolm Lang, the new Liberal member for the riding of Cochrane, proposed that the Government also spend $100,000 to assist the farmers in New Ontario to tile drain their farms.

The Prime Minister, in opposing the suggestion of the member for Cochrane, pointed out that very few farmers in the unorganized districts were in a position to instal a system of tile drainage. Surface drains were in much greater demand. The cost also put it out of the realm of practical work in the newer districts such as were referred to by Mr. Lang. It would cost from $22 to $30 an acre.

Hon. Mr. Hearst spoke of the excellent work the Agricultural Department was doing at the Experimental Farm at Monteith and also at New Liskeard in demonstrating to the farmers the method of installing a system of tile drainage and the cost of such a system.

Mr. Mageau, Liberal member for Sturgeon Falls, suggested after Mr. Lang's amendment had been lost that the Government use $100,000 to assist the settlers in the construction of open drains. The Prime Minister replied that Mr. Whitson was already constructing drains along the roads of unusual width and was running lateral drains off these. The suggestion of the member for Sturgeon Falls was worthy of serious consideration, said Mr. Hearst. The proposal was voted down.

COLORED LAWYER KILLED

HALIFAX, March 4.—Special—Jas. R. Johnston, a prominent colored lawyer of this city, was shot and killed in front of his residence on Macara street last night, and Harry Allen, brother-in-law of the deceased, has given himself up to the police. Johnston was fired on when inside his house, and rushed out into the street, followed by his assailant, who, it is stated, finished his work on the sidewalk. A revolver, from which five shots had been fired, was found on Allen. Within an hour of the shooting Allen came to the house and was arrested by the police.

DIED FROM STRYCHNINE

PETERBORO, March 4.—Special—Following is the text of the verdict by the jury last night in the case of Dr. Ernest W. Brown:

"On inquiry into the death of Dr. Brown, charged with murder in causing the death of Helen Brown, we find that E. W. Brown came to his death at the police station, Peterboro', March 2, from strychnine poisoning, and from the evidence submitted, believe the same to have been self-administered while in a depressed state of mind."

ENEMY'S AIR BOMBS KILL NURSE AND CHILD

Attacks Bathing Town on Belgian Coast and Aim Missiles at a Column of the Enemy

NORTH OF FRANCE, March 3.—On Friday afternoon four German aeroplanes flew over La Panne, a small bathing place on the seacoast. The airmen threw several bombs. One bomb carried away the cornice of a villa and killed a nurse and little boy she was carrying in her arms. A military tailor was also killed.

The aeroplanes did their best to disperse a Belgian column marching along the Adinkerke road, but as they kept very high in the air in order to avoid the shells that were fired at them, the bombs were badly aimed and fell far from their target.

Returning over La Panne the airmen did still more damage and claimed further victims, including the wife of a doctor. Afterwards the air squadron made off over Bray-Dunes, but found themselves face to face with British and French aeroplanes, and immediately swerved off.

German Believes Word of Briton

A prominent German Socialist, Edward Bernstein, writing in the Leipziger Volkszeitung", delivers a furious attack on all the German papers for their constant "blackmailing" of the British national character as one of hypocrisy, mendacity and fraud.

Bernstein says that he and many other German Socialists have found by experience that the word of an Englishman could be trusted to a greater extent than that of a German in Germany. When German Socialists like Liebknecht were not allowed to live in Germany they found friends in England. German soldiers were coming back full of respect for the English.

The world must known, says the writer, that all German Socialists will fight to a finish for Germany's liberty, and the German Socialists are among those who will at any time lend a hand towards securing an honorable peace, favoring justice to everybody. They would do so independently of Germany's economic condition.

WHERE HORROR OF WAR IS FELT IN ALL ITS HIDEOUSNESS

American Doctor Comes Back From Evacuation Hospital an Apostle of Peace—Is Sure Allies Will Win—Defeat Would See Europe Transformed Into Armed Camp All the Time, He Asserts

ANSONIA, Conn., Mar. 3.—The man who favored war must be a fool, was the first expression of Dr. Sheahan, who has just returned from France, when interviewed by a correspondent last night. Dr. and Mrs. M. J. Sheahan have been with the French army since October, being among the American physicians and nurses sent out by the Duchess de Tallyrand. He said he was not on the firing line nor was he at the drill ground where the excitement of one and the charm of the other makes participants forget the horrors of the first and the spectators thrill with the spectable of the second. He was where the terrible part of war was most apparent. To see the trainloads of wounded come into the evacuation hospital nightly, men with arms shot away, some with compound fractures of the leg, some with both eyes gone, many with their chins shot away all suffering horribly yet living, made a man, no matter how frequently he sees some cases and steeled his nerves to the shock, realize the awfulness of the crime of war, and in the doctor's case made him an advocate of world peace.

The doctor told many interesting adventures, and when asked what the outcome of the war would be he said: "I am neutral, but the Allies will win. Should they be defeated, Europe will have to be an armed camp."

Mrs. Sheahan acted as a nurse in the American hospital and was compelled to work hard and long hours and both declare they are glad to be back in America.

SOCKS FOR THE TROOPS

OTTAWA, Mar. 3.—The Liberal outcry against the movement to supply Canadian troops with extra hand-knitted socks and other comforts is to continue. The Prime Minister has explained that the Canadian troops were equipped with socks exactly on the same scale as the British armies in the field, but that in both Canada and England there were commendable movements by private individuals and associations for adding to these and other comforts. Since then it has been explained that the desirability of providing the troops with extra socks was recognized by Lord Kitchener in an appeal he made and which which met with a ready response in the Old Country. Despite these facts, the Opposition continues dissatisfied. Hon. Chas. Murphy has given notice of a long question dealing with the purchase of socks by the Government, and ending with "have the Canadian soldiers been supplied with a sufficient number of these socks to keep them comfortable and warm while on active service."

DR. ROBINSON SET FREE BY JURY

Rendered Verdict "Not Guilty" —Miss Blanche Yorke's Death No Longer Hangs Over Head of Young Tamworth Physician— Jurors Fully Charged by Mr. Justice Sutherland

NAPANEE, March 5.—(Special.)—Dr. C. K. Robinson was exonerated of the charge of murdering the late Blanche Yorke at Tamworth, July 8 last year, by the jury, who presented a verdict of not guilty to Mr. Justice Sutherland yesterday afternoon, after just over two hours' deliberation. Vociferous cheering by the big crowd present in the courtroom greeted the verdict, resulting in the administration of a sharp rebuke by his Lordship, who ordered the Sheriff to maintain order, and informed the cheering mob that this was "no time for levity or celebrations."

Presentment of Verdict

As the jury filed into the courtroom at 3.45 a death-like silence pervaded the chamber. The crowds inside and outside the building were speculating on the verdict, but seemed to agree that it would be that of acquittal, but the talking ceased automatically as the foreman rose to read his statement. His faltering voice first stammered out "guilty," and the crowd stared, but he immediately corrected himself.

A faint smile fluttered over Robinson's face as he realized that he was to be freed of the mantle of suspicion after wearing it nine months. The Robinson family, which included an aged mother, demonstrated their appreciation by flocking around Mr. T. C. Robinette, K.C., and W. S. Herrington, K.C., counsel for the prisoner.

The Judge's Acquittal.

Order regained, Mr. Justice Sutherland directed Robinson to stand up. "You have heard the verdict," said he. "I have nothing to add in that regard. You have suffered a great deal of anxiety and worry, much financial and professional damage has been sustained; much of this you will readily realize was brought on by the course you adopted on the night of July 8 last year and during the following weeks. No doubt the jury took the view that that woman's condition developed in your house, and what followed was the result of fear and apprehension of guilt. Your anxiety and worry must have been very great. My duty is, therefore, to say that you are, discharged."

Robinson immediately left the dock and shook hands with the jury. He later accompanied his wife downstairs towards the prison to collect his belongings, followed by a large crowd.

Lawyers' Addresses Plain Argument

The addresses delivered to the jury earlier in the day were totally devoid of rhetoric or sentimentality. Both Mr. Robinette and Crown Prosecutor Hutcheson confined themselves principally to the medical testimonies of the experts, or to questions of law, making only intermittent references to questions of fact with the intention of bringing points to prove or disprove the girl's state of advanced hemorrhage immediately before and after she visited Robinson's house on the night of her death.

His Lordship reviewed the evidence and explained exhaustively and minutely the law bearing on the various phases of murder. He pointed out what was a lawful and what an unlawful act in regard to operations of this kind.

Additional Instructions to Jury.

After the jury had been sent out Mr. Robinette suggested to his Lordship certain facts and questions of law that he submitted had not been fully explained to the jury during the Judge's address. This caused the jury to be brought back into the court and reminded that there was no money contract made between Miss Yorke and Robinson; that unless evidence of the performance of an unlawful act was produced the accused could be declared innocent; that no attempt at concealment was made on the evening of July 8; that, regarding the question of law, there was no evidence of an unlawful act; that unless evidence of omission could be found which resulted in death he could not be found guilty. Also that there was no evidence that had assistance been procured the girl's life would have been saved, and further that an error of judgment does not specifically mean criminal liability.

The jury left the courtroom at 1.10 p.m., and returned at 3.45 p.m.

It is understood that Robinson returned to the home of his parents at Kingston last night.

OPIUM SMUGGLING CHARGE

NEW YORK, March 4.—Tonko Milic, described as the vice-president of a Peruvian rubber corporation, and Gustave Waldeck, were arrested here to-day on the charge of being engaged in conspiracy to smuggle cocaine and opium in large quantities from Germany and Austria. They were placed under bonds of $5,000 each by a United States commissioner.

Millic, also known as Letara, is alleged to have perfected a scheme for smuggling Persian smoking opium in quantities sufficient to net him a profit of $200,000 a year. The forbidden drug was to be brought here from Dalmatia, in Austro-Hungary, where, it was alleged, Milic's father had a plantation devoted to raising the herb from which opium is extracted. It was to be concealed in bundles of sage, which is on the customs free list.

Halifax Lawyer Is Shot Dead

HALIFAX, N.S., March 4.—One of the most sensational murders ever committed in Halifax took place last night, when James B. Johnston, a young colored barrister, was shot and killed near his home on Macara street, by his brother-in-law, Harry C. Allen, also colored.

While Mr. Johnston, his wife and some relatives, including Allen, who boarded there, were at the evening meal, there were words between them. It is said Allen suddenly pulled a small seven-shooter from his hip pocket and opened fire at his host.

A family quarrel is said to be the cause of the tragedy.

ARE NOT NEUTRAL AS INDIVIDUALS

Dean of New York Says Majority of Americans Sympathize With Allies

NEW YORK, March 4.—Writing to The Canadian Churchman, the Very Rev. William M. Grosvenor, Dean of New York, says that it is impossible for the individual churchman in the United States to be either indifferent or unsympathetic with their brethren in England at the present time, although as a body the Church must stand being the Government in its neutrality. "It is almost impossible for us as individuals to be neutrals," writes Dean Grosvenor. "As a matter of fact, we are not. The great majority of the American people feel that German militarism with all its false philosophy and unchristian view of the supremacy of physical power, is most disastrous; and that the Allies are fighting for the principles of Government and the integrity of that Christian faith in which the perpetuity of our American Republic is alone assured."

GROWING CABBAGES IN ROYAL GARDENS

AMSTERDAM, March 4.—The Vossische Zeitung, in a recent issue, said it had heard from Vienna that on orders issued by Emperor Francis Joseph, the Imperial Gardens and all available space surrounding the Imperial palaces in and near Vienna should be used for the raising of cabbages to provide food for the people.

BIG ORDERS FOR CANADA

LONDON, March 5.—Orders for artillery ammunition and harness for the French Government amounting to over five million dollars, have been placed with Canada through the High Commissioner's Office here.

SWALLOWED HER PEARL

Doctor Sees His Wife Eat up $100 Gem and Spoil His Joke

NEW YORK, March 4.—The wife of a well-known New York physician has had an ambition. She has cut out every clipping she can find telling of persons finding beautiful pearls in raw oysters served at restaurants and hotels, and whenever she has dined out she has apologized for ordering oysters on the ground that it was worth giving a forty-cent order on the chance of finding a one-hundred-dollar pearl.

The husband yesterday had a splendid idea. He was dining with her at the Astor and he slipped round to the hotel in the afternoon. A waiter received a liberal tip, and a pretty, lustrous pearl, with the order to put it in one of the oysters he would serve. The dish was served, the lady spoke as usual of her hopes and swallowed the bivalve. The doctor watched with eager gaze, but nothing happened.

A very much exasperated physician told a friend about it in the lobby of the hotel half an hour later.

"Confound it all," he exclaimed, "that was the first time in her life that she failed to chew the oyster. Do you think I had better tell her?"

A FOOLISH TRICK

Young Frenchman Docked Horses Sending Hair to Toronto Dealers

BARRIE, March 5.—Special—Judge Vance yesterday gave twelve months in the Central Prison to Felix Juneau, a young Frenchman from Victoria Harbor. Juneau's offence was a most unusual one. He docked the tails of the horses that were left in sheds at Victoria Horbar, and sent the horse-hair thus acquired, it is alleged, to a dealer in Toronto. More than thirty horses were disfigured in this way. Juneau pleaded guilty, and said it was just a foolish trick.

W. V. WYMAN DEAD

Former Washington Secretary Native of Cornwall Ont.

WASHINGTON March 5—(Special.) Walter U. Wyman, Secretary of the Treasury under Presidents Grand and Arthur, died at his home here last night at the age of 82 years. He was a native of Cornwall, Canada, but came to this country as a youth and engaged in the newspaper business at Ogdensburg, N.Y.

RECAPTURE ADVANCE TRENCHES AND TAKE 150 OF ENEMY

(Canadian Press Special)

PARIS, March 5.—This afternoon's statement says: "To the north of Arras near Notre Dame de Lorette, we have recaptured most of the advance trenches we lost the day before yesterday. We took 150 prisoners.

The enemy again bombarded the Rheims Cathedral. In the Champagne district to the north of Souain, Mesnil and Beausejour there has been nothing fresh to report since yesterday evening's communication.

In the Argonne, at Vauquois, we have repulsed counter attacks and made new progress, inflicting appreciable losses upon the enemy and taking many prisoners. We are masters of the greater part of the village."

MOUNTED RIFLES DOCKED AT QUEENSTOWN YESTERDAY

"C" Squadron Which Left Toronto About Two Weeks Ago Cabled on Arrival That all are Safe and Well

"All safe; Well." This brief message was received at Toronto yesterday afternoon, signed "C" squadron, Canadian Mounted Rifles. It came in the form of a cable and reached the city at three minutes past twelve. It was filed in Queenstown yesterday morning at ten o'clock.

The cable is marked "Rush," and this was undoubtedly requested by the sender in his anxiety to get word to the relatives and friends in Toronto as quickly as possible.

There are about 120 men in the squadron, under the command of Major McColl. They left Toronto about two weeks ago, but slight mention was made of their departure. Very few beyond immediate friends knew that the boys were going, but the boys are apparently very anxious that anxiety relative to their trip should cease.

AUSTRIANS SUFFER TERRIBLE LOSSES

(Canadian Press Despatch)

LONDON, March 5.—Reports from various sources tell of terrible losses suffered by the Austrians in recent fighting with the Russians. A Reuter despatch from Petrograd says General Broussiloff's forces continue to repulse the desperate advances in the Carpathians, and officers taken prisoner declare their troops never suffered so severely. Some divisions are reported completely annihilated.

The Stamp Taxes

OTTAWA, March 4.—In the House of Commons, yesterday, Mr. MacDonald, of Picton, asked when the new stamp duties would go into effect. He was told by the Minister of Finance that a date could not be fixed until the bill was passed by Parliament, but that ample notice would be given to the public. It had been the practice to make new duties of customs effective at once because it was possible to enforce them from the date of delivery of the budget. The stamp duties on wines could also be enforced at once.

WANTS LASH USED ON WIFE-DESERTERS

Pitiful Appeal by Woman Who Has Been Left By Husband

TORONTO, March 4.—A pitiful letter was received by Mayor Church, today, signed "A Deserted Wife and Mother", in which an appeal is made for his Worship to use his influence in "having a law passed punishing with the lash men who desert their wives." It is easy for men to deceive unsuspecting girls, and then go off and leave them in trouble, says the writer, who concludes, "I am a deserted wife, and I know."

RUSSIAN FLEET IS STEAMING TOWARDS THE BOSPHORUS

(Canadian Press Special)

LONDON, March 5.—A despatch from Bucharest via Rome says the Russian fleet is steaming towards the Bosphorus and has passed Burgas in Bulgaria.

The crew of the U8, numbering twenty-nine, were landed at Dover today, and taken to Dover Castle under armed escort.

MANY U. S. OFFICERS WITH CANADIANS

OTTAWA, March 5.—(Special)—A return tabled in the Commons this afternoon by the Minister of Militia indicates that there are many ex-United States army officers serving with the Canadian Expeditionary Forces. Among those who have joined since the beginning of this year are Captain H. C. Eustis, late Lieutenant of the Ohio National State Guard, and now Captain of the 5th Regiment Canadian Mounted Rifles; Major Charles W. Stewart, now in charge of remounts en voyage to England from St. John, and late Lieutenant of the 5th Regiment, U. S. Cavalry, and Captain Herbert McBride, 31st Battalion, Kingston, and late Captain of the Indiana National State Guard.

BOLD ATTACK ON GERMAN TRENCHES BY CANADIAN TROOPS

(Canadian Press Special)

PARIS, March 5.—A Havas Agency despatch from Bethune says that on March 3rd a bold attack on the German trenches was made by the Canadian troops. The Canadians lost one killed and one wounded, and are said to have afflicted considerable loss on the Germans.

Soldiers Killed by Galt Street Car

Ptes. Wally of Galt and Galbagan of Dundas the Victims—Bodies Mutilated Beyond Recognition—Dragged Four Hundred Yards

GUELPH, March 5.—(Special)—To be literally ground to pieces under the wheels of a street car when returning from a trip to Preston and Galt was the fate that befell Privates Percy Wally of Galt and John Edward Galbagan of Dundas, both of the 31th Regiment of the third contingent, last night. Both enlisted at Galt. The two men were dragged under the wheels of a Waterloo avenue car for fully four hundred feet before being released. The bodies were removed in pieces from under the heavy trucks of the car. Both bodies were lodged against the bottom of the motor, and were dragged along until they finally threw the car off the track just at the intersection of Waterloo avenue and Edinboro' road.

TRIED TO CROSS TRACK.

Motorman Peter Hohenadel was driving one of the heavy cars on the 8 o'clock trip down Waterloo avenue, when he saw a cutter approaching on the wrong side of the road. Apparently the soldiers in it thought they could get across to the right side of the road before they met the street car, for, when they were only a few yards in front, they turned directly in front of the street car. There was an instant smash, and the motorman saw something like a robe fly out of the rig, the horse turning down a side street. The street car crew got out and picked up the robe, and noticed that the fender on the car was bent quite badly, so much so in fact, that they concluded to take it off, which they did, leaving it beside the road. The horse, in the meantime, had disappeared, along with the rig. The car was started up again to complete the trip to the end of the avenue, where the car barns are situated, the crew in ignorance of the fact that as they made the four hundred feet or more to Edinboro road the bodies of the two men were ground under the wheels of the car. When Edinboro road was reached the driver felt something go wrong, and the trucks left track. Upon getting out to make investigations, parts of the body and clothing of the two men were noticed, and then work was proceeded with in removing the mangled remains from underneath the trucks.

Privates Wally and Galbagan left Guelph yesterday morning about 10 o'clock, in a cutter from Ellis' livery stable. They telephoned Mr. Ellis later that they would be back in the city at about 6 o'clock.

It is only a few weeks ago since the radial railway put liability insurance on the general public. This is the first case that will be affected by it.

AIRMEN BOMBARDED POWDER FACTORY

LONDON, March 5.—(Special.)—A despatch from Stuttgart, received by Reuter's Telegram Company by way of Amsterdam, says that hostile airmen appeared yesterday over Rottwell, Wurtemburg, according to the report of the General in command, and dropped three bombs on a powder factory. Only slight damage was done, and the factory hands continued at work.

A statement issued by the French War Office to-day said that the bombardment on Wednesday by a French aviator of a German powder magazine at Rottweil had been successful, the magazine taking fire.

For her maiden voyage to Canada there are already many bookings.

FORTY TURKISH GUNS WRECKED BY ALLIES

Accurate Gunnery Cuts Advancing Turkish Reinforcements—No Confirmation of Report That Canadian Troops Are Among Those to Land on Straits for Land Operations

LONDON, March 5.—(Special.)—An announcement by the Admiralty given out late last night confirms unofficial reports of the continuation of the Dardanelles bombardment, and indicates that the Turks are rushing troops to the defence. It is announced that the protected cruiser Sapphire bombarded guns and troops on the Gulf of Adramytl, about fifty miles south of the entrance of the straits. This would suggest a movement of Turkish troops in that vicinity, probably on their way to the Dardanelles.

The French ships have also completed the work of wrecking the bridge of Kavack, over which troops from the north would pass on their way to the European shore of the straits. Thus it becomes obvious that the operations of the French fleet in the Gulf of Saros are intended primarily to prevent Turkish reinforcements from reaching the troops now beleaguered on the Gallipoli peninsula. At a point opposite Bulair, which was shelled again today the French ships can command the entire width of the neck leading to the peninsula proper.

There is no official confirmation of the report that Canadian troops are among those to land on the straits for land operations.

A PRIZE FOR SINKING SUBMARINE

LONDON, March 5.—Special—Another prize of £500 is offered to the next merchant vessel sinking a German submarine, the reward being promised by W. J. Tatem, a prominent Welsh shipowner.

Mr. Carossi, representative of Syren and Shipping, whose prize of £500 will probably go to Captain Bell of the steamer Thordis, in conversation with a Chronicle representative drew attention to the ancient act of Parliament which has an interesting bearing on modern piracy. This statute makes it compulsory for the master of a merchant vessel to resist any piratical attack to which he may be subjected. If he does not resist such attack he is debarred from commanding a British vessel, and if he thereupon improperly accepts a command he is liable to six months' imprisonment, also losing his certificate.

NURSE BURIED WITH MILITARY HONORS

GENEVA, March 5.—(Special.)—Mademoiselle Seiler, a girl of twenty-one years, who left her home in Paris at the beginning of the war to serve as a volunteer nurse, was buried with military honors at Belford, France on Tuesday.

Mademoiselle Seiler followed the French army through all the vicissitudes of the winter campaign in Alsace and a short time ago volunteered for service in a military hospital near Belfort, to which soldiers suffering from typhoid fever are sent. She contracted the disease, which caused her death.

Immediately after Mademoiselle Seiler's death an order was issued setting forth that a gold medal of honor had been granted in view of her services.

SUBMARINES GO TO THE BOTTOM

(Canadian Press Despatch)

LONDON, March 5.—Two German submarines have been sunk in British waters, according to official announcement in London to-day. Official news bureau confirms the report that the British Collier Thordis rammed a submarine and sent it to the bottom.

SNOW IN WEST AND SOUTH-WEST

(Canadian Press Special)

CHICAGO, March 5.—From four to seventeen inches of snow has fallen in Kansas, Missouri, Nebraska, Oklahoma and Arkansas. Railways in some parts are blocked and telephone and telegraph communication interrupted. The storm reached Chicago early to-day.

State-Owned Cable To Belt Dominions

LONDON, March 4.—A further volume of evidence—taken in London in June and July last—issued by Dominion Royal Commission, contains a memorandum submitted by the Empire Press Union regarding the proposed state-owned Atlantic cable and the transmission of newspapers between the United Kingdom and the dominions. It urges that the laying of a cable to complete the last link in the chain of telegraphic communication under the control of the British dominion governments is required by the highest necessities of the empire.

"As representing the press at home and in the dominions, the Empire Press Union submits that for the exchange between these dominions and the mother country of the fullest possible supply of news, it is only by means of an Atlantic cable under British control, and operated by the British and colonial governments, that the lowest rates compatible with a fair commercial return will be obtained, and the fullest supply of news facilitated. The landline facilities in Canada and the United States are now owned by private telegraph companies who are allied to the existing cable combines, but we are of opinion that the Canadian people would be strongly oposed to the boycotting of a state-owned cable.

"Further, the laying of the cable, and the fact that a British and colonial-owned line would connect our coasts would so develop the habit of rapid and constant telegraphic communication that we venture to think that even if the postmaster-general's prophecy that there would be deficit during the first year were realized, the loss would be quickly wiped out and turned to profit. At any rate, the cost would only work out a quarter to one-half of the Pacific state cable, which is regarded throughout the empire as a great imperial asset."

As to the transmission of newspapers, it is suggested that the rate between the mother country and any colony should be 1d per pound.

PTE. LANGFORD WOUNDED

OTTAWA, March 5.—Special—One casualty is announced in the Canadian Expeditionary Force:

OH, LOOK WHAT WE HAVE HERE

(The Chicago-Belleville News)

Fred E. and Bart V. Foster have under way plans for launching a large stock ranch near Palatine, Ill., on the main line of the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad—The Foster Brothers, have secured the title to a fine tract of high land just at the edge of the Cook County about fifty minutes by train, from Chicago. On their ranch, they will raise stock and poultry. The new place, which by the way bears the rather descriptive name of Overlook Ranch, is situated in the fertile Lake Zurich region, one of the best known dairying districts in the Middle West. In this vicinity also, are located the model farms of several of Chicago's most prominent gentlemen farmers, Mr. Samuel Insull, president of the Chicago Edison Co., has a model stock farm here, so has John R. Thompson, the nationally known caterer and several others—Mr. Bart V. Foster, will superintend the business and live on the ranch. Fred will continue the active management of his rapidly growing shoe business here, but will make the ranch a summer and fall residence. A beautifully kept automobile road connects Palatine with Chicago and the surrounding district, the run, at a moderate speed, consuming about one hour and fifteen minutes.

The order of the day appears to be, back to the land and when the Foster Brothers joined the growing group of city men, who are turning their eyes countrywards, they surely selected a garden spot, in which to start their recrudescence.

Greenland.

Greenland is governed by the Greenland commission at Copenhagen, Denmark. It was first settled by a band of Norsemen under Erik the Red, who gave it its name, in 985. A bishopric was founded there in the twelfth century by the king of Norway, and about 1260 it was constituted a state of Norway. There then followed a blank of 200 years in Greenland's history, due to climatic disasters, but beginning with the Danish settlement of 1721 the country has belonged to Denmark.

To Run the Gantlet.

The word "gantlet" in "to run the gantlet" is improperly used. The word should be "gantlope." Phillips in his "World of Words" tells us that "to run the gauntelope" is a punishment among soldiers, the offender having to run, with his back bared, through the whole regiment and to receive a lash from a switch from every soldier. It is derived from Gant (Ghent), a town of Flanders, where the punishment was invented, and the Dutch word lope, running.

WIRELESS MAN AT FALKLANDS TELLS OF GREAT VICTORY

Admiral Von Spee's Biggest Ships Made Straight for Marconi Station—Pandemonium in Either—When Sturdee Signalled the Scharnhorst and Gneisenau Had Been Sunk Wild Cheers Went up

LONDON, March. 4.—Some interesting points which do not appear in Admiral Sturdee's report of the Falkland Islands battle are given in a letter from W. A. Lacey, the wireless operator at the Marconi station at that outpost of the enemy. Lacey says:

"The Germans were well aware of the utility of the station, as a determined attempt was made to destroy it on December 7. This day must have been specially set apart by the meteorological diety in charge of the Falkland Islands weather, for contrary to our usial leaden skies and high winds, the day was perfect. Scarcely a ripple on the sea and the clear cut horizon were both helpful facts to our outposts in sighting the enemy and to our ships in the engagement which followed.

"At 7.30 a.m. smoke was sighted to the southward, which materialized into two enemy cruisers and later the smoke of three others was seen. The first two, Gneisenau and Nurnberg, headed straight for the station until they were about four miles off, when they presented their broadsides to us and trained their guns on the power house. Their movements were clearily visible through glasses. Orders were given to abandon the station—not from the Germans, but from our governor—which we did, retiring about 250 yards west, and taking shelter behind the rocks, whence we had a clear view of the proceedings.

"As soon as we were clear the guardship in Stanley Harbor let go two 12-inch shells at the foremost German cruiser, and considering that the enemy was not visible from the harbor, the shooting was admirable. The sells fell one just forward and just aft of the Gneisenau. The next two were better. One hit the water right abeam of the Gneisenau ricocheted and landed aboard. The firing was directed from the observatory.

"The enemy did not appear to like being shot at from an invisible battery which outranged their guns, and they turned southeast to get out of range without firing a single shot at us. A parting greeting landed alongside the Gneisenau, which was by this time stern. Survivors state that Admiral von Spree, who went down with his ship, was at a loss to know where those shells dropped from.

"Meanwhile our cruisers were forcing steam and put to sea before the Germans were lost to sight, the fast British cruisers preceding for scouting work. We re-occupied the station and started the engine for power, working without ships. Immediately we touched the key all the Germans touched their keys, making indescribable noises by altering their spark frequences rapidly. It has never been my lot to receive through such a jumble, and I trust never will be again. Our signalling continued without interruption despite their efforts.

"For about two hours pandemonium rained in the air. After all orders had been given by wireless, the working ceased until the Germans tried to work with each other and our fleet returned the compliment by jamming them, with what success we do not know. The Germans disappeared in a southeasterly direction with our cruisers in hot pursuit."

After some further details, which cover the ground of the official report, Lacey continues:

"At 3 p.m. Admiral Sturdee made a signal which would have warmod Nelson's heart, and one which should be recorded in the annals of the British Admiralty: 'God Save the King.' The signal was taken up and flung far and wide through space by each of the fleet in turn until it seemed as though it would never cease. I consider it a privilege to have been one of the few to hear the signal. Had the wireless been in vogue in Nelson's time, no doubt his memorable signal would have been marconied.

"Later the flagship signalled 'Scharnhorst and Gneisenau sunk. Where are the others?' Immediately the news was received a wild cheer went up from the small band gathered in the power house and we felt justified in drinking to the King."

Lacey further describes a visit to the British warships on their return. His testimony further disposes of the German claim that the Invincible was badly damaged. "One shell," he says, "struck the flagship's forward turret fairly between the guns leaving scarcely a visible dent in the armor. The superstructure of the flagship is perforated with shell splinters."

THIRD SON OF FAMILY IN WHICH RUNS THE FIGHTING STRAIN DIES FOR EMPIRE

Two of Seven Irish Brothers Fell on South African Veldt—Third Was Killed on H.M.S. Invincible, Two are Now Serving in North Sea Squadron—The Sixth in Montreal

The story of an Irish family in which runs the fighting strain, and which has given five sons to the Empire, is brought out by receipt of word that Signaller Frederick McKeown of H. M. S. Invincible, was one of the few British marines killed in the engagement off the Falklands.

Signaller McKeown was one of a family of fourteen, seven boys and seven girls. Two of the sons, John and Harry, laid down their lives on the veldt of South Africa; their names are on the Dublin Fusiliers' roll of honor. Two others are with the North Sea squadron—Richard, on the King Edward, and William, on the Iron Duke. A sixth son, Thomas, resides in Montreal at 39 Hutchinson street; he would be with the first contingent in France had the doctors not turned him down on the physical exmainations. The other brother of the seven died when but a child.

Nor does the record end here. The father, Bernard McKeown, was for several years one of the Irish Constabulary and later of the London Metropolitan Police Force; he was killed while on duty. The grandfather died in Limerick in 1893 at the age of 103; he was one of the survivors of the Balaclava charge.

Within The Military Circle

What is Transpiring Among the Soldier Boys at Belleville and Kingston.

BELLEVILLE

The Captains, Lieutenants and Non-commissioned officers of the 3rd contingent who have been taking a course of military instruction under Sergt. Dunkley at the drill shed at Port Hope, during the past five weeks, wrote on examinations in the public school Wednesday evening, March 3rd. Major Brown of Kingston, and Capt. Jones of Belleville presided. Major Brown appreciated very much the comfortable room allotted them and spoke very highly of our new public school building.

The Daily Mail of Fredericton, N.B., has the following item in reference to Capt. W. J. Osborne, who was formerly a captain in the 15th regiment here and was connected with the Ontario Business College in this city: Orders have also been received from Halifax to the effect that Capt. W. J. Osborne, 71st York Regt., will take command of the party of recruits enlisted here for the 40th Battalion, for the purpose of training. Capt. Osborne began training today, having a parade of the party at the Armory.

Lieut, Osborne, son of Capt. Osborne of Fredericton, N.B., formerly of this city, is attached to the 71st regiment of that city.

Members of the 15th regiment, who are enlisted as members of the 3rd oversea contingent, were yesterday provided with the necessary uniform, and last night occupied quarters at the Canning factory building.

Today regulation uniforms were being issued to members of the 49th regiment, who have enlisted.

KINGSTON

Out of a force of nearly 23,000 men enlisted for the second contingent all over Canada, only 950 have been rejected for various causes.

Two men have been transferred from the 14th Battalion to the 21st Battalion for overseas service, Privates Aiken and Carnell. Private Hodgins of the 14th has been transferred to the 39th Battalion.

It is said that at least eight new instructors will be placed on the staff of the R.S.A. if they can be secured. Most of the old instructors have gone overseas and men of ability to instruct in artillery work are very hard to secure.

The depot company of the 21st battalion had a most delightful dinner and program at the Hotel Frontenac Wednesday night. The chair was occupied by Lieut. Spriggs, who commands the company, and addresses were delivered by Lt.-Col. Hughes, Major Bennett, Major McLean, Capt. Kidd, Sergt. Savage and Private Cooke. The pipe band of the battalion furnished a number of selections, songs were sung by Piper Swallow, Sergt.-Major Harte, Q.M. S.S Scott, piccolo selection by Corpl. Kennedy, piano selection by Corpl. Grives, and a recitation by Private Ritchie. The dinner was all that could be desired and the depot men are pluming themselves and complimenting their officers over the event.

The old soldiers and officers around Tete du Pont barracks are very proud of the fact that three artillery officers have been promoted in England. Brig-Gen. Burstall, Major Constantine and Assistant Adjutant-General E. de Panet are all men who secured their training at Tete du Pont barracks.

The 21st Battalion has started to use the ranges at Barriefield again. Nos 2, 3 and 4 companies were at the ranges this morning, and Nos. 3 and 4 had dinner served at the butts. No. 2 company came in to the target in the armouries for the afternoon, and No. 1 company that fired in the armouries yesterday morning went to the ranges in the afternoon.

The new garage being built back of the riding school on Place de Armes, will be able to hold six cars when finished. Workmen are now putting the roof on the building. The stone garage will be used as a repair shop, and in future all repairs necessary to be made on cars will be made at the repair shop of the transport section.

"C" Battery, R.C.H.A., now has 21 of its new recruits in uniform. In a few more days the entire battery will be uniformed and completely equipped. The recruits are taking well to their drill and all the officers at Tete du Pont are pleased with the showing the men are making.

Rural Dean Greeggan was heard to say the other evening that the officer having in charge the enlistment of men for overseas service hoped to secure a full company of Mohawks. While Mr. Greeggan was a little doubtful of this, he nevertheless thought that about 25 Mohawk Indians would go with the third contingent from Belleville. Among others who have enlisted is Ira Claus, who is so well known around Deseronto.

FAST HOCKEY MATCH TO-NIGHT

This evening at the Arena should see one of the fastest and closest matches of the City League, when the Belleville Hardware, winners of Group No. 1, and the Midgets, winners of No. 2 group, meet in the first game to decide who will hold the cup for this year. The second game will be played on Monday night. Fast ice is assured tonight, and as there is great rivalry between these two team, a good game should be seen.

BELLEVILLE CURLERS WIN TWO GAMES FROM COBOURG

Friendly Games Which Proved Most Interesting — Visitors and Local Curlers Fraternize—Good Sport at the Rink

Yesterday four rinks representing the Cobourg Curling Club came to Belleville for the purpose of having a friendly game with similar rinks from the local club. Matches were played in the afternoon and also in the evening. The result was a win for the Belleville curlers in both games. In the afternoon the visitors went down by 9 shots and in the evening by 6 shots. During the afternoon the ice on some of the rinks was in a condition which was not conducive to good playing, as it was soft, but in the evening the four rinks were in good shape. It proved to be a most interesting event and was thoroughly enjoyed by all participants. The Cobourg players are a fine body of sports and took their defeat in a good-natured manner. On some of the rinks, both during the afternoon and evening matches there were many excellent plays made. The games proved to be two of the most pleasant which have been played upon the rink here this winter, and the result was especially pleasing to all members of the Belleville Curling Club. In the afternoon game the Belleville curlers' total score was 55 to 46 for their opponents, and in the evening Belleville scored 56 points to Cobourg's 50. Many interested spectators were present to witness the game, and a number of ladies lent their charming appearance. The visitors were royally entertained by the local club and returned home with the assurance that although they had been beaten it had proven to be a most enjoyable outing. The players and the scores upon the various rinks were as follows:

THE BOOTS INVESTIGATION

A contrast between the methods of the late Laurier Government and the present Conservative administration is shown by the manner in which the present government is handling the question of the boots supplied to the first contingent. In the days of the Liberal regime there was a continual fight against all inquiries. Time and again charges were formulated and inquiries were asked and through the use of the Liberal majority in the House were refused. In the Public Accounts Committee the "blockers' brigade," headed by Mr. F. B. Carvell and Mr. E. M. Macdonald, spent their time in sitting on the lid of the Liberal scandals.

What a refreshing contrast is the method of Sir Robert Borden. Even before any charges as to the quality of boots supplied were made in the House the Prime Minister announced that the government had decided to appoint a committee of the House to make an investigation and asked Sir Wilfrid Laurier to name three members of the committee. Instructions were given to the committee to make the fullest possible investigation. Mr. W. S. Middleboro, chairman of the committee, announced in opening the inquiry that the investigation would be of the fullest and most thorough possible character and that they would "hew to the line—let the chips fall where they may," and the investigation is in progress.

HAS FAITH IN THE ADMIRALTY

The Halifax Chronicle, a Liberal paper of the rabid type, recently gave space in its editorial columns to a statement issued by the British Navy League as follows:—

> "The recent destruction of British merchant ships by German submarines need not be regarded with any alarm by the public. The committee is satisfied that every possible precaution is being taken for the safety of the British interests at sea by the Admiralty, which is the body solely responsible. The League strongly deprecates any pressure being put upon the Admiralty that may tend in any way to interfere with the disposition of the fleet, and the League is entirely satisfied that the necessity for any such action has not arisen."

Is it not remarkable that the Chronicle should quote the above with approval under the heading, "CONFIDENCE IN THE ADMIRALTY"? It is only a few months ago since it was censuring the Admiralty for having the impertinence to suggest to the Canadian Government what measure of naval aid would be most acceptable. Vituperations were heaped upon Winston Churchill, the First Lord of the Admiralty. The famous memorandum upon which Sir Robert Borden founded his naval policy of "Immediate and effective aid," in the form of a gift of three dreadnoughts, "the best that science could build or money supply," has been borne out in every particular. Yet the contents of this memorandum was, in the estimation of the Hon. William Pugsley, nonsensical in the extreme and the Chronicle gleefully chuckled over Mr. Pugsley's statement. The political acrobatics of this maritime paper are anything but graceful.

SUGGESTS A "RAKE-OFF

"Who got the rake-off?" asks the Brockville Recorder in a recent issue. The article quotes a statement made by Hon. Wm. Pugsley a few days ago in the House of Commons, in which he insinuated that there was something suspicious about the purchase of the two submarines by the Canadian Government, the day before war was declared, for use on the Pacific coast.

The Recorder utterly ignores the fact that Mr. Pugsley's insinuations were entirely refuted by Sir Robert Borden. In fact, Mr. Pugsley had not the slightest shadow of evidence to produce to bolster up his charges.

In conjunction with other Liberal papers it has been appealing all along for a political "truce," yet has been one of the most outspoken violators of that which it has been advocating. Bitter partisanship has apparently deprived it of all sense of political propriety and decency. So long has it wallowed in the swill of the party flesh pots, now that this source of pap is cut off its sole object seems to be to embarrass and harass the present administration.

CURRENT COMMENT

Hamilton Herald: "What a nice time German travellers will have after the war when they undertake to "place their goods" in British countries and explain away the hymns of hate and the popular salutation, 'God punish England.'"

Montreal Mail: "Those who oppose vaccination on the basis of "personal liberty" ought to be interested in visiting Europe after this war. Many monuments are being raised in honor of this particular brand of "personal liberty"—in the grave-yards.

No bill in the case of those Canadian soldiers who fired at a boat on the Niagara river and killed a Buffalo man. But the family of the Buffalo man will probably make no protest, having had their grief softened by $10,000 presented by the Dominion Government.

When we read of "His Majesty's Loyal Opposition," and then listen to Grit orators whining about paying their share of the war burden, we are rather unpleasantly reminded that Shakespeare was very much to the point when he asked, "What's in a name"

London Times: "We, with Russia, France and our other Allies, are fighting to place the peace of the world beyond risk of future disturbance. The constant growth of mutual trust, to which the proceedings in the Duma, statesmen to England, bear witness, is the surest pledge that our object will be completely attained."

Mr. George H. Boivin, Liberal member for Shefford, Que., in a recent address to the members of the Montreal Canadian Club, paid Canada's sterling Premier the following compliment: "Sir Robert Borden has a difficult task, and he has arisen honorably to it. No one in Canada can say he has failed in doing his duty, nor can anyone feel ashamed of his utterances."

The Liberal party in opposition never tired of declaring that Protection was bondage. After they got into power in 1896 they elected to stay in bondage, and in fifteen years of their regime they reduced the tariff by three points, notwithstanding that the cost of living increased by 40 points. When Laurier today talks about reducing the tariff, he is two-faced without art, and a hypocrite without deceiving.

London Daily Mail: "To cross the desert at all, even by the shortest route and in small detachments, means an elaborate organization of camels and other transports for supplying the indispensable water. To cross it 90,000 strong, and with sufficient artillery, and at the end of the journey to attack and carry entrenched positions that have been prepared for months and that are defended by troops who are amply provided with food, water and weapons and are full of the best fighting spirit—this is an undertaking that only a miracle could bring to a successful issue. The fighting that has already taken place along the canal at Tussum, El Kantara and Ismailia is the prelude, we firmly believe, to a catastrophe unique even in the checkered history of the Ottoman Empire."

Allies Swindled In United States

Agent of One Government Is Investigating Graft in Army Contracts

NEW YORK, March 4.—Information was obtained to-day that at least one of the governments allied against Germany in the war had appointed a confidential agent to investigate rumors that had reached Europe to the effect that the Allies were being swindled in a vast majority of the purchases of war supplies made in the United States.

The confidential agent, whose name was given, was visited at his hotel by a reporter. After insisting that his name be withheld from publication because of the secrecy of the mission, he confirmed the report. He could not begin to estimate the total amount which graft in the buying of war supplies had aggregated during the seven months of the war, but declared that it ran into the millions.

"I have been conducting this investigation for more than three months," said the agent. "Some of the things I have found out would be amazing, but they will never be made public, unless in history. In one case, where an order was given for 100,000 pairs of shoes to be made of the strongest leather obtainable, the 'commissions' taken from the amount the government in question had to pay for the shoes amounted to 25 cents on each pair, or $25,000 on the entire order. An order for 150,000 pairs of shoes was placed in America when the first consignment had been delivered. The commissions were even higher on this order. But the government had to have shoes and have them quickly. Another order for 250,000 pairs was placed here, and the commissions were still higher.

"This will not sound so strange when the circumstances under which these goods are bought has been explained. Each of the Allies has hundreds—one of them over a thousand—military and other agents in this country to buy war supplies. The military agents know little of business, and many of them do not speak English. They deal with the American manufacturers through a most circuitous route. There are business representatives associated with the military agents, who deal with American agents representing, in some cases, brokers, who in turn place the orders with the manufacturers of the goods. Often there are even more hands through which the transactions must pass.

"The natural result is that the manufacturer, who must subtract so many commissions from the total he is to receive for his supposedly best grade goods, supplies goods of very inferior grade instead of the goods bargained for, thus allowing himself a large profit in spite of the commissions."

The agent explained the circumstances under which he was selected to investigate for his Government, and said that he was under the impression that other governments than his were secretly conducting similar investigations in the United States at the present time.

TEN THOUSAND BOERS ARE TAKEN PRISONERS

NEW YORK, March 4.—A news agency despatch from Capetown, South Africa, published here today says:

Ten thousand Boer rebels were taken prisoners during the recent rebellion against British authority in the totalled 1,000, Finance Minister Smuts announced in the Assembly today.

The rebels will be imprisoned until the end of the European war, the Government announced, owing to the impracticability of meting out adequate punishment at this time. The 293 ringleaders will be prosecuted at once.

President Wilson Severly Censured

America Will Never be Consulted as to Terms of Peace, Says Mr. Dancey

TORONTO, March 4.—At the Empire Club to-day, Mr. S. N. Dancey spoke on "Belgium's Heroic Resistance." Mr. Dancey has been in Brussels and Paris since the opening of the war and spoke eloquently of the deeds of the British army outside Paris.

A severe attack was made by the speaker on President Wilson for his failure to protest against the violation of The Hague Convention, for his birthday message to the Kaiser and for the protest against Britain's treatment of neutral shipping. "President Wilson has sacrificed the principles of humanity to the German vote," declared Mr. Dancey. "It is time the United States got a President who represents the great principles of the constitution. America will never be consulted as to the terms of peace."

The speaker declared that Germany was already practically beaten and that the war would be over in six months.

THE MOST FAMOUS WAR NOVEL OF MODERN TIMES, SHOWING GERMANY'S RUTHLESS HAND IN FRANCE, AUSTRIA AND DENMARK

The story contains some passages strangely prophetic of the present world struggle, although the final scene of the story is the Franco-Prussian War of 44 years ago. The hypocrisy of a nation adopting conscription and a policy of huge armaments and pretending to hope for peace is proven to the hilt.

Emden's Men Were Disorderly

Smashed up Things on Empress of Russia—German Way of Showing Appreciation

"They were given the run of the Russia, but the last day on board the men smashed everything in their rooms—that is the German way of showing appreciation.

In this sentence, Mr. A. E. Hankin, at present serving the Admiralty with the C.P.R. liner Empress of Russia, in the course of a particularly interesting letter just received describes the behavior of the German prisoners taken aboard the Russia after the Emden action. Operating as a British auxiliary cruiser the Russia was called alongside the Australian cruiser Sydney after Emden action and ordered to transfer the prisoners, wounded and unwounded to Colombo, Ceylon.

"We came up with the Sydney about 100 miles south of the line and transferred all her prisoners and about 30 wounded—among them being Captain Muller and Prince Joseph," Mr. Hankin observes and then adds a word about the smashing of the things. He continues: "We did everything possible for their comfort while we had them on board, even giving them our own clothes. They were in an awful plight, especially the wounded. When those shells burst on deck, they just cooked them. The German captain was certainly a slave-driver, as far as his crew was concerned, the entire crew, except the officers, being about all in, they have been at sea since leaving Tsing Tau. They knew it was only a question of time before they would be captured. If the shells of the Emden had been any good, it would have made a difference. Her first three shells were the only ones that exploded. Lots of Germans were drowned trying to swim ashore, and the sharks got their share. I counted six sharks following our work-boat when we were transferring the wounded. On our way back o Colombo' we overtook and passed 36 transports with troops from Australia. Every one of them was notified by wireless that there was to be no cheering when the Sydney and the Russia passed them. We arrived in Colombo at daybreak on Sunday and the following morning the transports began to steam inside the breakwater. Russia had one big battle ship, the Askold. We had the Hampshire, Minotaur and Minto; France had the Duplex and the Japanese the Ibuki, which was also convoying the troops. It was a wonderful sight, something a man will only see once in a lifetime."

Accompanied by the other C.P.R. liner, Empress of Asia, the Empress of Russia, after landing her prisoners at Colombo, patrolled the Red Sea, explains Mr. Hankin in his letter. "We captured three islands and lighthouses in the Red Sea from the Turks, took some prisoners and put our own men ashore, he observes. Hindus were subsequently transferred from Perim. The Arabs are causing a lot of trouble out here. They have been running stores and supplies into Turkish ports. We captured nine of them, took the crews prisoners, also supplies aboard and sunk their dhows. We overhauled one last week loaded with women and children slaves. We took the slaves aboard and also crew and put a shot through the dhow. All were landed at Aden.

We left Hong Kong in August with our eight guns all 4's and our naval crew. We went direct to Singapore and then back to Manila, where the Asia, Japan, Himalaya and torpedo destroyer Ribble maintained a blockade of that port. There were fifteen German boats tied up there trying to sneak out with coal and provisions, but we managed to keep them in. We were off Luzon one day doing scout duty and "smoked" a large ship and went after her. She was the S.S. Marks, German, and she just managed to get inside the limit and dropped anchor in a small bay about fifteen miles from the entrance of the harbor. We lay off waiting for her but luck was against us, as she kept within the three miles limit and sneaked in along the coast."

TELLS OF ATTACK ON SUBMARINE IN THE IRISH SEA

German Announcement Enables Chronicle to Print Correspondent's Report U-21 Met Armored Yacht—Was Acting as Patrol Ship and Belief is that Some of the Shots Took Effect

LONDON, March 4.—In reference to the announcement of the German Legation at The Hague that the German submarine U-21 was fired upon by a British steam yacht, the Daily Chronicle is now permitted to publish a despatch which its Southampton correspondent sent it on February 17. The incident occurred on the Fishguard to Rosslare route, when the U-21 was pursuing her destructive policy in the Irish Sea.

The vessel which fired at the submarine was formerly a private steam yacht, but has been a patrol ship since the outbreak of the war. Her commander one morning received a report that a submarine had been seen on the route between Fishguard and Rosslare.

The captain proceeded towards the point indicated and suddenly sighted the submarine some four thousand yards away. Those on the patrol ship declare it was the U-21.

The ship was, of course, armed, a fact which those on board the submarine apparently did not realize. The patrol ship opened fire on the submarine with her two eight-pound guns, and five rounds secured a perfect range. In all, nine rounds were fired, and some of the patrol ships then made for port. The Chronicle's informant, who was a member of the patrol ship's party, was unable to state postively that any of the shots from the ship took effect, but the prevailing opinion among the crew was that the submarine had been severely damaged.

Tolstoi left home to get away from his wife. And there are a lot of others who have the desire, but lack the nerve to do it.

"Nerviline" Stops Earache In 10 Seconds
Fixes Toothache In 2 Minutes

IT SEEMS TO POSSESS ALMOST SOME DIVINE POWER OVER PAIN.

RUB ON NERVILINE

Toothache is usually due to neuralgia in the gums or to the congestion and swelling of the nerve pulp.

As "Nerviline" relieves congestion, you can easily see why it cures toothache.

Nerviline does more—cures any ache or pain—in any part of the body.

It matters not where your pain is. It may be in a joint or muscle; it may be neuralgia or lumbago; it may be a surface pain is deeply situated in the back, side or chest. Nerviline will reach it; Nerviline will drive it out.

What is Nerviline, you ask? Just a liniment, but very much stronger in pain-subduing power than other liniments—one that penetrates more deeply in the tissue than any other liniment. It is a liniment that cures quickly, that gives permanent relief.

You might spend ten or a hundred dollars, but you couldn't buy as much relief as you get from a single bottle of Nerviline.

We guarantee Nerviline; we refund your money if it does not relieve you.

In many lands it is a household trust, a remedy that has justified itself under the experience of those who have used it. Guaranteed for neuralgia, sciatica, lumbago, rheumatism, pleurisy, strains or sprains; the large 50 cent family size bottle is more economical than the 25 cent trial size. Dealers everywhere sell Nerviline, or direct from The Catarrhozone Co., Kingston, Canada.

CHAPTER I.

At seventeen I was a very highly-strung girl. I should hardly realize this to-day, if it were not for the diaries so carefully laid away. In them I find again my long-lost enthusiasms, thoughts, and feelings now utterly forgotten, convictions of which now not a vestige remains, and sympathies which have long been dead and buried. I catch a glimpse of the emptiness and silliness which filled my pretty little head. But, as I painfully learn from my mirror, of the prettiness little trace is left, although the old portraits assure me that it once existed.

I can imagine what an envied little creature the Countess Martha Althaus must have been, pretty, popular, and petted. These quaint little red diaries, however, recorded more of sadness than of joy in her life. I think now, "How could I have been so silly not to realize how singularly blessed I was with privileges?" Perhaps I was only expressing an unbalanced sentimentality, and I tried to express it in somewhat poetic prose. Imagine my discontent when I wrote:—

"O Joan of Arc! heroic, heavenly virgin! If only I too might have waved the oriflamme of France, crowned my king, and died for my fatherland!"

Alas! this modest ambition was never gratified.

Again, I longed to be torn in the arena by lions like the Christian martyrs. But the heroics were not for me. I must frankly admit that my life was a commonplace failure, and the glories for which my soul thirsted were for ever closed to me

Often the little red book exclaimed, "Oh that I had been born a boy!" Then I should have been able to win fame. But feminine heroes are few. How seldom we have Gracchi for sons, and not often may we hope to carry our husbands on our backs through the Weinsberg Gates, or to be a queen and hear the sabre-swinging Magyars shout, "Long live Maria Theresa, our King!" A man need only gird on the sword and dash to fame and laurels, to capture a throne like Cromwell, or a world-empire like Napoleon.

My highest type of manhood was always a military hero. I had slight respect for mere poets, scholars, and discoverers. The heroes of many battles were the object of my adoration and devotion. Were they not the chief pillars of the state, the makers of history, the builders of empires? Did they not tower in Godlike grandeur over all other heroes, as did the Alps and Himalayas over mere grass and valley flowers?

From all this it need not be concluded that I possessed an heroic nature. My enthusiasms and passions naturally took their bent from my education and environment. My father was an Austrian General, who had fought under "Father Radetzky" at Custozza, and therefore adored him. I listened untiringly to the unending stories of this campaign. My dear father actually pitied other men who had not had these proud and glorious experiences, and I always regretted that I, being a girl, would never have these magnificent opportunities; and, having heard some mention of the question of the equal rights of women, I felt sure that the only additional right I should ever keenly desire would be the right to go to war. How charmed I was with the story of Semiramis or Catherine II. when I read: "She made war upon this or that neighboring kingdom, or she conquered this or that people."

The history books are responsible for this warlike ideal of the young. That the God of Battles has constantly decreed wars stamps itself upon the mind from the first, and one early accepts the belief that war is necessary to regulate nations, and is almost a law of nature, like tornadoes and earthquakes, which from time to time cannot be avoided. History does not cover up the wickedness, the sorrow, the anguish of it all, but presents it as a part of the inevitable, bringing advantage to the nation, through the sacrifice of the happiness and life of the few. That there is no nobler death than that of the soldier martyr is the clear and unanimous verdict of all our school histories and texts. Long lists of battles are given, and entrancing tales and poems of glory and heroism are told, for must not patriotism be taught, must not every boy grow to be a defender of his country? So he must be made a war-enthusiast early. His spirit must be hardened long before he questions through his natural sympathies why we inflict these horrors and sufferings upon others. Such doubts must be carefully repressed.

History as it is taught aims to warp the inborn, divine impulse to hate barbarism and inhumanity. The tale is so told as to belittle that part of the story which appeals to the sympathies.

And the same books, the same subjects, the same system, encouraging a like admiration for war and military heroics, are given to the girls—delightful pictures for the tender souls, who otherwise are taught that they must be gentle and mild. The frightful stories of carnage and rapine from Bible days, from Macedonian and Punic times down to the Thirty Years' War and Napoleon, repeat the horrors of the thing until the senses become callous. To read of cities burned and the people put to the sword with the victims trodden under foot was a keen enjoyment, and to heap one horror upon the other blunted the perceptions till war no longer could be regarded from the point of view of humanity, but was received as something quite special, mysterious, majestic, and sanctified.

The girls could readily see that war alone could give the highest honor and dignity, so they learn all the military and glorifying odes, and they become, like the Spartan mothers of old, the women who present battle-flags and regimental colors, and are the admired and happy belles during the ball season, when they receive the attentions of the brass-buttoned officers' corps.

As a child I had tutors and a governess at home, and was not reared in a convent, as was often the case with children of my position. My mother had died early, and the four children were watched over by an elderly aunt. We spent our winters in Vienna, and our summers on the estate in Lower Austria. Having a good memory and being ambitious, I was the delight of my teachers. Since I was denied the career of an heroic female warrior, I made it my enthusiasm to extol all who had helped to make the world's history through war. I mastered the French and English languages perfectly. I learned all that was considered necessary for girls in natural history, physics, and astronomy, but in the reading of history I knew no limit. The ponderous records of wars and nations I fetched from my father's library and spent with them my leisure hours.

On March 10, 1857, I celebrated my seventeenth birthday. "Already seventeen," I set down under this date. This "already" was a bit of symbolism, and undoubtedly was meant to signify "and as yet I have done nothing immortal."

The Season was approaching, and it was arranged that I should be introduced into society, but the prospect did not fill me with the keenest pleasure. I felt that my aims were higher than ballroom conquests. I could not have explained to myself what were the triumphs for which I longed. I was hardly aware of the romantic attitude which possessed me. I was full of glowing dreams and aspirations, such as swell the hearts of youths and maidens, and fill them with a longing to work out their ideals in all sorts of ways. It is at this age that the love of knowledge, action, travel, adventure, show themselves, and are perhaps only an unrecognized activity of the soul filled with desire to express itself.

Aunt Marie was ordered to try the waters at Marienbad during the summer, and found it convenient to take me. My coming-out in society was not to take place till the following winter, and this trip to the fashionable springs gave me a little preliminary practice in dancing and conversation, so that I could wear off some of the shyness before my first season.

Naturally at my first ball I had no eyes for anything but the brilliant military uniforms which were present in such array. But of all the splendid Hussars, Count Arno Dotzky was the most dazzling, and with him I danced the cotillion and several waltzes.

The acquaintance quickly ripened into an attachment, and we were betrothed on my eighteenth birthday, after which I was presented at court.

CHAPTER II.

After our marriage we took an Italian journey, having been granted a long leave of absence. Retirement from the army was never mentioned between us. We both possessed handsome fortunes, but my husband loved the military services, and I was proud of my elegant Hussar, and looked forward to his certain promotion. He would rise unquestionably to the rank of major, colonel, or even general. Who knew but he might be even called to the highest rank, and add his name to the history of his country, great as a conqueror!

The little red book contains a break just at the happy honeymoon time, and that is a pity. Oh for a little breath of those happy days to come back to me from between the leaves, in which I had wasted so much ink recording odd peevishnesses and bad humors Still, my memory recalls those joys like an old half-forgotten fairy-tale. What could have been added to my overflowing heart?—for I had love, riches, rank, health, everything. My dashing Hussar, whom I loved with my whole soul, was a manly, noble-hearted man, with a most cultivated and merry nature. It might have been otherwise, for our acquaintance had been so short, and it was not our own discretion and wise choosing which brought us all this happiness. But the little red-bound book bore no entry for a long time.

Wait a moment! Here I find a joyous event noted—my delight at becoming a mother. A New Year's gift—a son was born to us, the 1st of January, 1859. The diary was resumed to note with pride and astonishment this all-absorbing event, as though we were the first to whom such a happiness had ever come. The journal teemed with comments on the mystical and sacred event. The future world had to be informed as to the marvel of "maternal love." It was mine to magnify the office of motherhood. Was it not the greatest theme of art and literature, of song and story?

I cultivated this ideal most carefully, collecting poems, baby songs, and illustrations from journals and picture galleries. As in one direction school books foster and develop an admiration for war heroes, so through my collections I developed from hero-worship to baby-worship. My charming little man was to me the mightiest wonder of the world. Ah, my son, my grown-up manly Rudolf, the love of you in my maturer years eclipsed in color the hours of childish wonder and worship. The love of my young motherhood is insignificant in comparison to what I feel for you to-day, even as is the babe himself in swaddlings beside the full-grown man.

How proud the father was of his tiny heir, as he planned for him the sunniest, fairest future. "What shall he be?" This was the great question that we discussed as we hung over the cradle together, and we always decided unanimously—a soldier, of course. Sometimes the mother would protest: "Suppose he should be killed in battle?" "Nonsense," the father would answer; "at the appointed time each one meets his end." Besides, Ruru was not to be the only son, but being the first he must be what his father and grandfather were, the noblest of all—a soldier. So it was settled, and so the joke was persisted in, and on his third-month birthday he was promoted to the rank of a corporal.

On that same day a great foreboding came over me, something that made me fly with a heavy heart to my little note-book. Dark clouds had arisen in the political horizon, and the fears and suspicions were daily growing into comments wherever people met together.

"Trouble in Italy is brewing" was the frequent remark. I had no time now for heroics and politics, so it hardly touched me. But on the 1st of April Arno said to me:

"Do you know, darling, it will soon break out?"

"What will break out?"

"The war with Sardinia."

I was terrified. "My God, that will be terrible. And must you go?"

"I hope so."

"How can you say that? Hope to leave your wife and baby?"

"When duty calls."

"Of course we can reconcile ourselves—but to hope—which means desire—to wish for such a bitter duty—"

"Bitter? Why, a jolly, dashing war like that would be glorious! You are a soldier's wife, never forget that."

I threw myself into his arms.

"Oh my darling husband, I can be content, and brave besides. How often I have envied the heroes of history and longed to be one of its heroines. What a glorious feeling it must be to go into battle! If I could only be at your side, fight, conquer, or even fall!"

"Such nonsense, little wife; but brave you are. Your place is here by the cradle of our little one, whom you must raise to be some day a defender of his country. Women must keep the fireside warm. It is to save our homes and wives from the attacks of the enemy and secure peace, that we men must go to war."

Why, I do not know, but these words, or similar ones which I had so often read with enthusiasm, this time struck me as mere shallow phrases. Where was the advancing army—were the barbarous hordes at the door? A political tension between the Cabinets of two nations seemed an intangible enemy. What was the pressing need of protecting wife and child and home? Much as my husband spoke enthusiastically of going to war for that, I failed to see it. Was it a mere burning desire to rush into adventure, with a promise of excitement, promotion, and distinction? "Yet," I concluded, "it is a noble, honorable ambition to delight in the brave discharge of duty."

I poured out my feelings into the little note-book, denouncing Louis Napoleon as an intriguer. . . Austria cannot long look on. . . War must come. . . No, Sardinia will soon give in, and peace be maintained. Thus I commented on the course of events. My husband's eyes sparkled at the continued increase of the danger.

My father also gloried in the prospect, and retold the stories of the Radetzky campaigns, and discussed the impending ones, as to how the enemy would be easily routed, and all the advantages which would be "ours." Of the terrible sacrifices nothing was said. I was made to feel quite ashamed of my meanness when I found myself thinking thus: "Ah, how can any victory recompense the dead, the crippled, the widowed? How would it be if the enemy conquered?"

I was contemptuously crushed by my military friends if I ventured such a remark. Was it not most unpatriotic to have the shadow of a doubt about our certain victory? Is not the duty of a soldier to feel himself invincible, and must not a soldier's wife share this conviction with him?

My husband's regiment was quartered in Vienna. The view of the Prater from my window promised a wonderful spring. The air was warm and delicious with violets, the sprouting buds seemed earlier than in years before. How joyfully I might have looked forward to the coming weeks of delightful driving, for we had purchased a fine carriage and a four-in-hand team of dashing Hungarian horses—but oh, if only the war-clouds had not hung over all that!

Coming home from a parade on the morning of April 19, my husband broke the spell with the exclamation: "Thank God, at last this uncertainty is at an end. The ultimatum has been sent."

"And what does that mean?" I trembled.

"It means that the last word of the diplomats has been uttered—the last word that precedes the declaration of war. Sardinia is called to disarm. This she'll not do, and we will march over the border."

"Good God! Perhaps she may disarm."

"Then that would end the quarrel."

I fell on my knees. Silently and fervently a prayer cried out in my soul: "Peace, peace!"

"My silly child, what are you doing?" said Arno, raising me. The news had shaken my nerves, and I began to cry.

"Martha, Martha, you make me angry. How can you forget that you are a general's daughter, a first lieutenant's wife, and," he concluded with a smile, "the mother of a corporal?"

"No, no," I faltered, "I scarcely understand myself. . . I used to thirst for military glory, but now, when I think that on a single 'yes' or 'no' thousands may bleed and die—die in these beautiful days of spring—it came over me that the word 'Peace' must be pronounced, that we must all pray for it, and I fell on my knees."

"To inform the good Lord of the condition of affairs, you dear little goose."

The house-door bell rang. I dried my eyes. My father came in with a rush. "My children," he cried out of breath, "have you heard the great news—the ultimatum?"

"I have just told it to my wife."

"Tell me, father dear," I asked anxiously, "can the war be prevented by the ultimatum?"

"I never heard of an ultimatum preventing a war."

WERNER HORN FACES FURTHER ACCUSATIONS

BOSTON, March 4.—Three indictments charging the illegal transportation of dynamite in inter-state commerce were returned to the federal grand against Werner Horn, who attempted to destroy the international railway ridge at Vanceboro, Maine, on February 2, Federal Attorney Anderson announced yesterday

The maximum penalty for the offense is eighteen months imprisonment and a fine of $2,000.

A copy of the indictments was sent to the United States Marshal at Portland, Maine, with instructions that Horn be arrested on Saturday on his release from the jail at Machias, where he is serving a sentence of thirty days for damaging property at Vanceboro.

The indictments charge illegal transportation of sixty pounds of dynamite from New York to Boston over the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad; from Boston to Vanceboro over the Boston and Maine and Maine Central Railroads, and carrying of dynamite in a suit-case without notifying the officials of the railroads involved.

It is expected that action on the Canadian government's request for the extradition of Horn will be delayed as a result of the grand jury's report. In the opinion of the federal attorneys, the claims of the United States must be satisfied before extradition can be considered. The offense alleged in the indictments committed prior to the attempt on the international bridge and it is understood that there will be no hearing on the Canadian request until final disposition of the indictments has been made.

Letters of Appreciaton For H.S. Elevator

Napanee, March 2, 1915
Mr. P. C. MacLaurin,
Head Master, Belleville High School
Belleville, Ont.

My Dear Sir,—

I enclose herewith money order for 50c for which I wish you would kindly send me two copies of "The Elevator" for February, 1915. I understand from Dr. C. C. James that this is a war number and he says it is exceptionally good.

Thanking you for attending to this for me, I remain,

Yours very respectfully,
CLARENCE M. WARNER

(Dr. C. C. James was formerly Deputy Minister of Agriculture.)

Belleville, March 1, 1915

My dear Mr. Irwin,—

I have been delighted with the February number of "The Elevator." It is a most valuable addition to Belleville literature. I have nothing to advertise as I am not in general practice but Mr. Boyle who is in my office has placed an ad. in your columns. Have you a subscription price for the Elevator? If you have, I should be glad to subscribe. I might write you an article about early school days in Belleville which might prove interesting in some subsequent issue. I appreciate the great labor and pains you have taken in such a very interesting and charming magazine.

I am very sincerely yours
JOHN J. B. FLINT

Ontario Historical Society, Napanee, Ont. March 4, 1915.
Mr. P. C. MacLaurin,
Belleville High School,
Belleville, Ont.

Dear Sir,—

I was very much pleased with the two copies of "The Elevator" which arrived this morning and I enclose herewith $1.00, for which I wish you would kindly send me four more copies.

It would be a good thing if your example were copied extensively by other schools in Ontario. The copies I am getting will travel to distant points and go to form a part of at least three very valuable historical collections.

Thanking you for your attention in this matter, I remain.

Yours faithfully
CLARENCE M. WARNER

Pleasant Birthday Surprise Party

An unique birthday surprise party was held on Tuesday, March 2, at the home, of Mr. and Mrs. David Palmer, 8th Concession of Thurlow, when the young ladies class of Zion Hill Sunday School asembled at their teacher's home, Mrs. Palmer, for the purpose of celebrating Mrs. Palmer's birthday. After the young invaders had a little frolic, an address was read by their Sec.-Treas., Miss Minnie Ketcheson, and Miss Neva Sills presented Mrs. Palmer with a beautiful berry spoon.

The remainder of the evening was very pleasantly spent with parlor games, music, singing and social intercourse. The address was as following:

Dear Mrs. Palmer.—

We, the members of your Sunday School class, have assembled here tonight, on this, your birthday for the purpose of expressing our love for you, and while spending a social evening together, we felt that we would not let so great a privilege pass, without showing some tangible evidence of the appreviation for which we feel for your untiring efforts in our behalf.

We all realize that you are deeply interested in our class, and anxiously striving to uproot the seeds of evil, and plant in their stead seeds that will spring forth into life everlasting.

We wish to thank you for all your efforts in our behalf. We understand what a sacrifice it is for you to teach our class. We girls, have been careless in many ways, but you have always endured all our mistakes with such wonderful patience, and, although we have been negligent in living up to your teaching, we received a spiritual blessing and our lives have been drawn nearer to our Savior.

You have always been so patient and faithful to us, as our teacher, explaining the lesson so faithfully. We know it must have taken a great deal of time and study on your part. Perhaps, at times you may have been discouraged, but in the future, we girls will endeavor to do our best to help you in our class.

We hope you will remain as our teacher for a long time to come. And so, Mrs. Palmer, we ask you to accept this little gift, a berry spoon, not for its intrinsic value, but as a token of our esteem and love for you. We trust that we may profit by the truths so often impressed upon us, and we pray that each one may be an earnest worker, in the Master's vineyard. Signed on behalf of the class.

President—Miss Bessie W. Sills
Sec.-Treas.—Miss M. Ketcheson.

Mr. Palmer and other contributed to the musical programme. The party broke up at a late hour, all voting it one of the most enjoyable evenings spent.

HOW A DEEP SEATED COUGH

And Sore Lungs Were Overcome by Vinol—Mr. Hillman's Statement of Facts Follows:

Camden, N. J.—"I had a deep seated cough, a run-down system and my lungs were awfully weak and sore. I am an electrician by occupation and my cough kept me awake nights so I thought at times I would have to give up. I tried everything everybody suggested and had taken so much medicine I was disgusted.

"One evening I read about Vinol and decided to give it a trial. Soon I noticed an improvement. I kept on taking it and today I am a well man. The soreness is all gone from my lungs, I do not have any cough and have gained fifteen pounds in weight and I am telling my friends that Vinol did it." — FRANK HILLMAN, Camden, N. J.

It is the curative, tissue-building influence of cods' livers aided by the blood-making, strength creating properties of tonic iron, contained in Vinol, that made it so successful in Mr. Hillman's case.

We ask every person in this vicinity suffering from weak lungs, chronic coughs, or a run-down condition of the system to try a bottle of Vinol on our guarantee to return your money if it fails to help you.

A Mountain Fight

Greatest World Has Ever Seen Is Staged In Carpathians

LONDON, March 4.—Writing from Budapest, the Hungarian correspondent of the Morning Post says:

"From the Carpathian fighting, as it was termed, a great Carpathian battle developed. The battle lasted a long time because the terrain is impassible. Masses cannot march, run, or surround each other, and the battle is fighting of small units—sometimes companies, and seldom battalions, which confront one another in bloody encounters in small confined places. In fact, it is 'brow against brow.'

"That is the reason why on the centre the fighting developed into a fierce hand-to-hand battle. In the west, on the Donajec and Biala line, and also beyond the Dukla, entrenched artillery and infantry are carrying on the struggle. In the east, where the hostile forces can leave the mountainous regions, strategy can, as it were, breathe more freely both in the regions of Nadvorna and Kolomea; but between the east and west, in the centre, the most terrific in mountain battles the world has ever seen or heard of is proceeding among the snow-bound precipices and unexplored woods around Dukla and in Biharo. The snow is so deep that dead men remain standing. The snow would not allow them to fall, they having stood in it up to the waist.

"North of Nadvorna and northwest of Kolomea new battles have developed and are still going on, for the resistance of the Russian forces attacking, and every now and then make fierce bayonet charges. The possession of Kolomea is exceedingly important, it being a railway centre."

The Women of the World Choose

Gossard CORSETS

They Lace in Front

And the reason for their choice is completely described in the sentence which follows:

"Figure improvement means health, and health always means beauty. The Gossard Corset which laces in front assures an immediate figure improvement with its attendant joys—health, beauty & comfort."

At this store, corsets receive more than the usual attention because our experience proves to us that corsets are the foundation of style. They help make the suit, gown and dress. At this time, when many women are questioning much of the style news, published, we believe the

of Authoritative Corset Styles for Spring 1915

issued by The H. W. Gossard Co. through this store is of the most vital interest. During the next two weeks the new Spring models will be shown in our corset department, and we promise to corset you in the model, material and design of your liking at $2.00, $3.50, $5.00, up to $25.00. A fitting or visit to our department does not obligate you. We welcome your visit.

EXPLORING FAR NORTH TO FIND IDEAL SPOT

Hunters' Paradise Described in Old Book Aroused Interest of Canadian Geologist

In an endeavor to throw more light on a subject which Samuel Hearne only partially developed after his Canadian Arctic exploration trip of 1771, Mr. Charles Camsell, geologist of the Canadian Department of Geology undertook a trip to that broad territory northwest of Fort Churchill seeking particulars of territory heretofore unexplored by the modern white man, excepting, of course, Hearne. The latter passed over the district lightly in his book published in 1795 in London, England, in the account of his three inland trips from Fort Churchill, then the Hudson Bay Company post, Fort Prince of Wales.

At the time of Hearne's journeys, which preceded the successful trips of Sir Alexander McKenzie by a few years, Northern and, in fact, Western Canada was to a great many a barren area of unpeopled and unfertile waste. One hundred and fifty years have almost rolled by and still a vast part of that land is undiscovered and mapped only in vague lines.

But the curiosity of Charles Camsell was piqued by Hearne's reference to one piece of territory which he but faintly outlined.

To use Hearne's own words from his book, "Great numbers of deer throng to these forests, where they thrive. Wild ducks, geese, swan, and a remarkable specie of partridge as large as an English fowl are said to abound in these domains. The Indians also told us of fine fish in the clear streams that net the territory. "In fact," wrote Hearne, "I have not seen or heard of any part of this country which seems to possess half the advantages requisite for a residence that are ascribed to this little spot."

Hearne did not visit this place, as it was several hundreds of miles out of his course, and his statements are based on the assertions of various tribes of Indians met, which, the explorer stated, he thoroughly believed. Mr. J. B. Tyrell, who edited Hearne's book, in a footnote stated that it is his belief that the situation of this spot is on the banks of the Thelon River, a northern waterway emptying into Hudson's Bay. The source of the Thelon River has never been mapped and the location of this spot which Hearne spoke so highly of will not be known until Mr. Camsell's report is made.

It is believed to be situated midway between the mouth of the Coppermine River at th Arctic Ocean, Fort Chipewyan on Lake Athabasca, and Fort Churchill.

First Woman to Pay Alimony

MRS. G. DEIMER

Wealthy Mrs. George Deimer, former wife of an oil operator and contractor of Lima, Ohio, is said to be the first woman in the world to pay alimony. Her husband alleged that she was too intimate with a man whom she employed as a business agent, and she sued him for divorce. Deimer filed a counter-suit for alimony. The court gave him the divorce and the alimony, in the sum of $3,000, also. The divorced wife was given custody of their two children.

SCHOOLS FOR FARMERS HELP PATRIOTISM AND PRODUCTION

The Grand Trunk Pacific authorities report that the various Provincial Governments in Western Canada are co-operating in a very enthusiastic manner with the Federal Government's "Patriotism and Production" campaign.

The Government of the Province of Alberta is lending practical assistance to the better farming movement by enlaring scope of agricultural instruction. During the week ending February 20th, a school was held at Tofield, Alta. at which lectures and demonstrations were continuously given without charge.

A special train of eight cars of live stock were handled over the Grand Trunk Pacific to Tofield for the purpose of demonstrating the good points of different classes of animals.

At the first session of the school there were from one hundred and fifty to two hundred farmers present, and increased during the week. At night when lectures were held in the Town Hall, the building was crowded and not all who wished could gain admission.

LEGISLATORS INSPECT CANADA'S NEWEST RAILWAY—THE PACIFIC GREAT EASTERN.

A party composed of members of the British Columbia Legislature, including three Cabinet Ministers, has just made an inspection trip over the first completed section of the Pacific Great Eastern Railway, which is to connect Vancouver with the Grand Trunk Pacific's main Transcontinental Line at Prince George, B.C.

The piece of line traversed was from Squamish to Lillooet, 120 miles being covered by the special train. For more than 30 miles the railway skirts the shores of Anderson and Smeaton Lakes, noble mountains being in view for nearly the whole distance. There are several picturesque Indian villages, while the waters are well stocked with trout and salmon.

While the Pacific Great Eastern is opening up a fine fishing and hunting country, this will be by no means its chief usefulness. There are fine forests of merchantable timber and fertile valleys suitable for the farmer and the rancher, particularly in the districts known as the Central and Northern Cariboo. Local accommodation trains are to be run during the present year, and the Chief Engineer, Mr. J. Callaghan, states that by the spring of 1916 the line will be completed and ready for the operation of through trains from tidewater at Vancouver to the thriving little city of Prince George on the Grand Trunk Pacific.

Premier Asquith pays a high tribute to the work of the Princess Pats. Weil, may he do so. They are a credit to Canada and to themselves.

SALVATION ARMY GIVES 11,000 MEN TO THE WAR

Has Dozen Red Cross Motor Ambulances Manned by Own Forces—Generously Supports Patriotic Funds—Experts Offer Services

LONDON, March 4.—The British Salvation Army has given ten thousand of its men to the British Army. These men are either at the front or in training. In addition, the Salvationists' social institutes have trained a thousand men who on presenting themselves were unfit, physically and morally, for military life, but are now up to standard.

One Salvationist officer has four sons with the colors and a daughter on Red Cross duty at the front. This daughter is herself a Salvationist Captain. She is only one of the many Salvationists workings with the hospital corps at the front. A dozen motor ambulances are manned entirely from drivers to attendants with members. The first five of these ambulances were purchased out of a fund of $12,500 raised by Salvationists, in addition to the sum of nearly $20,000 for the Prince of Wales Fund. So effecient has been the management of the Salvation Ambulances that one of the men was entrusted to the command of a complete ambulance section of 21 cars belonging to the regular corps.

COMPLIMENTARY BANQUET TENDERED 49TH OFFICERS

Lieut.-Col W. G. Ketcheson Proves An Admiral Host at Spread in Hotel Quinte — Spirited Addresses by Military Men, Members of Parliament, Senators and Private Residents—21st and 39th Officers Among Guests

It was a thoughtful and most generous act on the part of Col. W. G. Ketcheson, the popular commanding officer of the 49th Hastings Regiment, when at Hotel Quinte last night he tendered a complimentary banquet to seven officers of his regiment who have volunteered as members of the second and third overseas contingents. Two officers, namely Capt. J. H. Mills and Lieut. A. P. Miller, are in the second contingent, and those on the honor roll of the 3rd contingent are Major A. E. Bywater, Capt. R. Vandervoort, Capt. J. L. McLean, Lieut. H. B. McConnell, Lieut. G. E. G. Craig, and Lieut. W. W. Wallace. All were present and occupied seats together at the head of the table..

The affair was in every respect most pleasing. Nearly every officer of the 49th Regiment, from all parts of the county, was present in uniform, as were also many others who are identified with the militia, including Col. D. T. R. Hemming of Kingston, District Officer Commanding the Third Division.

Col. Ketcheson occupied the chair, and associated with him at the head of the table were Sir Mackenzie Bowell, Col. Hemming, Mr. E. G. Porter, K. C., M.P., Mr. J. W. Johnson, M.P.P., and others.

The spread provided by mine host Mr. J. V. Jenkins, was all that could have been desired, and it was faultlessly served. It is needless to state that all did justice to the fine spread provided. The menu was as follows:—

MENU.
Oyster Cocktail.
Queen Olives. Celery.
Cream of Tomatoes.
Filet of Halibut, au Vin Blanc.
Sliced Cucumbers. Pommes Anna
Sweetbreads, a la Toulouse.
Saratoga Chips.
Young Stuffed Turkey.
Cranberry Sauce.
Mashed Potatoes. Asparagus
Black Duck, Currant Jelly.
Fried Hominy.
Steamed English Plum Pudding.
Brandy Sauce
Neapolitan Ice Cream. Assorted Cakes
Mixed Fruit. Cheese.
Cafe Noir.

Whilst supper was being partaken of an inspiring programme of music was furnished by the Sills Orchestra. The selections were much enjoyed.

At the conclusion of the repast the first toast proposed was that of "The King." The National Anthem was sung by the company.

The chairman then read the following telegrams and letters from persons who had been invited but were unable to be present:

356 Maclaren Street,
Ottawa, 3rd March, 1915.

Dear Colonel Ketcheson,—

I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your card inviting me to be present at a complimentary Banquet tendered by yourself to the Officers of the 49th Battalion Overseas Contingent at the Quinte Hotel on the evening of the 5th instant, and for which pray accept my most grateful thanks. It may safely be considered that anything held in the interest of the old 49th Hastings Rifles can always command my sincere sympathy, respect, and endorsation. I must certainly congratulate you, first, upon the 49th being represented so well upon the Overseas Contingent, and secondly, upon your possessing the spirit and energy required to honor your old brother officers by entertaining them in the manner you are doing. Under the circumstances I can well understand the deep interest and sympathy that all old members of the 49th will surely feel upon the occasion, and it only serves to make me regret all the more that circumstances at the moment are not over favorable for my going up to Belleville for the occasion. In other words, not only the pressure of work at the moment would prevent my getting away at this time, but also the additional fact that for some days I have been treating a deep-seated cold, which, while it does not tie me to the house, nevertheless it prevents me from even thinking of leaving home under the prevailing conditions. You will, I presume, be honored with the presence of our highly esteemed and very worthy Honorary Colonel, whose past record, both Civil and Military, renders him an object lesson for the rising generations; also of Lt.-Col. Hambly, another most worthy type of the old 49th, both of whom it has been my great privilege to have served under, and I assure you it was a privilege. Give my kindest remembrances to all my old brothers-in-arms, and wishing you a most successful and delightful reunion, believe me to remain for Auld Lang Syne.

Very truly yours,
COL. E. HARRISON.
Lt. Col. W. G. Ketcheson,
49th Battalion.

Belleville, 2-3-15.

Dear Colonel Ketcheson,—

Replying to your very kind invitation, I should be glad and very proud to attend the complimentary Banquet of the 5th inst., but am very sorry to say that I find myself unable to do so.

Please accept assurance of continued loyalty to the 49th Batt., and every best and sincere wish touching the interests of its quota to the Overseas Contingent.

Wishing you a pleasant evening and congratulating you most heartily on the splendor of your work as O. C. of the 49th.

I am, sincerely,
P. H. HAMBLY, Lt. Col. R
Lt. Col. Ketcheson, City.

Ottawa, March 4, 1915.

My Dear Colonel,—

I have delayed answering your kind invitation for to-morrow night as I hoped to be able to be present but was afraid something might happen here. The enclosed, which only came today, will explain my absence. An ordinary committee meeting would not detain me, for every day we have such meetings, which many do not attend. This particular committee sat all last session to revise the Election Law prior to a general election. We did not complete our labors and have been reappointed. A Bill to give votes to all the soldiers on active service has been introduced in the House and referred to us, and comes up to-morrow. As we expect the session to be short I could not ask a postponement of the meeting, and as there are only six members outside the Minister of Justice, who is chairman, I can not miss it. Envying you the pleasure of the evening and hoping that when the cruel war is over we may be able to welcome ALL our gallant friends back.

Yours truly,
W. B. NORTHRUP

TWO HITS EVERY TIME

LONDON, March 5.—Discussing the fall in London flour prices, a Mark Lane merchant said to the Daily News in reply to a question yesterday: "Every shot fired in the Dardanelles is a shot fired into the Chicago wheat pit. This is shown by the fact that during the Dardanelles' operations wheat prices came down from $1.63 1-2 per bushel to $1.54.

"It is a question whether American speculators, despite their efforts to keep prices up, are worrying much for now they must have made their pile.

"The absurd rumor, which has been officially denied, that the British Government had made large purchases of Argentine wheat, had, in my opinion, its origin in Chicago."

FLEW BRITISH FLAG ALL THE WAY OVER

(Canadian Press Special)

LONDON, March 6.—The Lusitania, which arrived at Liverpool last night, flew the British flag all the way over.

EARL OF CADOGAN DEAD

(Canadian Press Special)

LONDON, March 6.—The fifth Earl of Cadogan, former Cabinet Minister and Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, is dead.

POLICY OF GREECE TOWARD WAR SAID TO BE EAGERLY AWAITED

(Canadian Press Special)

PARIS, Mar. 6.—A despatch from Tenedos says that the Dardanelles have been cleared of mines from one-third their length, and the warships continue a steady bombardment of forts on the European side.

A despatch from Saloniki says that Bulgaria has mobilized three divisions, possibly to be used for an advance on Adrianople.

A despatch from Athens says decision of Council in session describing the policy of Greece towards the war is eagerly waited. If the decision is to remain neutral it is expected that Premier Kenizelos will immediately resign.

Dr. Robinson to Resume Practice

Friends at Kingston Pleased at Acquital, and He May Return to Tamworth

KINGSTON, March 6.—Special—Dr. Clifford K. Robinson is spending a few days here at his home. His plans for his future have not yet been arranged, but he stated to a newspaper representative that he might return to Tamworth and resume his practice. It was not generally known that he came to Kingston after the trial, and when he appeared on the streets yesterday his friends were given a great surprise. He had a busy time receiving congratulations.

It was stated that the jury had decided on the acquittal of the young physician at the time the jury was called back by the judge, and that a vote for acquittal had been recorded, but that the signatures of the jurors had not been secured.

Belgian Influx Quite Unlikely

Their Government is Opposed to Emigration—Military Question Caused Some Trouble

OTTAWA, March 5.—Sir Robert Borden intimated in reply to a question by Mr. Verville in the Commons that the Belgian government was strongly opposed to any movement for the emigration of Belgians. From time to time opinions have been expressed that the Canadian government should facilitate the bringing of a number of those people to this country.

Mr. G. W. Kyle was informed that J. H. McClellan, who was strongly criticised in the report of the investigation in the Trent Valley Canal scandal, was not now superintendent of that canal.

The Hudson Bay Railway, stated Mr. Cochrane, has cost to date $4,188,879. Of this $2,344,891 has been spent on the railway proper, and the rest on the Port Nelson terminals.

Hon. Charles Murphy has a question on the order paper regarding the saddles ordered by the militia department. It was to have been answered orally by General Hughes, but in view of its length he suggested that it should stand as an order for a return, and he handed it over to the clerk.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier pointed out that it should have been answered orally, and appealed to the Speaker, who supported the contention.

General Hughes sat silent, and the Premier explained that it was usual to have lengthy questions answered as a return.

Both sides were obdurate, and the question was allowed to stand. General Hughes got back the answer which he had handed to the clerk.

STEAMSHIP AFIRE ON HIGH SEAS

(Canadian Press Special)

LONDON, Mar. 6.—The Steamship La Touraine is on fire in latitude 48.06, longitude 20.14. A message from the wireless station at Valentia, Ireland, stated that the Steamers Rotterdam, Cornishman, Arabic, and others were going to her assistance.

NEW YORK, Mar. 6.—Maritime circles have received advices that the passengers and crew of La Touraine are safe. She has aboard thirty-eight first class passengers, including five doctors and ten nurses on their way to join the new war hospital at Sens, in France and forty-six in the steerage. The ship carried several thousand cases of ammunition.

LONDON, Mar. 6.—A message from Queenstown says: "The fire on the La Touraine is fierce." The London office of the steamer is without special information.

TURKS ABANDON EGYPT RECALL ALL TROOPS

LONDON, March 6.—Special—Turkey is reported to have abandoned the Egyptian campaign.

The report, which comes from Constantinople by way of Petrograd, is to the effect that a high Turkish council of war was called to consider the situation growing out of the bombardment of the Dardanelles. At this council it was decided to recall all the troops which have been sent against Egypt and to abstain from further operations in that quarter.

Prorogation By Easter Likely

Government Orders to Have Precedence for Remainder of Session

OTTAWA, March 6—Special—Upon motion of the prime minister, the house this afternoon gave precedence to government orders for the balance of the session after next Monday. This confirms the general impression that parliament may be prorogued by Easter.

Mr. Wilcox, Conservative member for North Essex, resumed the budget debate. In the course of his speech he eulogized the minister of militia for his excellent work.

"He is not perfect," Mr. Wilcox admitted, "but then not one of us is. If we were, we would not be at home in this chamber."

LEAVE IN A BODY

(Canadian Press Special)

WASHINGTON, March 6.—The foreign diplomatic corps in Mexico City has decided to leave in a body. Despatches telling of the decision were received here today by European diplomatists, and forwarded to their home governments.

3,000 Grain Cars Tied Up

Shipowners Hesitate to Let Ships Leave New York

NEW YORK, March 5—The unwillingness of the shipowners to risk their crafts in the war zone has resulted in a tie-up at the West Shore Railroad yards at Weehawken of 3,000 cars, mostly loaded with wheat. Two grain elevators holding about 400 000 bushels, are filled. Only one shipment has been made during the past fortnight, a Norwegian steamer having sailed with 180,000 bushels of wheat and other grain.

Before the German decree was issued, grain and wheat reaching the yards were forwarded quickly, many of the shipments being consigned to Russian ports. Shipowners of late have hesitated in making deliveries, however.

Thirty Miners Found Alive

(Canadian Press Special)

HINSTON, W. Va., Mar. 6.—Thirty miners were found alive, but in a weakened condition in Layland Mine, where an explosion occurred Tuesday. The rescue work is now being hastened with the hope that more living men will be found.

ALLIES MAKE GREAT STROKE IN ATTACKING THE DARDANELLES

(Canadian Press Special)

LONDON, March 6.—A Daily Express despatch from Amsterdam says Berlin is uneasy over the belief that two submarines have been lost. German naval authorities do not admit the loss, but warn the public that the enemy cannot be smashed without ships being lost. The people of the German capital are represented as being in a rage over the attitude of Greece, and the newspapers sadly admit the Allies have made a great stroke in attacking the Dardanelles.

DEATH CHAIR HORROR OVERCOMES OSBORNE

Warden is "Stricken Man" Asserts Witness at Albany Hearing—Attack on Death Penalty—Last Plea for Law's Repeal of Three Murderers Executed at Sing Sing Made Public

ALBANY, March 5.—Dr. A. S. Crapsey, parole officer of the First District, at a legislative hearing yesterday said:

"Warden Thomas Mott Osborne is a stricken man. The horror of putting to death human beings at Sing Sing has so seared his soul that if he continues Warden and has to continue to order executions, his death is only a matter of a short time."

The hearing was given by the Senate and Assembly Codes Committees on Assemblyman John J. Ryan's bill to abolish capital punishment. Warden Osborne had left the room a few minutes before Dr Crapsey began to speak.

"You saw how he looked here today," continued Dr. Crapsey. "I want you who knew him to remember what he looked like a few months ago. He himself has told me how the awfulness of his job has blighted him. He is a gentleman. He is not like the other Wardens of Sing Sing—hardened men. He represents the high type of citizenship, and he is able to appreciate what capital punishment means. If it is as a deterrent from crime that you wish to keep capital punishment, put the electric chair out in the public square, where all may see its terror."

Warden Osborne was one of the early speakers before the legislators in favor of the bill. He pleaded with the legislators to "remove this stain of sin from the State." He told of a fruitless appeal he made to Gov. Whitman last week for a respite for Robert Kane, Oscar Vogt, and Vincenzo Campanelli, who were put to death on Friday, and he read from an appeal to the people of the State of New York for the abolition of capital punishment written by the condemned men on the eve of their execution. In part his appeal was as follows:

"The three undersigned men doomed to die in the early morning of Feb. [illegible] in the death chamber of Sing Sing make this appeal from the brink of the grave. Are you, as members of this Commonwealth, justified in taking human life because we did? Did two wrongs ever make a right?

"There is not one of us who would not willingly die if it would restore to life those who died by our hands. Owing to our acts remorse, sorrow, ignominy, and shame have been our companions by day and through the long, sleepless nights.

"If we believed that our slaughter would act as a deterrent to future murders we would willingly render up our lives to society, if it would erase from human nature the causes which tended to our crime. Can you recall a single instance in all your life where the horror of the death penalty stayed the hand of a murderer? We know we never gave it a thought

"Murder is mostly the result of two great human passions, that of uncontrollable passions, that of uncontrollable and insane jealously, or a devouring anger roused by the demon drink, both of which so blur the human mind for the instant as to make the person temporarily insane. Jealously and anger roused by drink were the cause of the tragedies in which we three men were involved.

After reading the letter Warden Osborne continued:

"I cannot even at the risk of violating official proprieties keep silent. I must voice my protest as a citizen and beg of you to assist in removing the stain of sin from the State—the sin of violating the clear and explicit command of God: 'Thou shalt not kill.'"

Rabbi Jacob Goldstein, Chaplain of the Tombs, said that many men who went to death were innocent. "It is my belief," he said, "that every man who commits a murder is insane."

Dean George W. Kirchwey, of the Columbia Law School, pointed out that less than 2 per cent. of murderers were put to death and he argued that the repeal of the capital punishment law would mean the sentencing of more murderers because now juries often were beset by the fear of killing an innocent man.

"If this law is passed," he said, "the unwritten law plea will never be heard again in our courts of justice."

Miss Madeline Doty, a lawyer, in making her point that the death penalty was no deterrent, told of a man she knew in Auburn who said that as soon as he got out he was going to "kill a man and ride the death chair." She refused to tell the prisoner's name.

Advocates of the abolition of capital punishment were asked by Senator Newton if they would favor a plan to allow the trial jury to specify the penalty of life imprisonment or death. The reply was that they would accept this compromise if they could get no better bill through the Legislature of 1915.

ROMANCE IN ARREST OF A CONVICT COUPLE

Mr. and Mrs. D.A. Ralston Accused of Stealing Mrs. Ballington Booth's Jewelry — Their Neighbors Amazed— Alleged Theft at Farm Colony Enabled Them to Start Life Anew on Staten Island

NEW YORK, March 5.—When Mr. and Mrs. David A. Ralston took a little house at 431 Richmond Terrace, West New Brighton, S.I., a little more than a year ago, their neighbors quickly made friends with them. They liked Ralston, who was nearly 60 years old, and they liked his wife, a good-looking woman nearly twenty years his junior.

Ralston was not in business but soon became agent for Mrs. John M Pendleton of 49 Pendleton Place, Tompkinsville, who is wealthy and owns much real estate. He proved himself a general handy man and soon was collecting her rents, attending to repairs, and generally relieving her of all the routine work connected with her realty holdings.

Mrs. Pendleton, as well as the friendly neighbors of the Ralstons, were amazed and incredulous at first when they heard last night how Detectives Murphy and Brenick had met Mr. and Mrs. Ralston as they alighted at South Ferry from a Staten Island ferryboat early in the evening and arrested them on warrants issued on Sept. 11, 1913. The couple were charged with the theft of $300 worth of jewels from Mrs. Ballington Booth while they were inmates of her colony, Brookhaven Farm, for the reformation of ex-convicts.

Ralston and his wife were taken to Police Headquarters. There the records showed, according to the police that Ralson, whose pictures is in the Rogues' Galley, was sent to Sing Sing in September, 1907, as a baggage thief. Mrs. Ralston was identified by the detectives as Valley Bernhart, whose picture also is in the gallery, and who was sent to Auburn Prison in April, 1911, for a jewel theft.

According to the detectives, Mrs. Ballington Booth got Mrs. Ralston paroled in her custody some years ago and took her to the farm. Ralston was already there working as a farm hand. The two were attracted to each other, and there were prospects of a little romance on the farm, when they disappeared. At the same time Mrs. Booth discovered that her jewels were missing. Justice of the Peace L. V. Green issued warrants for the man and woman, but the police got no trace of them until last week.

The detectives said the couple apparently used only so much of the jewelry as enabled them to marry and make a home on Staten Island till Ralston could get work, for a gold necklace was found in their home with some smaller trinklets. The detectives thought Ralston and his wife had lived honestly after they left the farm, and that their last theft apparently was committed soley so they might marry.

U. S. Efforts Aid Germany at Allies Expense

Says London Morning Post in Editorial Comments on Recent Notes

LONDON, March 5.—The Morning Post, in an editorial on the American and German notes, says:

"We do not doubt that America made these proposals with the best, most straightforward intentions; but, unfortunately, they have the effect of helping Germany at the expense of the Allies, for they embody precisely the bargain which Germany proposed to strike when she declared her so-called submarine blockade.

"We have both the power and the right to blockade Germany. Germany, not having the power, has not the right to blockade us. Therefore, for us to bargain away something within our rights and power, for something not within Germany's power or right, would be a poor sort of a bargain. America, indeed, feels conscious that she is asking Germany to abandon something to which Germany has no legal claim, for the note is reported to end thus 'American Government would rather regard such an agreement as a modus vivendi, which is based more on suitableness than on legal right.

"But our British Government has scorned to bargain even indirectly with the enemy. It would, indeed, be a foul unworthy thing for us to bargain with a nation for security for our trade when that nation has destroyed the commercial life of Belgium, and of industrial North France, and is maintaining a ruthless blockade in the Baltic and Black Sea. We must be faithful to our friends, and even if the bargain was tempting—and it is not tempting—it would be a mean piece of treachery to conclude any such arrangements without security at the expense of strengthening the enemy. If America were fighting in the war in alliance with other nations, how would she regard a proposition which would give her some of the benefits of peace while it would make the enemy stronger to fight upon land, not only against herself, but against her Allies?

"We conceive ourselves to be quite able to deal with German submarines, Zeppelins, and all other bogey in the enemy's charming collection, not by way of swap, barter or exchange, but by the use of other means less pacific, but more in accord with self-reliance. And we put it to the United States once more that the Allies in fighting this war, are fighting the cause of the United States and of all neutral nations, which are threatened by a Germany which seeks world empire by breach of treaties and by destruction of harmless unmilitary states. A victorious Germany means a threatened America, and against such a threat the Monroe Doctrine would be no more effective as a defense than her neutrality was to Belgium or The Hague conventions to Rheims or to Scarborough.

"There is one question which we would ask the Americans to put to themselves once more. Are the Allies right or are they wrong in this war? We know what the American reply has been. We have heard it many times. Then, if the Allies are right, they ask no favor from the United States, but expect to be allowed to use their weapons, one of which is sea-power, unfettered by intervention, which, however well meaning, has the effect of succoring and strengthening the enemy."

CONTINUOUS SUCCESSES

(Canadian Press Special)

PETROGRAD, March 6.—An official communication received in Petrograd from the Russian army in the Causcasus, dated March fourth, says the Russian troops are continuing with the same success in their offensive operations in the vicinity of the Tchoruk River, in Turkish Armenia, southwest of Batum.

ENORNMOUS GERMAN LOSSES

(Canadian Press Special)

PARIS, March .—The Official Press Bureau declares that the German losses since the beginning of hostilities in killed, wounded, sick, and prisoners, reached the enormous total of 3,000,000 men. This calculation is based on the known casualties in ten German regiments.

ALLIES' WELL-DIRECTED FIRE CAUSED PANIC AMID ENEMY

(Canadian Press Special)

PARIS, March 6.—This afternoon's official statement: "Some what lively artillery actions occurred around Nieuport and Ypres. From the Lys to the Aisne there was intermittent cannonade.

In Champagne our progress yesterday in a ravine northwest of Beause Jour caused the Germans last night to undertake a fresh counter attack, which we repulsed. All our advances in the region of Perthes reported in yesterday evening's communication have been maintained. Near Vieville-en-haye, northwest of Pont-a-Mousson a well directed fire upon a farm caused a panic among the soldiers occupying it. They fled to the woods, pursued by our shells. Near the forest of Norroy, whole bodies of Germans unsuccessfully attempted attacks on our outposts.

Great Gain By Allies on West

French Take Mitrailleuse company North of Arras and a Prussian Guard in Perthes

PARIS, March 6.—(Special.)—The following official communique was issued last night:

"In Belgium, in the region of the dunes, we have solidly organized the advanced trench taken yesterday. The Germans attempted to push their trenches into contact with ours, but twelve times our fire dispersed them.

"North of Arras our counter-attacks in the region of Notre Dame de Lorette have been crowned with complete success. Thursday evening we took a mitrailleuse company.

"Today when the Germans undertook a fresh attack we repulsed them and drove them back beyond the starting point. We recaptured advance positions which had been in their possession for two days and made numerous prisoners.

"Rheims was bombarded throughout the day. In Champagne, in the region of Perthes, we have made decided progress. Thursday evening a company of the Prussian Guard found itself surrounded in our lines. It remains in our hands despite a relief attempt. Today we regained ground along the entire front. We carried a trench northwest of Perthes and occupied the salient north of Perthes, making several prisoners.

"We have taken 600 yards of trenches on a depth of 200 yards beyond the crest northeast of Mesnil, several trenches in the ravine northeast of Beausejour.

"The prisoners admit that the losses of the enemy have been extremely high. The morale of our troops is excellent.

"In the Argonne we have made important progress in the western part of the village of Vauquois. German attacks in La Pretre woods have been easily repulsed. In the region of Baronviller our attacks have brought us into immediate contact with the enemy's wire entanglements. We have repulsed a counter-attack here.

"In Alsace, at Hartmanns-Weller-kopf we have taken some trenches and a small fort and captured two mitrailleuses."

DEATH ENDS LONG AND USEFUL LIFE

TORONTO, March 5.—Rev. Peter O'Donoghue, one of the best-known priests in Toronto died at St. Michael's Hospital in his 70th year. He had been sick for some time. Deceased was born in Ireland, and came to Canada about 40 years ago. He was connected at different periods with parishes in Owen Sound, and the Holy Rosary Church and St. Basil's Church in this city. In recent years the priest was conected with St. Basil's Novitiate. The funeral will be held on Saturday morning from St. Basil's Church to Mount Hope Cemetery.

While the crusade against tuberculosis is doing pretty well, the efforts to discourage war have had no success at all worth mentioning.

Mnnicipal Debentures Are Safe

For the reason that interest and principal are paid from taxes collected by the Municipality from the property owners as their share of the expenses in connection with the public work for which the debentures are issued. As long as the property owner will make these payments rather than give up his property the debenture obligations of the Municipality are met.

KINGSTON

A medical board will assemble in Kingston, to enquire into the physical condition of some members of the 21st battalion. The board will be composed of Captain Gardiner, Captain Sparks, Lieut. Richardson. The date will be fixed by the president of the board.

The orderly officer of the 14th guard has to report every morning at the office before six o'clock. As there is no provision for securing breakfast around the orderly room or office, it makes it necessary for the officer to rise with the sun in order to be on hand according to orders and regulations. Lieut. Stagg was the orderly officer this morning.

Authority has now given and published in divisional orders for the establishment of the 26th, C.F.A. Battery at Kingston, and the 25th, Ottawa, with headquarters and ammunition column at Ottawa. Recruiting will begin at once. The officers to command these new units have not yet been mentioned. All officers are to report to divisional headquarters weekly the number of men secured.

The 26th Batter, Canadian Expeditionary Force, to be mobilized here, will be quartered in old Regiopolis College. Twenty recruits of C. Battery, Royal Canadian Horse Artillery, have been transferred to it.

Sick Headaches Permanently Cured

DR. WILLIAMS' PINK PILLS CORRECT THE CAUSE OF THIS TROUBLE.

There are few ailments that cause more genuine misery in the home than attacks which are generally termed sick headaches. The attacks are often periodical and when the mother of a family is prostrated at intervals there it not only her own suffering to consider, but the discomfort caused the other members of the household. Sick headaches arise from a variety of causes, and most of them can be relieved or cured through the tonic treatment with Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. Mrs. Hugh Docherty, Rocaville, Sask., says: "I suffered for years with what the doctors called nervous prostration and sick headache. When these spells came on I could not work nor walk, and the pains in the head were almost unbearable. At times the pain in my head was so dreadful that I feared it would drive me mad. I tried four different doctors at time, and not only took bottles of medicine, but quarts of it, but to no avail. Then I quit taking medicine altogether and tried dieting, but it made no difference I was still an agonizing sufferer. Finally my husband urged me to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and got me a supply. After taking the Pills for some weeks I felt a little better and I gladly continued their use My nerves began to feel stronger, the terrible headache came with less frequency, and after taking the Pills for some months disappeared altogether. From that day to this I have had no return of the trouble, and all who knew of my illness regarded my cure as marvellous. I cannot say too much in praise of the Pills as they certainly saved me from a life of almost constant agony."

It is by building up and enriching the blood and strengthening the nerves that Dr. Williams' Pink Pills work seemingly marvellous cures, and what they have done for others they will do for all ailing people if given a fair trial. If you do not find these Pills at your medicine dealers you can get them by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

LOYALTY TO LADY SENDS HIM TO JAIL

Belle River Man Refuses to Compromise Girl He Was With

WINDSOR, Ont., March 5.—Harry Spinks, of Belle River, appeared in Police Court here to-day on a charge of breaking into a summer cottage on Lake Erie, and his loyalty to a girl he claimed he was with may cost him a term in prison. He said he and the girl were sitting on the doorstep when they heard some one coming and he fled, advising the girl to remain. Several shots were fired after him, but he escaped by swimming the Belle River. Two of the shots struck him, one on the ear and the other in the hand.

Magistrate Leggatt asked him who the girl was to make his story hold together and Spinks refused to tell. The owner said nothing had been taken from the house.

"I'll go to jail before I will tell the girl's name," said Spinks. He was convicted and remanded eight days for sentence.

Now they're having aeroplane funerals. Most people however, will prefer their remains to be taken cemetery-ward in the old-fashioned way.

Most of the mysterious things are fairly easy of explanation, but the little man's desire to dance with large women has never been cleared up.

SPORTING NEWS

HARDWARES SIX, MIDGETS FOUR

Expectations in hockey circles were fully realized at the Arena last night when Belleville Hardware and Midgets met in the first of the final games to decide who should hold the Y.M.C.A. Cup for the present year and title themselves City Champions, and it is doubtful if any of the O.H.A. games played here this season were any better exhibitions of hockey.

Sharp to time Bunnie Frechette got the boys going, who by the way were out at full strength, and after about ten minutes' play Hitchon put the Hardware contingent one ahead by drawing first blood; this stirred up the vim in both teams, the 'ware supporters yelling their boys to "get some more" while we hear "they can't do it" from the opposition gallery. Play was of an up and down nature, until the curtain dropped for Act. No. 1, with the score 3-1 in favor of Hardware.

No. 2 opened up, with brilliant team and individual rushes on both sides and it looked as if the Midgets could not possibly see defeat, while the Hardware cry was: "We're out for the Championship." In this period the Midgets were only able to find the nets once, while the Opposition increased their lead to three majors. Thus the second act concludes with the score standing 5-2 for the Hardware.

Round No. 3 sees the best hockey of the season, and it was plain to be seen that the Midgets were not the least disheartened by the lead they had to pull down, and went after the puck as if it were one of the enemy.

The Hardware were to all appearances not yet sure of their victory and still kept up the pressure. Midgets now notched two goals in quick succession, reducing the lead to one, and we see the Hardware working tooth and nail to hold their own. After a few minutes strenuous play they were amply rewarded by finding the net. This brought to an end a good clean game of hockey, giving the Hardware a carry forward of two goals to Monday night's game.

The players on both teams worked for all they were worth, and it would be difficult to single out any particular one for special mention, but the play of "Kid" Whalen, of junior fame was something marvellous, and the managements of the Belleville teams must congratulate themselves on having brought out this star. Smith, in Midget's goal, semed a little off his game last night, and were it not for one or two errors, the final result might have been different. Line-up of teams:

Hardware—Goal, Phillips; defence, Flagler and N. Goyer; rover, Symons, centre, Hitchon; wings, T. Whalen and F. Goyer.

Rounds Out Twenty Years

Local Business Man Observes The Twentieth Anniversary of a Successful Career

The Intelligencer notes with pleasure the rounding out of a successful twenty-year career as a Belleville business man in the person of Mr. D. V. Sinclair, whose anniversary sale appears on another page. Mr. Sinclair and his conscientious dealings with a constantly increasing patronage are too well known to call for comment. That from time to time he has been compelled to increase his facilities to meet the demands of his customers is but the result of a wide-awake ambition to serve all quickly and satisfactorily. That such an aim has been acquired is amply borne out in the endless array of fabrics, the inspection of which is ever a pleasure and, we might add, a wonder. The wish of scores of friends and patrons is that the conclusion of this double decade may be but the forerunner of a long, and if possible, greater success.

Trenton, March 2. 1915.
Lieut. Col. W. G. Ketcheson,
Belleville, Ont.

My Dear Sir,—Your kind invitation to the Complimentary Banquet to be held at the Hotel Quinte, Belleville, on Friday, 5th March, is duly received. Many thanks for the same. I am sorry that owing to circumstances over which I have no control, I will be unable to accept such kind invitation. No doubt you will have a good time, as you always have, and wishing you all success and a pleasant evening.

Very truly yours,
R. WEDDELL.

The addresses which were given by the various speakers called upon to respond were patriotic in their sentiment.

"The Empire."—This toast, in the absence of General Hughes, was responded to by Sir Mackenzie Bowell, who in his opening remarks, said it was a pleasure for him to accept the invitation of Col. Ketcheson to be present. He, with all Canadians, was particularly pleased with the unanimity that existed amongst all classes of His Majesty's subjects who rallied to the defence of the Empire at this important crisis in the Empire. Referring to the absence of Major General The Hon. Sam Hughes, Sir Mackenzie stated that the Minister of Militia desired him to express his great regret at not being able to be present, owing to the fact that his time was fully occupied in his parliamentary and official duties. The Minister's duties had been and were at present arduous, requiring the closest attention of the Department. The mobilization of between 30,000 and 40,000 men and the sending of over 30,000 men in the first contingent was by no means an easy task. In addition to this work the Minister had been bombarded and criticized in Parliament for explanations upon many points, which required his constant presence to answer them. He (Sir Mackenzie) remarked that it is too unreasonable to suppose that some mistakes would not occur. Who, Sir Mackenzie asked, would or could have accomplished more than Hon. Sam Hughes, had they been in his place. We had in Canada no standing army of any account, yet over 30,000 men had been mobilized and sent to the front to fight for the Empire. The speaker stated that Col. Hughes was at one time connected with No. 1 company of the 49th Regiment, and that the regiment had given to Canada two Ministers of Militia, namely, Hon. Sam Hughes and himself. He (Sir Mackenzie) had served in the 49th Regiment and had in the past done duty. No. 1 Company had done duty during the Fenian Raid, and at Gananoque in 1867 when Bill Johnson, a rebel, was at Hickey Island, in the St. Lawrence, causing trouble. In referring to the Ketcheson family, Sir Mackenzie said the name was an honored household one in this county. The great great grandfather of the Colonel was a U. E. Loyalist, having left the United States during the Revolution and made his way to New Brunswick, then westward until he located in Sidney in Hastings, where the Ketchesons are now as numerous as musquitos in June, and fortunately for the country, being of the same old stock, are still increasing. The toast assigned to him upon which to address those present was altogether of too great magnitude for an after-dinner speech. He would therefore content himself with expressing his pleasure at realizing the unanimity of sentiment and feeling at present prevailing in the whole community in a desire to defend the Empire. Politics had been dropped for the time being, not only here but in the Mother Land. In England the Tories and Liberals are as one, all were joining hands in one common purpose. There could be but one result of the present struggle, namely, victory for the Allies and the suppression of German militarism in the future. Much brutality had been enacted by the Germans in the murdering of women, old men, and even children. Germany must and will be taught a lesson, that she will not forget. In referring to the United States in this present conflict the speaker said he believed that country was in sympathy with the Allies, but with a population of so complicated a character, it might be difficult for the President to maintain that strict neutrality one would like. Canada forms a part of an Empire of which we are proud, having carried, as she has done, religious and civil liberties to all parts of the world. What Great Britain had done in the past she will do in the future. Canada is doing her part, and her services are recognized in the Mother Land. If we are required to send more men to the front we will not be lacking in the performance of that duty. He wished all who had gone and all who would go Godspeed and hoped all would come back again safe and crowned with glory, even though they take part in the firing line. (Loud Applause.)

Song—"Heroes and Gentlemen," was most acceptably rendered by Mr. A. M. Chapman.

"Canada"—This toast was ably responded to by Mr. E. G. Porter, K.C., M.P. for West Hastings. In his opening remarks he said he felt flattered that he was present as a civilian and not as a soldier, but he was seven years a member of the 15th Argyll Light Infantry. In referring to the toast the speaker said it was regrettable that Mr. W. B. Northrup, K.C., M.P., was unable to be present, as all would have been pleased to have heard him. The toast was a large one, namely, our honored country, Canada. We have one of the greatest countries on the face of the globe. Our resources were great and no better way of showing the faith we have in our country can be given than has been given. It speaks volumes for Canada when His Majesty the King took such an interest in the Canadian troops. At this particular time the Canadian people are deeply interested in the great struggle that is taking place. Every true and loyal Canadian is much interested in this desperate struggle, the greatest struggle that any nation was ever engaged in. Canadians are interested, owing to the fact that so many thousands of officers and men have gone to the front from here and many more will go. All will go willingly to fight for the Empire and bring honor to themselves and this country. The speaker said he thought the great American nation would have done more in this great struggle, and whilst not being able to prevent it, should have been able to assist in a greater measure for its termination. It might do more than it has done to end this fearful war. Mr. Porter said there had been considerable criticism of Major General Hughes, but before criticising all should ask themselves the question, who could have done better under the circumstances. He should be praised instead of critized. He sincerely believed that the officers, if they get into the firing line, will do their duty, and he hoped all would return again to live to a good old age. (Loud applause.)

Mr. J. W. Johnson was called upon, and referred to the fact that it was a pleasure for him to accept the kind invitation of Col. Ketcheson to be present. In referring to the toast of "Canada," Mr. Johnson said that fifty years ago Canada was assisting in the defence of the United States, and amongst those who served was the Hon. Colonel of the 49th Regiment, Sir Mackenzie Bowell. The speaker said he had borne arms in the defence of Canada when it was threatened with invasion by a foe. In speaking of the present crisis the speaker said that party lines were eliminated in the Mother Land. What noble and grand men were at the head of affairs—Premier Asquith, Lloyd George, Kitchener, Churchill, French, Jellicoe, Beatty and others. Both parties of Canada had eliminated politics at the present time. We met tonight under peculiar circumstances. Officers were present in khaki uniform who would no doubt within a few weeks or months at most be fighting, not in France, but in Germany. The speaker referred to Mr. Eillier, M.P.P. for South Huron, who was a German, and who in making a speech in Toronto said there was not a more loyal man in Canada than he was, and his father and grandfather were. Mr. Johnson requested Mr. Eillier to make such a statement in the Legislature. The Germans of the County of Waterloo and the City of Berlin have contributed much of their means since this war broken out. In speaking of France, Mr. Johnson referred to and exhibited a photograph of a monument at Strassburg which for 40 years had been draped in emblems of mourning on account of the loss of the Provinces of Alsace and Lorraine. The French are anticipating regaing these provinces when the war closes, and he hoped it would not be long before such an end is reached. Drill and discipline must become a part of the life of the young Canadians. The Government has erected armouries for the training of the young men. Mr. Johnson said he attended the old military school at Kingston and received there a fine military training. He attributed the excellent health he enjoyed to drill. We have now engaged in this war, with the Allies, lads we have known from birth. Today they are facing the enemy in the trench for our freedom, that freedom which was obtained by sacrifice. The British blood is in their veins and others will be fighting with them. He hoped that all good would result.

"The Army and Navy."—This toast was responded to by Col. Hemming of Kingston, commanding officer of the Third Division. He was grateful to be present at the banquet, which was to honor seven officers who were going with the overseas contingent. He said he was not going to the front at present. He envied those who had been selected for the overseas contingent. Those selected to go were considered to be the best men, irrespective of politics or religion. He would ask them to go and play the game and play it well. Some must stay at home doing duty. When the 39th Battalion is mobilized in Belleville he would ask all members to eliminate all petty jealousies, and think not of being a member of the 49th, 15th or any other regiment, but one battalion. Col. Ketcheson had every reason to be proud of the officers under him. Col. Hemming said he was proud of the Third Division, which had done its duty, as some 7,000 had enlisted. The 39th Battalion was at present over strength, but recruiting was still going on and would continue to go on.

Col. Ponton, being called upon, made an eloquent address. He said the gathering was an unique one. The Ketcheson family he referred to as a great family, a family which was thoroughly imbued with the military spirit. How appropriate it was that those in khaki who have enlisted for the overseas contingent were termed "our guests" upon this occasion. The Colonel referred to the Royal Military College at Kingston and the good it was accomplishing, and how many who had taken a course in that institution were at the front and were going to the front. A magnetic spirit had radiated from it. All of us, including the children, are a great asset of the country. The good comradeship of the soldiers was exhibited at Valcartier, where the 1st contingent from Canada assembled. All regiments were merged into one. The Colonel, after referring to the Bay of Quinte boys, whom he said were all our boys, and at present were at the front, read a letter from his son, Lieut. R. D. Ponton, written in France, and outlining briefly what was taking place. The letter was written at the centre. The Colonel said it was a grand thing to live in the present day. In referring to the passing away of Lord Roberts, he said a great soldier had gone to his reward. There was a great military funeral when Wellington was buried, but a greater one when the remains of Little Bobs was laid away. He was a man who visited Bustard Camp, where the contingent from Canada was stationed. The present and future are before us and our duty was plain. In referring to those who were going away the Colonel cautioned them to on no account allow the enemy to deter them from commun-

Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

UNITED STATES HIT BY WAR

Despite the fact that every country in the world has suffered from a demoralized commerce and has been faced by conditions without parallel in the history of the world and that the United States, a neutral nation, has had a loss of revenue of more than a hundred millions this year and has resorted to extraordinary taxes, Mr. Maclean had the presumption to declare in the House of Commons that Canada's falling revenues and declining commerce were not due to the European hostilities. Mr. Macdonnell in reply pointed out that the United States has been as seriously affected as Canada and to emphasize his point, quoted from a Congressional address of President Wilson, delivered last fall. The head of the American Republic in appealing for special taxation very similar to Canada's said:

"During the month of August there was as compared with the corresponding month of last year a falling off of $10,629,538 in the revenues collected from customs. A continuation of this decrease in the same proportion throughout the current fiscal year would probably mean a loss of customs revenues from sixty to one hundred millions. I need not tell you to what this falling off is due. It is due, in chief part, not to the reductions recently made in the customs duties, but to the great decrease in importations; and that is due to the extraordinary extent of the industrial area affected by the present war in Europe. Conditions have arisen which no man foresaw; they affect the whole world of commerce and economic production; and they must be faced and dealt with."

FRANCHISING THE SOLDIERS

It is the intention of the government to preserve the franchise for the soldiers who are fighting the battles of Canada and the Empire at the front and to permit them to vote at a general election, if such should take place before the war is ended. The matter was brought before the house last week by Mr. A. E. Fripp, senior member for Ottawa, who moved a resolution on the subject. Sir Robert Borden and Hon. Robert Rogers, speaking on behalf of the government, expressed in the heartiest terms their approval of such a move, if at all feasible. As for the Liberals they did not dare oppose such a proposal but they threw cold water on the scheme as being impractical. On motion of Sir Robert the special committee of the house appointed to deal with the revision of the Election Act was asked to take up the subject and to work out some practical plan of allowing soldiers even in the trenches to exercise their franchise.

It is said that Roumania will enter the war in April. "Everybody's Doing It" should be a popular tune soon.

CREATING STRIFE

Commenting upon Hon. William Pugsley's flagrant violation of the political truce in the House of Commons, the Ottawa Evening Journal remarked as follows:—

"With nothing more than rumor and suspicion upon which to base his statements, Mr. Pugsley made allegations, charges and insinuations which reflected upon the honor and patriotism of men who occupy positions of trust and responsibility. There is very little difference between stating a thing which you do not know to be true, and a thing which you know to be false; and unless Mr. Pugsley had more evidence in his possession than he furnished the House, which is unlikely, he certainly could not have known whether a number of his suspicions had the slightest foundation in fact. And what end is gained by this line of conduct? Only the stirring up of party strife—something which should be avoided just now—and the contribution of a measure of satisfaction to our enemies."

CURRENT COMMENT

If Laurier and the Liberal press carry their hatred of the "Made in Canada" propaganda further, they will soon be wanting to have dreadnoughts built in Britain.

Laurier sank nearly as much money on the useless Moncton section of the Transcontinental as will be required to finance Canada's share in the war for a whole year.

It must delight the hearts of the Empire's enemies to hear the Canadian Liberal party proclaim day by day that the richest of the Empire's Dominions is practically bankrupt.

The Opposition seems to be specially angry because the tariff has been increased on boots. This reminds us that Liberals themselves increased the tariff on boots by five per cent.

When Liberal demagogues rant about the increase in the national debt just remember that for fifteen years the Liberal party increased that same debt at the rate of $5,000,000 a year.

The English merchant captain who claims that he rammed and sank a German submarine will get the $5,800 in prizes which were offered for such a feat. Those who investigated his claim are apparently satisfied that it is true.

Kingston Standard:" There seems to be some sort of a naturalization act necessary by which a medical man with a degree from a properly constituted authority in the British Empire should be able to practice anywhere within the Empire."

The American minister to Holland says that he sees no change in the sentiment of the Dutch people in respect to a continuance of neutrality. Yet it will be remarkable if Holland does steer a clear course through all the vexations with which she is beset.

One revolution has been accomplished in Russia since the war began by abolishing the use of vodka. Now comes a report that another revolution has been resolved upon in the form of a general compulsory education law. Things are happening rapidly in Russia.

When the Liberal party declares that it is willing to support the Government in any expenditure which may be necessary to bring the war to a successful conclusion, and then complains about the taxes to pay for the war, they place themselves in the position of a man who refuses to cash his own cheque.

Tea sold in bulk by the average retail grocer cannot reach you entirely free from dust and contamination. When sold in the original sealed "SALADA" packets, however, it is delivered exact in weight, uniform in quality, pure and clean, at a fair even price.

Rob Box Of Gold On Ship

NEW YORK, March 5.—When Kidder, Peabody & Co., opened a box of gold coin received in a shipment of $250,000 from London on Monday, they found a corner of the wooden cover nearly broken out and $2,400 in double eagles missing from a bag beneath the opening.

The bag had been slashed its full length and a few coins remained, indicating, apparently, that the thief had been too fearful of detection to complete his work. The hole in the cover was just about wide enough to admit a man's four fingers.

The theft was reported at once to the American Line, whose steamer, the New York, brought in the gold, and an inquiry was ordered by cable to the London office of the company. At the American Line office here inquiries yesterday found that nothing appeared to be known about the loss. The bankers, too, refused to say anything about it. Here, however, are the facts, in so far as they are known on this side of the Atlantic:

The thief got into the box either before the gold was delivered to the steamship or while it was being deposited in the ship's strong room. The box was surrounded by a number of iron bands, which held a sheet of heavy tin in place over the top. The tin cover was nailed to the box at the ends, and it was not noticed that the nails were missing from one end until the box was opened in the banking office here.

The tin had been bent back and a piece knocked out of the wooden lid with a heavy blow. After the gold was removed the operator bent the tin cover back into place, and it was made further secure from notice by the weight of other boxes put on top of it. The box when taken off the ship in New York was in one of the lowest tiers of the pile of boxes of gold.

The bankers will not suffer any loss. If the company is not able to recover the coin, the value will be made good from the insurance taken out upon the shipment.

Major Gault On Duty With Arm In Sling

Wound Being Slight He Refused to go to the Base Hospital—Friction Over Comforts

LONDON, March 5.—The news that Major A. Hamilton Gault has been wounded was only published here today through cables emanating from Canada, and no one in official circles had heard of it. Mrs. Gault has received a brief message which shows that the Major has been slightly wounded, the injury being a fleshy wound in the right forearm. This was sustained while the Major was leading the brilliant charge on Saturday last, which gained special mention in General French's report. Major Gault refused to go to the base hospital, and is on duty with his arm in a sling.

FRICTION OVER COMFORTS.

Friction between the Canadian War Contingent Association and lady officers appointed by the Militia Department to superintend the distribution of comforts has reached a stage at which the Association has appealed to the Dominion Government for arbitration. The difficulty seems to be that the Association, which has gathered the materials, finds it has no official standing sufficient to enforce certain requests. The result of the deadlock is that a large quantity of comforts is being held up for the time being.

CHECK ON FRESH LOANS.

Manchester City Corporation had a letter before them yesterday from the Treasury to the effect that the committee on fresh issues of capital required that Treasury approval should be obtained for raising fresh loans in any form. The Corporation was informed that capital expenditure should not be undertaken except for schemes in progress, and wherever possible such expenditures should be postponed or spread over longer than the normal term.

NO LOANS EXCEPT FOR WAR.

The Canadian authorities here realize that the Imperial Government is resolved to offer no encouragement to those coming for money for anything outside war expenditure. Hence it is futile to look to London to support new enterprises in the Dominion at present or in the near future.

MISUSE OF MAIL STEAMERS.

"Canada," commenting on the transfer of German prisoners from Atlantic liners to camps, condemns this misuse of Canadian mail steamers. It asserts that the cost of housing prisoners in liners would amaze the public if the figures were published.

The Turks are said to be preparing for a second invasion of Egypt, according to despatches. Beg pardon, was there a first invasion?

One Editor In Berlin Who Scents Danger

Theodore Wolfe, of the Tageblatt, Fully Appreciates Dardanelles Action's Effect

LONDON, March 5.—The Daily Chronicle says that Theodore Wolff, chief editor of the Berlin Tageblatt, contributes an interesting article to his paper dealing with the bombardment of the Dardanelles, from which, the paper says, it is clear that he is one of the few German journalists of prominence who appreciate the situation which the Allies' progress in the straits will create.

Dr. Wolff says he has no illusions about the intentions of the Allies in forcing the passage, and admits that, if they are successful, the results will be of tremendous import.

"There is," he says, "first, an intention to create uneasiness in Constantinople, and strengthen the hands of the opponents of Enver and Talaat. This might force the Porte either to conclude a separate peace with the Allies or to withdraw the army threatening the Suez Canal. The second object is to stiffen Roumania and Bulgaria against the central monarchy."

Von Hindenburg's recent victory and the evacuation of Bukowina have, according to Dr. Wolff, taken the strength out of the movement led by the Roumanian leaders, Take and Jonescu; but it requires little imagination to see that Roumania and Bulgaria "will sing another song, presumably a song of welcome," when the Allies' warships appear before their harbors in the Euxine.

It is Italy, however, which the Allies have mainly in view, Dr. Wolff says. For months their agent has been at work whispering in Italy's ears and warning her that a power that declines to take a part in the conflict cannot expect any portion of the spoils. Italy seems to be Dr. Wolff's chief hope. The Italians are a nation, he says, which reckons cruelly and carefully, and it is just possible that the British politicians who are counting on its cooperation are in the position of the milkmaid in the fable who engaged too prematurely in counting her chickens.

Besides, adds Dr. Wolff, will not the possession of Constantinople be decided on European battlefields, and not in the Dardanelles? He recognizes, however, the danger, and reluctantly quotes from a leading Swiss journal which roundly declares that war is unavoidable if Italy is not squared with the Trentino, and that if the Trentino is not ceded, a revolution is certain as well as war.

Dr. Wolff takes a most serious view of the situation and disapproves the optimism of his journalistic colleagues who smile at the news from the Near East and pooh-pooh the possibility of forcing the straits. He has confidence in the wisdom and restraint of the Italian Government, but fears that the safety door will be opened only after the house is on fire.

HOLD QUESTION TILL CLOSE OF THE WAR

Farmers Bank Shareholders Held Meeting in Toronto

TORONTO, March 5.—The depositors in the defunct Farmers' Bank were represented yesterday at a meeting at the Carls-Rite Hotel for the purpose of reviewing the whole question of relief for the depositors. A full discussion of the bill which passed through the House of Commons last year, but which was rejected by the Senate, was heard. It was decided to wait for the present as the war placed the Government at a disadvantage in considering such questions of domestic importance as that pertaining to the relief of the depositors in the Farmers' Bank. Also Premier Borden had expressed his belief in the bill, and this was enough to make the depositors patient. The loyalty of the depositors toward Canada and the Empire was greater than their devotion to the interest of their own pockets.

MRS. WISENEIGHBOUR SAYS:

"I should have told you the other day when I was speaking of "Eddy's" Washboards that it is just as necessary to have an indurated Fibreware Tub to hold your clothes if you want to make a success of washday".

MRS. NEWLYWED says: "I've heard of Eddy's Indurated Fibreware. What's the difference between Fibreware and Woodenware?"

"Fibreware is made from compressed fibre, baked at extreme heat, all in one solid piece, it cannot warp or fall apart, no chance of splinters—wears much longer—looks much better—and is lighter to carry. The latter point you should always take into consideration," concludes Mrs. Wiseneighbour.

"Fruit-a-tives" Keeps Young And Old In Splendid Health

J. W. HAMMOND Esq.

SCOTLAND, ONT., Aug. 25th. 1913

"Fruit-a-tives" are the only pill manufactured, to my way of thinking. They work completely, no griping whatever, and one is plenty for any ordinary person at a dose. My wife was a martyr to Constipation. We tried everything on the calendar without satisfaction, and spent large sums of money until we happened on "Fruit-a-tives". I cannot say too much in their favor.

We have used them in the family for about two years and we would not use anything else as long as we can get "Fruit-a-tives".

Their action is mild, and no distress at all. I have recommended them to many other people, and our whole family uses them".

EARTHQUAKE SHOCK IN CENTRL ITALY

Panic Among People Who Feared Repitition of Abruzzi Horrors

FLORENCE, via Rome, March 5.—A slight earthquake shock lasting four seconds which was felt in Tuscany and other sections in the central part of Italy at 7.56 o'clock last night, caused no fatalities, and only minor material damage, according to reports received here from various points where the earth tremor was observed. A panic was caused among the people in the districts where the shock was felt, as it was feared it might presage a repetition of the recent disaster in the Abruzzi district. The fact that the tremor was accompanied by subterranean rumblings has given rise to the belief that it was of volcanic origin.

Situation in Constantinople On February 24

Wonderful Stories of German Victories Failed to Enthuse the Populace

LONDON, March 5—A delayed dispatch to the London Morning Post, from Constantinople, dated February 24th, says:

"This place seems to be laboring more and more under Prussian military law, which, in other words, the army must be allowed to gorge in plenty even if civilians have to starve. If this state of things continues much longer I should not be surprised were a revolution to break out.

"The Tanin goes on publishing wonderful stories of victories by the Turkish army in Egypt and on the Suez Canal, while we are told that the whole Russian army is in full retreat and England blockaded by German submarines. This news is passed around the bazaars in hopes to keep the kettle of enthusiasm at least warm, for it no longer reaches the boiling point, and no wonder, for how can a half-starved people be expected to rave over the victory which brings them no apparent relief?

"We have learned to read the Tanin reports with a considerable amount of skepticism and would give a lot to get hold of an English, French or even a neutral paper; but these are tabooed and the German censors take good care that nothing leaks through which is likely to cause any uneasiness among the Turks The slightest rumor that anything was wrong at present would be fatal, for underlying distrust of the Germans which exists in the minds of Turkish circles might break out in a public demonstration and cause endless trouble.

"Great nervousness is already being felt regarding the Dardanelles, for enormous activity is being manifested in the dockyards. Workmen spread rumors that the outer forts must have been damaged. The poor old Goeben is being hammered day and night with redoubled energy, and it is believed she will, at least, be able to use her guns as a sort of coast defense if the worst comes to the worst.

"One thing is certain—that is, that if the British and French fleet get through the Dardenelles there will be a panic here.

BELLEVILLE, ITS BEGINNING AND EARLY HISTORY

(By Maurice D. Lynch)

Belleville was incorporated as a town in 1850. The councillors elected for that year were: Sampson Ward, C. O. Benson, F. McAnnany and Jaco Bonter; Ketcheson Ward, B. F. Davy, Dr. R. Holden and Samuel Stevens; Baldwin Ward, Jonathan McCurdy, John Coulter and Edward P. Bosely; Coleman Ward, R. F. Coleman, Burleigh Hunt and John Donoghue. The town clerk was J. W Washurn; treasurer, M. Sawyer; assessors, J. Copeland, A. O. Petrie, W. Dame and H. Maginnis; collector, George McAdie; surveyor, J. Grant. The chief constable was W. Haseltine.

In those days the council selected the mayor from among their own members, and the first council of the Town of Belleville chose Benjamin F. Davy by a vote of 8 to 3 over his opponent for the honor, Francis McAnnany.

It may be of interest to mention here that the village of Tweed was laid out in the year 1850.

While Belleville was beginning to put on airs in 1850, still, it really was quite a small place, after all, for we find that in 1849 the total of the collector's roll for tax collections was only 749 pounds, 17 shillings and 6 pence, a sum insignificant when compared with the figures of to-day.

Belleville forged ahead rapidly after 1850, for we find that in 1860 the assessed valuation of the town was $1,584,320, and in 1870 $2,669,776, while by the year 1879 it had reached the respectable figure of $3,731,674.

It will be seen that progress was well under way when we state that in 1853 a by-law was passed which provided for a system of sewerage for the town. That was a big step in the right direction. In 1854 the tallow dip and the coal oil lamp were relegated to the rear when an order was passed giving authority to the Belleville Gas Company to lay down pipes in the town.

One great factor in Belleville's growth after the year 1850 was the improvement of the roads throughout that section of the country. Gravel roads were constructed all through Hastings and adjoining countries. George Benjamin was the early apostle of good roads in Hastings county. He it was, too, who advocated and succeeded in having tolls removed from the roads of the town and country roundabout.

But perhaps the most important event in Belleville's history—that is to say, from a commercial and material point of view—was the coming of the Grand Trunk Railway. The line from Brockville to Belleville was opened for traffic on October 27, 1856. It may interest present-day citizens to learn that at that time the line was known as the "Montreal and Kingston Railway" and the "Kingston and Toronto Railway." These names were dropped later and the road was called the "Grand Trunk Railway." The line was continued on to mileage 224, near Brighton, in the same year as part of the Kingston and Toronto Railway.

An interesting sidelight on these times and a good illustration of what the railroad must have meant to the people of that district, is furnished by some old letters which I have before me at this moment. One of them, written from Algoma, March 14, 1856, to my father, is particularly interesting. The writer was an old Irishman, from the County Kerry, who knew my father in the old country. He had cleared a farm near Algoma and was prosperously settled there with his family. He said that the nearest village to him was Egansville, 12 miles away, and he had to drive there to the grist mill. Renfrew, the nearest town, was, according to the letter, 40 miles away. The old chap was anxious to see my father again and stated that he and his son possessed good horses and would like to ride to Belleville to pay the desired visit. He was a little fearful of the trip, though, and anxiously inquired about the state of the roads and whether they were passable. He winds up that part of the letter with: "I would start away, only that I do be afeared of the wolves." That sounds primitive, does it not?

Higher education began to be thought of in Belleville, about this time, and, in 1857, Albert University (originally called the Belleville Seminary) was established.

$500.00 in Prizes

It will pay him in many ways. It frequently saves life by securing medical aid quickly in cases of accident or serious illness.

It enables him to take produce to market quicker and when prices are highest, or to get repairs and parts for machinery quickly in dsee ti me or harvest, when time is precious.

A woman can easily drive a McLaughlin Car and thus avoid the danger from runaway or bad tempered horses.

It is always ready for work, no harnessing or hitching up to do.

It helps to keep the young folks on the farm and brings you in closer touch with the neighboring towns and cities; in fact, makes life easier for yourself and family.

Model C25 Touring Car, 28 H.P. 4 cylinder motor, 106 inch wheelbase, $1,250 f.o.b., Oshawa.

" Passed and approved by the Canadian people."

Remember, every McLaughlin has the famous VALVE-IN-HEAD MOTOR, that is guaranteed to develop and deliver more power than any other motor of equal size, either American or European make.

The McLAUGHLIN CARS

are built in Canada—by the oldest Carriage Company in Canada, and have earned a wonderful reputation among motorists for Economy and Power.

McLaughlin Service

Our Company is one of the oldest Carriage Companies in Canada—is a purely Canadian Company—built up with entirely Canadian capital.

Competition

The prizes are offered for an article giving the best reasons or arguments

"Why an Automobile is Profitable to a Farmer"

There are absolutely no strings attached to this contest, but we want to know the views of people on farms who would like to have an automobile, or who have one.

Think of how it would help keep the young folks on the farm—make farm life brighter—save many a crop by fetching parts to repair machinery—carry stuff to market cheaply—and all the other many advantages it would bring.

The judges will be:

Mr. JOHN WELD, Prop. Farmer's Advocate, London, Ont.
Mr. GEO. BERTRAM, Vice-Pres., Canadian Farm, Toronto
F. ALBANY ROWLATT, Advertising Specialist, Toronto

COMPETITION WILL CLOSE APRIL 1st

CLERGY ORDINATION PROVED FRAUDULENT

NO DIVINE AUTHORITY FOR IT

Christian People Humbugged — Dignified False Statements — Christ's Kingdom Thereby Injured—Shackles of Ignorance and Superstition Forged — The Start of the Error — Its Motive— Its Bad Effects — The Proper Remedy

Speaking of the New York City Temple, Pastor Russell took for his text, "CRY ALOUD, spare not; show My people their transgression." Isaiah 58:1. He prefaced his address with some remarks respecting the unpleasant duty impiled in his text, declaring that he would far rather speak only smooth, pleasant things to everybody and concerning everybody. The Pastor certainly has the happy faculty of stating pungent truths in sympathetic language well supported by kindly tones. He speaks from the heart and carries conviction as respects his sincerity. He said in part:

Every unbiased student of the Bible surely will agree that our Redeemer and His disciples manifested great humility, in contrast with the clergy of our day and of centuries past. None were Reverends, Right Reverends. They knew nothing whatever about the distinction between clergy and laity which subsequently developed. Jesus indeed received the title of Lord or Master, Teacher; but with great humility He pointed out that His teaching was the Message of the Father. Similarly, the Apostles glorified God, and declared themselves "men of like passions with yourselves." Jesus taught His disciples that they should not be self-seeking, should not seek the honor which cometh down from above. "One is your Master, even Christ; and all ye are brethren," was His way of forewarning us against the error which subsequently divided the Lord's people into clergy and laity.

Shackles of Ignorance and Superstition.

It is but reasonable to assume that many Christian ministers have neither studied deeply nor thought carefully on this subeect, but have merely folowed the beaten path of their various denominations without enquiring for the Divine authority of their ordination, titles and honor of men as titled ecclesiastics. But our sympathy should not hinder us from freeing our minds of the shackles of ignorance, superstition, nor from helping others to the liberty therewith Christ makes free.

The persecutions of the Second and Third Centuries undoubtedly tended to keep the Church humble and free from hypocrites, but the prosperity dating from the beginning of the Fourth Century had a bad effect. Many of the bishops, according to Church history, neglected to follow the example of the Lord and the Apostle, and became lords, dignitaries, in the Church, seeking to impress the worldly, and especially the rulers, with their importance.

In the year 330 A.D., under the patronage of the Emperor Constantine, all Christians who acknowledged the Nicene Creed were not only protected, but honored, the Emperor seeking to strengthen his political power thereby. By him the Bishop of Rome was granted special honor as a chief amongst the Bishops. In the century following the power of the Bishops was greatly increased by various false doctrines which gradually crept in. The doctrine of a fiery Hell of torture was one of these, followed later by a theory that members of the true Church would never be sent to it, but would instead be sent to Purgatory, the tortures of which would furnish them a second chance for purification and preparation for Heaven.

The clergy gradually grasped more and more of power and money for services in this world and beyond. Every marriage not performed by them would be invalid. Those married otherwise would be living in sin. The theory of infant damnation made the ministers additionally necessary to sprinkle the babies, to preserve them from eternal torture. Then followed classification of sins and the fixing of penalties and arranging for masses for the sooner deliverance of the culprit from Purgatory. Rites and ceremonies connected with the dead were also declared necessary. All of these served to bind the people to the clergy, and more and more separated them from the simplicity of the Gospel and the example of Jesus and the apostles, to which we are seeking to return but are fought at every step by ignorance an superstition within and without.

A Point Not Generally Known.

Favored by conditions prevailing the Bishop of Rome became more and more prominent, while the Roman Empire gradually went to pieces. The Bishop of Rome took to himself the title Pontifex Maximus, a title previously held by the Caesars. Another step in the wrong direction, which thoroughly separated the clergy from the laity, was the doctrine still held by the Church of Rome, namely, that the clergy alone constitute the church, and that the common people are the children of the church. Many Catholics are not aware of this fact, but think that they are members of the Catholic Church. They forget that while they are privileged to call the unordained students by the title brother, all the ordained number must be recognized as father.

The year 800 found Pope Leo III. in great honor, and the church flourishing and making higher claims than ever before; namely, that the church became at that time the Kingdom of God. Catholics stil hold that the millennium, or Christ's thousand-year reign, began that year. They claim that the Popes each in turn represent Christ on His Throne; hence the deparation that the Popes are Christ's Vicegerent—reigning instead of Him.

When the Pope represented Christ, the cardinals represented the highest order of the church in glory; then archibishops, bishops, and the lower clergy, all separated from the people by a great gulf—the clergy, the elect of God, holding the power and the and the destines of the laity in their control; the laity dependent upon the clergy for baptism, marriage, funerals, holy candles, holy water, consecrated burying grounds, and, finally, an entrance into Purgatory instead of into eternal torment, with the ultimate hope of rescue to glory and with assistance by the way obtainable through the office of the mass.

I am discussing the Church of Rome only because for a time there was no other. Indeed, for a time it was dangenerous to even suggest another. The Pope and the College of Cardinals, representing the Almighty instructed the people who should be their kings and princes; and, as a matter of course, they were instructed to be obedient only to such as recognized the papal power.

Thus the separation amongst Christ's followers of clergy and laity was established for centuries before the Protestant denominations of today were born. It was but natural that the Protestants should more or less copy the practices and many of the doctrines with which they had been familiar from childhood. The Greek, Armenian and Anglican Churches copied very closely the mother. They still preserve the likeness in many respects, even though they came out of her as Protestants and have sought to return to the Bible teachings and methods. But power and ceremony are difficult matters to get rid of. In consequence we see everywhere forms of godliness without much outward manifestation of the spirit of Christ.

Protestants and Christ's Kingdom

Protestants are much confused respecting the papal claim that Christ's kingdom has been set up. They, of course deny that the Popes are Christ's vicegerent. Nevertheless, they have followed Papacy's lead in telling earthly kingdom and rulers that they are part and parcel of Christ's kingdom—"Christendom." They send their chaplains with the armies and navies of these kingdoms. They receive financial support and recognition from them and call upon the civil power to suppress so-called heretics, refuse them license to preach, etc. They thus follow closely in the footsteps of the mother. Altogether these false doctrines are surely responsible, not only for many wars of the past, but also for the present European war.

We may assume that some of the clergy, Catholic and Protestant, are thoroughly confused and honestly doing what they believe to be the Lord's will in these matters. But on the other hand, we are bound to assume that in the light of our day there are thousands of ministers who are not deceived—who know full well that the world is ruled, not by Christ and His Teachings, but by self-seeking kings, princes, nobles, financiers, politicians, etc.

But knowing these things, seeing the people in ignorance, what have the ministers of so-called "Chrisendom" done to open the eyes of the people to the truth on this subject—to tell them that these kingdoms are not Christ's kingdoms in any sense of the word? How few of them ever even refer to the Second Coming of the Redeemer! How few of them have ever pointed their people to St. Peter's words respecting the glorious times of restitution which Messiah's kingdom will usher in!—Acts 3:19-21.

Policy, self-seeking, lack of candor, are certainly manifest in the course of the preachers of all denominations. Now as the hour of their judgment approaches they deserve our sympathy. They have held on so long to the errors of the past that they are ashamed now to turn about and make confession. Many of them think that the safer course is to "bluff" the people. But it will not do. Many in the pews are well educated as the occupants of the pulpit, and decline to be any longer fed on chaff and wind. Hence the complained-of decline in church attendance.

In an endeavor to intimidate their people, to hinder them from hearing me and from reading my books entitled 'STUDIES IN THE SCRIPTURES,' the preachers are going to absurd lengths. They have tried all kinds of slander and vilification, but still the common people are hearing gladly in all parts of the world the Message of the Bible—its anti-clerical message. The preachers have published me as "a heretic,' only to find that the most thoughtful and intelligent of their people realize that their creeds are unsatisfactory and are the more anxious to know what I have to tell them respecting the Bible Message of God's Wisdom, Justice, Love and Power, operating through Jesus now for the blessing of the church and during the millennium for the blessing of the remainder of the world.

Dignified False Pretense

Let me make plain the subject of ministerial ordination. Each sect ordains (that is, authorizes) its own clerics. A clergyman passing from one denomination to another is, therefore, properly reordained. In a word, ordination is a human authority to be a clergyman for the ordaining sect. Certain vows of ordination are required before the ordination service takes place. The vow is that they will preach the doctrines, the creed, of the sect, and not otherwise. The entire matter is a fraud; for no educated or intelligent minister in any denomination believes the creed of his own denomination. He knows that more than half of it is absurd nightmare from the dark ages. He takes his vow to preach that creed, knowing that he does not believe it and intending never to preach certain features of it. The preacher is bound by his ordination vow so far as an outward nominal course is concerned, but privately he acknowledges his disbeliefs and thereby stultifies himself.

An occasional minister will be found in country districts willing to preach the creed of his denomination in full. But these are few and generally uneducated and, therefore, excusable. Some, however, when called to task respecting things which they preach, but which they admit they do not believe, make answers that their denomination stands back of them and is responsible for the creed and bound them by ordination vow to preach it. Thus are the people deceived. The glorious truth of the Bible is largely hidden. Sectarianism, Churchianity, is maintained; and hypocrisy and unbelief stimulated.

Pastor Russell Properly Ordained

I am glad that they are making known that I am not an ordained minister of their kind; as St. Paul says, I am not ordained or man, nor by man, but by the Lord. (Galatians 1:1) In mentioning ordination, these clergymen are counting on the ignorance of their people on the subject.

Personally, I would not have such an ordination to preach false doctrines, misrepresent Gods character, deceive the people and stultify myself, if it were backed by all the wealth of the world. On the contrary, I rejoice in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made me free and in the ordination which comes to me through God's word. "Go, teach all peoples,". and the ordination mentioned in the Scriptures as the Divine authority, namely, the anointing of the Holy Spirit and the understanding of God's Word—Isaiah 61:1-3.

20 Years of Growing Business

20 Years
MARCH 7, 1895, TO MARCH 7, 1915

WITH the appearance of this advertisement we close the TWENTIETH YEAR of our Business in the City of Belleville, and for the measure of success that has been ours, and made possible by the hearty co-operation of our many friends, we wish to express our appreciation and thank our ever increasing patrons for the continued confidence reposed in our store during all these years.

Beginning in a very small way, it has been our good fortune to experience a continual growth of business until now our annual turn-over of Staple and Fancy Dry Goods and Ladies' and Children's Garments is surpassed by no store in Central Ontario.

"Not how Cheap," but "How Good" was one of the maxims on which our business was built, knowing from experience that the memory of quality remains long after the price is forgotten: and as we look forward into our Twenty-First Year we feel that if we have served you well in the past we should be able to render better service for the future, and our ambition is not only to receive but also to merit a continuation of the liberal patronage conferred upon us in past years.

Never were we in a position to serve you as well as now, for twenty years of the closest personal attention to business has taught us many lessons, and our staff, some of whom have been studying your requirements for ten, fifteen, and even twenty years, are here to serve you, as only long experience can serve.

Again thanking our many friends for their patronage of the past, we pledge you our Whole Hearted Service for our Twenty-First Year, and remain,

SINCERELY YOURS,

Our New Serial Story

THE MOST FAMOUS WAR NOVEL OF MODERN TIMES, SHOWING GERMANY'S RUTHLESS HAND IN FRANCE, AUSTRIA AND DENMARK

Under the title "Disarm" this novel won for its author, Baroness Bertha Von Suttner, the Nobel Peace Prize

The story contains some passages strangely prophetic of the present world struggle, although the final scene of the story is the Franco-Prussian War of 44 years ago. The hypocrisy of a nation adopting conscription and a policy of huge armaments and pretending to hope for peace is proven to the hilt.

INJURED BY A FALL

We regret to say Colonel Lazier met with a severe accident which will keep him in the house for a few days. The Colonel slipped on the ice at the corner of Pinnacle and Paterson streets, and cut his nose and forehead very severely. Dr. MacColl, who was near at the time, attended to the injuries, and afterwards the Colonel was able to proceed home.

How You May Reduce Your Weight

Overstoutness is a very unwelcome condition especially in the present day when slender figures are so fashionable, and every reader of this paper has noticed the tendency of some people to put on an excessive amount of fat.

If you happen to be one of those whose weight is more than it should be, don't try to starve yourself, eat all you want, but go to your druggist and get oil of orilene in capsule form and take one with each meal.

Oil of orilene increases the oxygen-carrying power of the blood and dissolves the fatty tissue, in many cases at nearly the rate of one lb. per day. Be sure to get oil of orilene in capsule form. It is sold only in original sealed packages. Any good druggist has it, or a large size box will be sent on receipt of $1.00. Address D. J. Little Drug Co., Box 1240, Montreal, Can.

First Woman to Pay Alimony

MRS. G. DEIMER

Wealthy Mrs. George Deimer, former wife of an oil operator and contractor of Lima, Ohio, is said to be the first woman in the world to pay alimony. Her husband alleged that she was too intimate with a man whom she employed as a business agent, and she sued him for divorce. Deimer filed a counter-suit for alimony. The court gave him the divorce and the alimony, in the sum of $3,000, also. The divorced wife was given custody of their two children.

BASKETBALL

BASKETBALL NOTES

Two of the games scheduled to be played last night did not come off as the Tabernacle Juniors and Baptist Intermediates did not show up to play the Holloway teams. It has not yet been decided whether these games be forfeited or played at a later date.

The A Juniors of St. Andrew's and the Baptists were on scheduled time, eager for the match which proved to be a clean, fast and snappy one right from the start. St. Andrew's set a good pace at the face-off and kept it up throughout the game. St. Andrew's was the first to score and Harry Holland and Bob Lazier soon piled up a lead of thirteen points; then Alson Buchanan scored and made the score 15—0 in favor of St. Andrew's, which finished the first half.

The second half opened probably a little faster than the first, as the Baptists were bent on scoring at all costs. After St. Andrew's had made two more baskets, Hugh Ferguson scored for the Baptists and also got a foul shot wich made the standing 19—3. From this on the game was St. Andrew' and the final score was 25—3.

The line-up was as follows:

St. Andrews—Lazier, Holland, Buchanan, Cooper and Weir.

Baptists—Ferguson, Deeton, Barlow, Buck and Cook.

Notes of The Game

The St. Andrew's quintet certainly played a fast game, and every man did his best. Vernon Weir and Reg. Cooper on defence, stuck to their men like bloodsuckers, and kept them from scoring time and again. The three forwards played good combination and knew where to find each other nearly every time.

Lorne Deeton and Jack Barlow played a good game for the Baptists, as also did Hugh Ferguson, and the next game they play will be worth seeing as they are anxious to make good with any team.

For the small amount that is being charged to witness these Friday night matches there should be a good audience as it encourages the boys and a good game is always assured.

Carry a laugh with you and you will find a welcome almost everywhere—with the exception, possibly, of a funeral.

icating with those at home who were anxious for their welfare. This was an Empire of might and power and Canadians would assist in maintaining that might and power. God bless you all and bring you safe home again, was his heart-felt wish. If any Canadians died on the battlefield, over their graves would be the epitaph—"Here lies a gentleman." (Applause.)

Song—"It's a Long, Long Way to Tipperary", by Mr. Chapman.

Col. Preston, commanding officer of the 39th Battalion, was called upon. In his opening remarks he said the British army and the Canadians have responded eloquently to the toast of the navy and army. He congratulated Col. Ketcheson upon the assemblage and the send-off to those who have enlisted in the overseas contingents. When we have to do our part in this great drama which is now taking place he was confident Canadians would do their duty well. It was a struggle for the Empire for Christianity on one side and German autocracy on the other. God grant that we may have wisdom to do our duty and be a credit to our country.

"Our Guests,"—Responded to most appropriately by Capt. Bywater on behalf of those who were going away. He thanked the assemblage for the heartiness in which the toast was received. The speaker spoke in an eulogistic manner of Col. Hemming, D. O. C., who was a gentleman and a soldier to whom all could look up. In referring to the war, he said that two officers of the 49th Regiment were now in the firing line and seven were now enlisted as members of the 3rd contingent. We are all attached to the Empire and prepared to assist her in the great struggle she is now engaged in. The German Empire went into the war for the purpose of gaining more territory and more power. Canadians will do their duty and if needs be, die for their country.

Song—"Boys of Old England"—by Mr. Chapman.

Captain Gills also responded to the toast. He said it was indeed a pleasure for him to be present and hear the addresses given. He had been associated with the 15th Regiment and the 49th Regiment. He was now a member of the 49th Battalion, which is part of the Second Canadian Overseas Contingent. He spoke of a regimental fund being necessary for the overseas contingent, and also a field kitchen. The Councils of Belleville, Trenton and Sidney township had been appealed to to contribute to this regimental fund, and had nobly responded.

Sir Mackenzie Bowell proposed the health of Col. Ketcheson, which was enthusiastically received.

Song—"For He's a Jolly Good Fellow."

Col. Ketcheson said it afforded him great pleasure to have so many present at the gathering. He had, as commanding officer of the 49th Regiment, tried to do his duty, and although it was rather difficult at times to get men the recruiting officers of the 49th regiment had succeeded in securing 277. He thanked all present for the kind references to himself.

CHAPTER I.

At seventeen I was a very high strung girl. I should hardly realize this to-day, if it were not for the diaries so carefully laid away. In them I find again my long-lost enthusiasms, thoughts, and feelings now utterly forgotten, convictions of which now not a vestige remains, and sympathies which have long been dead and buried. I catch a glimpse of the emptiness and silliness which filled my pretty little head. But, as I painfully learn from my mirror, of the prettiness little trace is left, although the old portraits assure me that it once existed.

I can imagine what an envied little creature the Countess Martha Althaus must have been, pretty, popular, and petted. These quaint little red diaries, however, recorded more of sadness than of joy in her life. I think now "How could I have been so silly not to realize how singularly blessed I was with privileges?" Perhaps I was only expressing an unbalanced sentimentality, and I tried to express it in somewhat poetic prose. Imagine my discontent when I wrote:—

"O Joan of Arc! heroic, heavenly virgin! If only I too might have waved the oriflamme of France, crowned my king, and died for my fatherland!"

Alas! this modest ambition was never gratified.

Again, I longed to be torn in the arena by lions like the Christian martyrs. But the heroics were not for me. I must frankly admit that my life was a commonplace failure, and the glories for which my soul thirsted were for ever closed to me

Often the little red book exclaimed "Oh that I had been born a boy!" Then I should have been able to win fame. But feminine heroes are few. How seldom we have Gracchi for sons, and not often may we hope to carry our husbands on our backs through the Weinsberg Gates, or to be a queen and hear the sabre-swinging Magyars shout, "Long live Maria Theresa, our King!" A man need only gird on the sword and dash to fame and laurels, to capture a throne like Cromwell, or a world-empire like Napoleon.

My highest type of manhood was always a military hero. I had slight respect for mere poets, scholars, and discoverers. The heroes of many battles were the object of my adoration and devotion. Were they not the chief pillars of the state, the makers of history, the builders of empires? Did they not tower in God like grandeur over all other heroes as did the Alps and Himalayas over mere grass and valley flowers?

From all this it need not be concluded that I possessed an heroic nature. My enthusiasms and passions naturally took their bent from my education and environment. My father was an Austrian General, who had fought under "Father Radetzky" at Custozza, and therefore adored him. I listened untiringly to the unending stories of this campaign. My dear father actually pitied other men who had not had these proud and glorious experiences, and I always regretted that I, being a girl, would never have these magnificent opportunities; and, having heard some mention of the question of the equal rights of women, I felt sure that the only additional right I should ever keenly desire would be the right to go to war. How charmed I was with the story of Semiramis or Catherine II, when I read: "She made war upon this or that neighboring kingdom, or she conquered this or that people."

The history books are responsible for this warlike ideal of the young. That the God of Battles has constantly decreed wars stamps itself upon the mind from the first, and one early accepts the belief that war is necessary to regulate nations, and is almost a law of nature, like tornadoes and earthquakes, which from time to time cannot be avoided. History does not cover up the wickedness, the sorrow, the anguish of it all, but presents it as a part of the inevitable, bringing advantage to the nation, through the sacrifice of the happiness and life of the few. That there is no nobler death than that of the soldier martyr is the close and unanimous verdict of all our school histories and texts. Long lists of battles are given, and entrancing tales and poems of glory and heroism are told, for must not patriotism be taught, must not every boy grow to be a defender of his country? So he must be made a war-enthusiast early. His spirit must be hardened long before he questions through his natural sympathies why we inflict these horrors and sufferings upon others. Such doubts must be carefully repressed.

History as it is taught aims to warp the inborn, divine impulse to hate barbarism and inhumanity. The tale is so told as to belittle that part of the story which appeals to the sympathies.

And the same books, the same subjects, the same system, encouraging a like admiration for war and military heroics, are given to the girls—delightful pictures for the tender souls, who otherwise are taught that they must be gentle and mild. The frightful stories of carnage and rapine from Bible days, from Macedonian and Punic times down to the Thirty Years' War and Napoleon, repeat the horrors of the thing until the senses become callous. To read of cities burned and the people put to the sword with the victims trodden under foot was a keen enjoyment, and to heap one horror upon the other blunted the perceptions till war no longer could be regarded from the point of view of humanity, but was received as something quite special, mysterious, majestic, and sanctified.

The girls could readily see that war alone could give the highest honor and dignity, so they learn all the military and glorifying odes, and they become, like the Spartan mothers of old, the women who present battle-flags and regimental colors, and are the admired and happy belles during the ball season, when they receive the attentions of the brass-buttoned officers' corps.

As a child I had tutors and a governess at home, and was not reared in a convent, as was often the case with children of my position. My mother had died early, and the four children were watched over by an elderly aunt. We spent our winters in Vienna, and our summers on the estate in Lower Austria. Having a good memory and being ambitious, I was the delight of my teachers. Since I was denied the career of an heroic female warrior I made it my enthusiasm to extol all who had helped to make the world's history through war. I mastered the French and English languages perfectly. I learned all that was considered necessary for girls in natural history, physics, and astronomy, but in the reading of history I knew no limit. The ponderous records of wars and nations I fetched from my father's library and spent with them my leisure hours.

On March 10, 1857, I celebrated my seventeenth birthday. "Already seventeen," I set down under this date. This "already" was a bit of symbolism, and undoubtedly was meant to signify "and as yet I have done nothing immortal."

The Season was approaching, and it was arranged that I should be introduced into society, but the prospect did not fill me with the keenest pleasure. I felt that my aims were higher than ballroom conquests. I could not have explained to myself what were the triumphs for which I longed. I was hardly aware of the romantic attitude which possessed me I was full of glowing dreams and aspirations, such as swell the hearts of youths and maidens, and fill them with a longing to work out their ideals in all sorts of ways. It is at this age that the love of knowledge, action, travel, adventure, show themselves and are perhaps only an unrecognized activity of the soul filled with desire to express itself.

Aunt Marie was ordered to try the waters at Marienbad during the summer, and found it convenient to take me. My coming-out in society was not to take place till the following winter, and this trip to the fashionable springs gave me a little preliminary practice in dancing and conversation, so that I could wear off some of the shyness before my first season.

Naturally at my first ball I had no eyes for anything but the brilliant military uniforms which were present in such array. But of all the splendid Hussars, Count Arno Dotzky was the most dazzling, and with him I danced the cotillion and several waltzes.

The acquaintance quickly ripened into an attachment, and we were betrothed on my eighteenth birthday, after which I was presented at court.

CHAPTER II.

After our marriage we took an Italian journey, having been granted a long leave of absence. Retirement from the army was never mentioned between us. We both possessed handsome fortunes, but my husband loved the military services, and I was proud of my elegant Hussar, and looked forward to his certain promotion. He would rise unquestionably to the rank of major, colonel, or even general. Who knew but he might be even called to the highest rank, and add his name to the history of his country, great as a conqueror!

The little red book contains a break just at the happy honeymoon time, and that is a pity. Oh for a little breath of those happy days to come back to me from between the leaves, in which I had wasted so much ink recording odd peevishnesses and bad humors Still, my memory recalls those joys like an old half-forgotten fairy-tale. What could have been added to my overflowing heart?—for I had love, riches, rank, health, everything. My dashing Hussar, whom I loved with my whole soul, was a manly, noble-hearted man, with a most cultivated and merry nature. It might have been otherwise, for our acquaintance had been so short, and it was not our own discretion and wise choosing which brought us all this happiness. But the little red-bound book bore no entry for a long time.

Wait a moment! Here I find a joyous event noted—my delight at becoming a mother. A New Year's gift—a son was born to us, the 1st of January, 1859. The diary was resumed to note with pride and astonishment this all-absorbing event, as though we were the first to whom such a happiness had ever come. The journal teemed with comments on the mystical and sacred event. The future world had to be informed as to the marvel of "maternal love." It was mine to magnify the office of motherhood. Was it not the greatest theme of art and literature, of song and story?

I cultivated this ideal most carefully, collecting poems, baby songs and illustrations from journals and picture galleries. As in one direction school books foster and develop an admiration for war heroes, so through my collections I developed from hero worship to baby-worship. My charming little man was to me the mightiest wonder of the world. Ah, my son, my grown-up manly Rudolf, the love of you in my maturer years eclipsed in color the hours of childish wonder and worship. The love of my young motherhood is insignificant in comparison to what I feel for you to-day even as is the babe himself in swaddlings beside the full-grown man.

How proud the father was of his tiny heir, as he planned for him the sunniest, fairest future. "What shall he be?" This was the great question that we discussed as we hung over the cradle together, and we always decided unanimously—a soldier, of course. Sometimes the mother would protest; "Suppose he should be killed in battle?" "Nonsense," the father would answer; "at the appointed time each one meets his end." Besides, Rudi was not to be the only son, but being the first he must be what his father and grandfather were, the noblest of all—a soldier So it was settled, and so the joke was persisted in, and on his third-month birthday he was promoted to the rank of a corporal.

On that same day a great foreboding came over me, something that made me fly with a heavy heart to my little note-book. Dark clouds had arisen in the political horizon, and the fears and suspicions were daily growing into comments wherever people met together.

"Trouble in Italy is brewing" was the frequent remark. I had no time now for heroics and politics, so I hardly touched me. But on the 1st of April Arno said to me:

"Do you know, darling, it will soon break out?"

"What will break out?"

"The war with Sardinia."

I was terrified. "My God, that will be terrible. And must you go?"

"I hope so."

"How can you say that? Hope to leave your wife and baby?"

"When duty calls."

"Of course we can reconcile ourselves—but to hope—which means desire—to wish for such a bitter duty—"

"Bitter? Why, a jolly, dashing war like that would be glorious! You are a soldier's wife, never forget that."

I threw myself into his arms.

"Oh my darling husband. I can be content, and brave besides. How often I have envied the heroes of history and longed to be one of its heroines. What a glorious feeling it must be to go into battle! If I could only be at your side, fight, conquer, or even fall!"

"Such nonsense, little wife; but brave you are. Your place is here by the cradle of our little one, whom you must raise to be some day a defender of his country. Women must keep the fireside warm. It is to save our homes and wives from the attacks of the enemy and secure peace, that we men must go to war."

Why, I do not know, but these words, or similar ones which I had so often read with enthusiasm, this time struck me as mere shallow phrases. Where was the advancing army—were the barbarous hordes at the door? A political tension between the Cabinets of two nations seemed an intangible enemy. What was the pressing need of protecting wife and child and home? Much as my husband spoke enthusiastically of going to war for that, I failed to see it. Was it a mere burning desire to rush into adventure, with a promise of excitement, promotion, and distinction? "Yet," I concluded, "it is a noble, honorable ambition to delight in the brave discharge of duty."

I poured out my feelings into the little note-book, denouncing Louis Napoleon as an intriguer. . . Austria cannot long look on. . . War must come. . . No, Sardinia will soon give in, and peace be maintained. Thus I commented on the course of events. My husband's eyes sparkled at the continued increase of the danger.

My father also gloried in the prospect, and retold the stories of the Radetzky campaigns, and discussed the impending ones, as to how the enemy would be easily routed, and all the advantages which would be "ours." Of the terrible sacrifices nothing was said. I was made to feel quite ashamed of my meanness when I found myself thinking thus: "Ah, how can any victory recompense the dead, the crippled, the widowed? How would it be if the enemy conquered?"

I was contemptuously crushed by my military friends if I ventured such a remark. Was it not most unpatriotic to have the shadow of a doubt about our certain victory? Is not the duty of a soldier to feel himself invincible, and must not a soldier's wife share this conviction with him?

My husband's regiment was quartered in Vienna. The view of the Prater from my window promised a wonderful spring. The air was warm and delicious with violets, the sprouting buds seemed earlier than in years before. How joyfully I might have looked forward to the coming weeks of delightful driving, for we had purchased a fine carriage and a four-in-hand team of dashing Hungarian horses—but oh, if only the war-clouds had not hung over all that!

Coming home from a parade on the morning of April 19, my husband broke the spell with the exclamation: "Thank God, at last this uncertainty is at an end. The ultimatum has been sent."

"And what does that mean?" I trembled.

"It means that the last word of the diplomats has been uttered—the last word that precedes the declaration of war. Sardinia is called to disarm. This she'll not do, and we will march over the border."

"Good God! Perhaps she may disarm."

"Then that would end the quarrel."

I fell on my knees. Silently and fervently a prayer cried out in my soul: "Peace, peace!"

"My silly child, what are you doing?" said Arno, raising me. The news had shaken my nerves, and I began to cry.

"Martha, Martha, you make me angry. How can you forget that you are a general's daughter, a first lieutenant's wife, and," he concluded with a smile, "the mother of a corporal?"

"No, no," I faltered; "I scarcely understand myself. . . . I used to thirst for military glory, but now, when I think that on a single 'yes' or 'no' thousands may bleed and die—die in these beautiful days of spring—it came over me that the word 'Peace' must be pronounced, that we must all pray for it, and I fell on my knees."

"To inform the good Lord of the condition of affairs, you dear little goose."

The house-door bell rang. I dried my eyes. My father came in with a rush. "My children," he cried out of breath, "have you heard the great news—the ultimatum?"

"I have just told it to my wife."

"Tell me, father dear," I asked anxiously, "can the war be prevented by the ultimatum?"

"I never heard of an ultimatum preventing a war."

"But, papa, you speak as if war were already declared, and you were glad of it. Oh, if Arno must also go!"

"That he will, and I envy him."

"But think of my terror at his danger!"

"Danger, what of that? Many a man comes home from war. Look at my campaigns, my wounds, and yet I am alive, for I was not destined to die."

"Such fatalistic notions!

"And if my regiment should not be ordered out——" began Arno.

I exclaimed joyously, "Oh, would that be possible?"

"In that case I shall apply for an exchange."

"That can easily be settled," my father assured him. "A good friend of mine, Hess, commands the corps."

Admiring both husband and father—yet anxiety sickened my heart. But I must control myself. Was not my husband a hero? And I sprang up and exclaimed, "Arno, I am proud of you."

Kissing my hands, he turned to my father. "Father-in-law, I am glad that you have trained your daughter to be a brave soldier's wife."

Turin, April 26.—The ultimatum is rejected. The die is cast. War is declared.

CHAPTER III.

The news was a bitter blow to me, and threw me into despair, although I had been prepared for the catastrophe. Arno tried to comfort me.

"My darling, take courage. Things are not so bad and will soon be over. Then we shall be doubly happy. You will break my heart with your weeping, and make me sorry that I engaged to go. But think, if I remained at home and my comrades went, you would be ashamed of me. I must pass the baptism of fire to feel myself a man and a soldier. Only think how happy you will be to see a third star on my collar, or perhaps even the cross on my breast."

I leaned on his shoulder and wept the more. Empty stars and crosses were but poor pay for the terrible possibility that a ball might shatter that beloved breast. Arno gently relieved himself from my embrace, saying:—

"Now, dear child, I must go to the Colonel. Have your little cry, and be brave and cheerful when I return. In this hard hour my dear little wife should not dishearten and discourage me. Good-bye, sweetheart.

His last words helped me to collect myself. Yes, I must not damp his courage, I must inspire his sense of duty. We women must prove our patriotism by our sympathy, and must urge our soldiers to fame on the battle-field.

"Battle-field"—strange how this word suddenly carried its radically different meanings to my mind. First it appealed historically, gloriously, pathetically; then again I shuddered as at some loathsome, bloody, brutal, repulsive thing. I saw the poor creatures hurried to the field, stricken, and lying there with gaping, bleeding wounds, and among them, perhaps!—oh horrible thought!—and a loud cry escaped my lips at the frightful picture.

Betty, my maid, rushed in. "In heaven's name, madam, what has happened?"

I looked at the girl. Her eyes, too, were red with weeping. I remembered her lover was a soldier, and I could have pressed her to my heart as a sister in mutual sorrow.

"It is nothing, child, for they surely all come back again."

"Not all of them, dear lady," she said, the tears starting afresh.

Aunt Marie came in just then and Betty disappeared.

"Martha, dear, I came to comfort you," said she, "and help you to resign yourself in this trouble."

"So you know it?"

"The whole city knows it, and great joy is felt, for the war is very popular."

"Joy, Aunt Marie?" I exclaimed.

"Certainly. Wherever the family is not touched there is great rejoicing. But I knew you would be in distress, and therefore I hurried to you. Your father will come soon, not to comfort but to congratulate you. He is beside himself with delight and thinks the prospect for Arno is a rare one. And he is right, for is not war the best thing in the world for a soldier? And you must see it so, my dear. What must be——"

"Yes, you are right, Aunt. I know: the inevitable——"

"What is the will of God——" rejoined my aunt.

And I concluded: "Must be borne with resignation."

"Bravo, dear Martha, Providence has determined. Providence is all-wise. For each one the hour of death is settled as is the hour of birth, and we can pray fervently for our dear soldiers."

I did not analyze the contradiction that one might pray to avoid a death that is predetermined. I had been taught not to reason on such matters, and my aunt would have been quite shocked if I had voiced any such scruples. "Never argue about it" is the commandment in matters of faith. Not to question and not to think was much more convenient and comfortable, so I accepted the suggestion that we should pray, and during the absence of my husband I certainly would pray for the protection of Heaven, and earnestly beg that the bullets might be turned from the breast of my Arno. Diverted, but whither? To the breast of another for whom some praying women also pleaded? And had not my teachers in physics drilled me in the law of infallible consequences, of motion and substance? The whole bewildering, tormenting question. . . away with it! I will not think.

"Yes, dear Aunt," I roused myself to say, "we will pray diligently, and God must hear us. Arno will return to us unhurt and happy."

"You dear child, see how your soul flies to religion in the dark hours. Perhaps God himself sent this trial to renew your faith."

Again this did not strike me as clear. How could God have sent this great complication, dating from the Crimean War, that Sardinia and Austria should break out into grim war for the simple purpose of testing my lukewarm faith? Was my aunt's piety so deep and mine so shallow, that I should be tempted thus to doubt? To attach the name of God to any statement of cause rather consecrates the matter, and it is not respectful to doubt. My father and husband were both quite indifferent to religious matters, and my reasoning nature found mere dogmas hard to accept. I had gone regularly to Sunday mass, and once a year to confession, and at such hours I was honestly devout as a matter of etiquette with the same correctness as I should have curtsied, if introduced to the Empress. The chaplain himself could not have reproached me, but my aunt's accusation seemed perhaps justifiable.

"Ah, my child," my aunt continued, "in times of happiness and prosperity we are apt to forget our heavenly home, but when sorrow and sickness, fear and death come in upon us, or if those we adore are stricken, then——"

In this style she would have continued, had not the door been thrown open and my father rushed in, exclaiming:—

"Hurrah, everything is decided. The Italian dogs wanted their whipping, and they shall have it, they shall have it!"

War was declared. All was excitement. People seem to forget that two sets of men are voluntarily thrown at each other's throats upon the assumption that there is a mighty third power which irresistibly forces them to fight. The whole responsibility is thrown upon this mysterious element, which regulates the ordained fate of the nations. (At this period of my life I felt no trace of a revolt against war as a system. Because my beloved husband was forced to go and I to remain—this alone was my anguish.)

I consoled myself with all my old convictions that the highest duty of a soldier was to be ready for service. History made it laudable to desire honor and glory through patriotic devotion. It was a peculiarly elevating thought that I was living in a most thrilling epoch. Had not my life been given a share in one of the great events of history?

Nothing was being talked of but the war. The newspapers were full of it. Prayers were said in all the churches for the success of the army. Everywhere were the same excited faces, the same eager talk. Business, pleasure, literature, art, everything was secondary, insignificant, while the scenes of this great drama were being played on the world's arena. We read the proclamations, so confident of victory; we watched the troops march through with glitter and clash of arms, and battle-flags waving; leading articles and glowing speeches were filled with patriotic ardor, appealing to honor, duty, courage self-sacrifice.

Assurances were made on both sides to the people, that their nation was known to be the most invincible, each had the only just cause, each had the noblest and most heroic cause to defend. Thus were the people filled with enthusiasm, and the conviction that war was the most glorious, necessary, and ennobling thing.

Every one was encouraged to think that he was a great citizen of a great state for which he must be willing to sacrifice himself. Evils of war were merely regarded as a necessary adjunct, and always "the enemy" alone was found guilty of the evil passions, and the brawling, rapine, hatred, cruelty, and all the other iniquities attached to warfare. Consequently we were doing the world a noble service in punishing these wretched Italians—this lazy, sensual, upstart nation. And Louis Napoleon, with his consuming ambition, what an intriguer! It was with a storm of indignation that Vienna received the proclamation: "Italy free to the Adriatic."

I uttered slight doubts whether it was so ignoble of Italy to wish to be free, but I was rudely reminded that our enemies were scoundrels. In my study of history I had usually found the writers sympathetic with the struggling nation fighting to throw off a foreign yoke and gain its independence. I felt that Italy was playing this part in the drama before our eyes but I was quickly and scowlingly given to understand that our government—that is, the nation to which we happened to belong—could never oppress, but only confer prosperity upon another people, and when they sought to break away from us they were "rebels," that our control could be no yoke, for were we not always and only and fully in the right?

In early May Arno's regiment was ordered to march. They had to leave at seven in the morning. Ah, the night before—that terrible night!

Arno slept. He breathed quietly with tranquil happiness upon his features. I set a candle behind the screen, for the darkness frightened me and sleep was impossible. I lay quietly beside him, leaning on an elbow and looking into his beloved face.

I wept and reviewed the cruel fate which was separating us. How could I bear it? Would a merciful Father let us soon have peace? Why could there not be peace always? I pictured him wounded, lying on the damp ground, and all the agonies that would be mine should he never return. I could have screamed and thrown my arms about him, but no, he must sleep that he should be better ready for duty in the morning. I was worn out with my despair, the clock ticked meaninglessly, the candle flickered low, and I slipped into unconsciousness and dropped on to my pillow in sleep. Over and over again I started in my sleep, my heart palpitating with fear and alarm, and when I thus waked for the tenth or twelfth time, it was day, the candle had gone out, and there came a loud knock at the door.

"Six o'clock, lieutenant," said the orderly who came to rouse his master in good time.

The hour had come, the dreaded farewell was to be said; I was not to go to the station, but in our own room the sad parting was to take place, for I knew that my agony would overcome me. As Arno dressed he made all sorts of comforting speeches:—

"Be brave, my Martha. In two months we will be together again, and all will be over. Many come back from wars—look at your own father. Did you marry a Hussar to keep him at home, to raise hyacinths for you? I will write you lively letters of the whole campaign. My own cheerfulness is a good omen, and I am only out to win my spurs. Take care of yourself and the darling Rudolf. My promotions are for him too. How he will love to hear his father tell of the glorious victory over Italy in which he took part!"

I listened to him and felt that perhaps my unhappiness was all selfishness. I would be strong and take courage.

Again a knock at the door.

"I am quite ready; coming directly." And he spread his arms. "Now, Martha, my wife, my love!" I rushed to him speechless; the farewell refused to pass my lips, and it was he who spoke the heart-breaking word:

"Good-bye, my all, my love, good-bye!" he convulsively sobbed, covering his face. This was too much, and I felt my mind going.

"Arno! Arno!" I screamed, wrapping my arms about him. "Stay! Stay!" I persistently called, "Stay, stay!"

"Lieutenant!" we heard outside, "it is quite time."

One last kiss—and he rushed out.

Defeat is sometimes a good thing for the fellow who can learn from it how to win a bigger victory next time.

There may come a time when the nation that goes to war will be arrested for disorderly conduct by the international police.

Live Bat Found n Stone Wall

(Guelph Herald)

Anyone who knows anything about bats or has had anything to do with these creatures realizes that they are very hard to kill, and that they will stand a lot of abuse. It is also known that they will live for long periods of time without food, and as soon as they are released will soon become active again. The latter was verified in a most peculiar manner in this city on Tuesday. While some alterations were being made at St. James' Church it became necessary to make a hole in the stone wall of the church beneath the ground, the work being done by Mr. J. Benallick. Whilst one of the masons were taking out some stones he was surprised to find a bat imbedded in the wall, which was 20 inches thick. It was covered with limestone and mortar, and the man naturally thought the bat was dead, but when he picked it up it felt warm and it was breathing. Mr. Art Hicks tok charge of it, and put it in a box and later took it home with him. He put a glass over the box with a space left for air, and decided to watch it. During the night, however, the bat got out of the box and began to fly around the house. Mr. Hicks got up, turned on the light and endeavored to capture it, but it got out of the window, and he thought that was the last of the bat, and nothing more was thought of it. This morning, however, when a member of the household went to shake a mat which was on the doorstep the bat was found clinging to it, and it was killed and put into the stove, much to Mr. Hicks' regret. He says the bat was quite fat when found, but that it was very weak and could not have lived much longer.

The question is how long has the bat been in the stone wall and how did it get there in the first place. There are no windows or other openings near where it was found, and the wall was erected twenty-three years ago. It is another mystery which probably cannot be explained.

SUBMARINE GOES DOWN HER CREW CAPTURED

PARIS, March 5.—Special—The German submarine U-8 has been sunk by destroyers belonging to the Dover flotilla, according to announcement by the Ministry of Marine to-night. The crew were taken prisoners.

The submarine U-8 was built in 1908, and was a vessel of 300 tons displacement. She had a speed of 13 knots above water and eight knots submerged. Her maximum radius of operations was 1,200 miles. The vessel carried three torpedo tubes. Her complement was 12 men.

The U.-8 was a sister of the famous U.-9, which early in the war sank the British cruisers Hogue, Abourkir and Cressy in the North Sea, and in October sent the British cruiser Hawk to the bottom. Wreckage picked up late in Februray off Christiansand was said to belong to the U-9, and it was rumored that the submarine had been lost.

Czarevitch of Russia In Military Uniform.

© 1914, by American Press Association.

Here is the latest picture of Grand Duke Alexis of Russia; the czarevitch he is called. The title czarevitch means the same as crown prince in English and means that the boy is heir to the throne of Russia. Alexis is just past ten years of age and, of course, is too young to go to the war, although his latest photograph shows him clothed in military uniform. The grand duke has English blood in his veins, his mother being a daughter of Princess Alice of England. Alexis has four sisters, all of them older than himself, he being the baby of the family. As the photo shows, he is a handsome little fellow, but his health has never been robust.

Boy Scouts Patrol Sea Coast.

There are 250,000 boy scouts in England. Before war was declared 50,000 were mobilized. They have been at their duties ever since.

From the first day of danger seventy troops of sea scouts began coast patrol which will be permanent until the declaration of peace.

Today 1,300 sea scouts are stationed from John o' Groat's to Dover keeping watch and ward along the east coast. They are only boys, but they watch the North sea through daylight and dark.

Their job is to do their duty, to keep their mouths shut and their eyes open. They have won official recognition, the admiralty paying for their subsistence while they serve as volunteers.

Each patrol of six sea scouts is living with two coast guards in any handy shelter. Tents, boathouses and shacks furnish emergency stations. Off duty patrols are building themselves winter huts, the handy "men" fashioning sleeping boards, lockers and mess tables. The sea scouts cook for themselves.

A Trick With a Watch.

Borrow a watch from any person in the company and request the company to stand around you. Hold the watch up to the ear of the first in the circle and command it to go. Then demand his testimony to the fact. Remove it to the ear of the next and enjoin it to stop. Make the same request of that party, and so on through the entire party.

Explanation.—You must take care in borrowing the watch that it be a good one and goes well. Have concealed in your hand a piece of loadstone, which as soon as you apply it to the watch will occasion suspension of its movements, which a subsequent shaking and withdrawing of the magnet will restore.

Charming Wife of the New Ambassador to France.

MRS. WILLIAM G. SHARP.

As wife of the American representative in France Mrs. Myron T. Herrick, endeared herself to the French by her kindness to the wounded and the needy. Her husband has been succeeded as ambassador by Mr. William Graves Sharp of Ohio, whose wife, so far as the Parisians are concerned, is an unknown quantity.

However, Mrs. Sharp is well known in Washington, where her husband spent a number of years as a member of congress. She is a charming and cultured woman, a member of many of the leading women's clubs in her home town of Elyria, O., progressive in her ideas and with a decided interest in art and science.

Mrs. Sharp was before her marriage Miss Hallie Clough. She is descended from a brother of Nathan Hale and is a member of the Daughters of the American Revolution. As an artist she won praise before she married. Her family has engrossed her time to the exclusion of art since then. She is the mother of five children, all of them of the school age. She has put these into good schools to continue their studies while she is abroad. Her eldest daughter, who is in Oberlin college, has talent as a musician.

Mountain Lakes.

The Uinta mountains of Utah, included within the Wasatch, Uinta and Ashley national forests, should become a favorite recreation region because of the many small lakes within depressions scooped out by glacial drifts. Seventy such lakes can be counted from Reid's peak, and one particular township, thirty-six miles square, contains more than 100.—Argonaut.

Humid Rhine Valley.

The climate of the Rhine valley is warmer than in most other parts of Germany and is consequently more favorable than any other regions for the cultivation of tobacco, grapes and corn. The humidity of the valley is excessive, sunshine is quite limited, and the annual precipitation ranges from twenty-four to thirty-two inches.

A Woman's Wit

By EDITH V. ROSS

It was on a bright morning in December that Mrs. Garland decided to send her little boy to the sidewalk to get the fresh air. She put on his overcoat and his toque and his gloves and took him out on to the stoop. Then, giving him a kiss, she told him to run about for awhile. Jimmie was six years old, and his mother, who was a self reliant woman, had discharged his nurse.

Jimmie did not return, and his mother went out to look for him. He was not on the stoop or on the sidewalk. Indeed, he was not in sight. His mother walked hurriedly up and down the street, expecting every moment to catch sight of him, but she did not. Finally she asked some children playing near by, and they told her that they had seen a little boy—describing Jimmie—go off with a man.

Then Mrs. Garland knew that her boy had been kidnaped. By a strong effort of the will she kept her head and questioned the children closely as to the appearance of the man. They described a small, poorly dressed person, his trousers patched and his elbows in rags. His hair was what they called brown. This is all they could remember.

Mrs. Garland, though in agony about her boy, being an unusually self contained woman, very soon brought herself into a condition to think what she should do. When a child is kidnaped it is usually for money. The parent is informed of the fact and negotiations opened for payment. Mrs. Garland, who was a widow, made up her mind to await the kidnaper's demand before taking any action.

And yet one can never be certain when a child has disappeared that he will ever be heard from. There are many disappearances that remain forever mysteries. It is therefore the more remarkable that this mother should have contained herself and acted in a way that would afford the greatest number of chances for getting her boy safely back. She reasoned that if the boy's loss were published in the newspapers the kidnaper would read it and, taking fright, might remove her boy to a distance. If no notice were taken of the matter he would write.

On the third day after the kidnaping the postman handed in a letter which as soon as Mrs. Garland looked at it she knew was the one expected. It was addressed simply to the street and number and written in English as an Italian would write English. The kidnaper demanded $5,000 for the return of the child. An Italian name was signed, the writer stating that a reply could be sent to the general delivery at the postoffice, but whoever called for it would have nothing to do with the case.

Mrs. Garland determined, if possible, to win the confidence of the kidnaper. So she replied that her only wish was to recover her child. She could raise but $3,000, which she would be glad to give if the person would instruct her where to make the delivery. She also said that she had not reported her loss to the police and had no intention of doing so. She preferred to pay and recover her boy.

The kidnaper wrote that he would accept the $3,000. On a certain avenue between two streets was a vacant lot. At or near 11 o'clock on a certain night Mrs. Garland was to leave the money in a cracker box she would find in a corner farthest from the street. Within two days after the receipt of the money the boy would be placed on the street near his home. Mrs. Garland wrote back that the conditions were accepted, except that her boy was to be returned within twelve hours after the depositing of the funds. A letter came agreeing to this stipulation.

Now, on this last letter Mrs. Garland noticed a stamp that had evidently been placed on another envelope and removed. The stamp was soiled, indicating that some one with dirty hands had endeavored to make it stick. Mrs. Garland took up a magnifying glass and discovered thumb marks.

Thus far no notice of the kidnaping had appeared in any newspaper, and the police were ignorant of Mrs. Garland's loss. On the appointed night she went to the vacant lot and deposited bills to the amount of $3,000. The next morning at dawn there was a sharp ring at the doorbell. Mrs. Garland ran downstairs and opened the door, and there stood Jimmie. He said he had been left there by a girl.

Having got her child back safe and well, Mrs. Garland went to the office of the police and informed them of the case, stating that she had obtained from United States treasury officers $3,000 in captured counterfeit ten and twenty dollar bills. Since they had been paid to an ignorant Italian he would not likely know that they were counterfeit and he might be caught trying to pass them. Instructions bearing on the case were sent out, and a girl was spotted offering one of the bills. She was followed to a squalid room in a tenement building, and every one found there was arrested. All but a few of the counterfeit bills were taken, and a man arrested was found to be the kidnaper. The children who had seen him take Jimmie away were not able to state positively that he was the person they had seen committing the act, but his thumb marks corresponded with those on the stamp of the letter sent Mrs. Garland, and he received a long prison term.

Mrs. Schall Managed Her Blind Husband's Campaign.

MRS. THOMAS D. SCHALL.

One of the most interesting figures now in the public eye is the wife of the Hon. Thomas D. Schall, recently elected to congress from Minnesota. Like Senator Gore of Oklahoma, he is quite blind and depends entirely on the assistance of his wife to carry on his public work. The lady is not only eyes to him in his legal work in Minneapolis, where he is a successful lawyer, but she acted as private secretary and campaign manager when he appealed to the voters for election.

The Schalls have been married for twelve years. Mrs. Schall frankly admits being thirty-five years old, two years her husband's junior. They first met when both were students at the University of Minnesota, where Mr. Schall won honors as an intercollegiate debater. He is said to be one of the finest speakers before the Minnesota bar. His blindness is due to an accident which occurred seven years ago.

Many persons surmised that this accident would end his public career, but so ably did his devoted and brilliant wife come to his assistance that he has been able to carry on his law practice with success and score a signal triumph in a hot political campaign.

Mrs. Schall is described as a charming as well as clever and cultivated woman, who will be a distinct acquisition to Washington's official society. Her husband's term, unless a special session of the Sixty-fourth congress should be called after the expiration of the present congress next March, will not begin until December, 1915.

OXO CUBES

within sound of the guns

How OXO CUBES helped Princess Patricia's Regiment to make their Christmas dinner

An interesting letter from a sergeant in the above regiment:—

"At last we are where we wanted to be, and are contented with our little lot. We had a fairly good Christmas dinner, which consisted of bully beef and biscuits, and whatever we could forage. My friend and myself did not do so badly, as we had one carrot, one-half turnip, two leeks, one onion, TWO OXO CUBES and twelve ounces of bully beef, with three hard biscuits, all mixed up and boiled in a beef tin.

"To-day we had our Christmas pudding, one-half pound to a man, one pound tin of jam between four men, and a small bottle of wine, also between four men.

"We are all in good spirits, and also within sound of big guns."

[Reprinted from the "Montreal Gazette", Jan. 7, 1915.]

Winter weather is OXO CUBE weather. What could be more invigorating and sustaining than a steaming, delicious cup of OXO, which gives that rich, strengthening beef-nourishment the body needs to withstand cold and fatigue?

OXO CUBES beat all the old ideas for food-quickness. Simply drop an OXO CUBE into a cup of hot water—stir—and it's ready.

Ancient Concrete.

That the Romans were very familiar with concrete and gave consideration to its use examination of the concrete work in the forum clearly shows. Their concrete contained generally only two kinds of stone, travertine and selcie, in equal parts. Selcie is a hard, closely knit rock, very similar to our bluestone or trap rock in color as well as quality. Travertine is a volcanic rock not so hard as selcie, considerably lighter in color, and was desirable on account of its porosity, which insured a good bond with the cement. In all the Roman work the combination of the travertine and the selcie is clearly distinguishable.

The Biggest Cracker.

The "kasabi" torta (we get our word "tart" from torta) of Hispanic-America is the biggest regularly made cracker on earth. It is made from the kasabi root and lightly fried in cakes about the size of a small parasol.

A cracker for a hat—such indeed is sometimes the use made by the Latin peons of the kasabi torta when needing a temporary sunshade (sombrero). The torta is always made bowl shaped so it can be balanced on the head without any particular effort—and provided no wind interferes. Rain, however, quickly soaks and collapses this remarkable and useful edible headgear.—London Express.

THE LOVE OF GOLD.

Men pursue riches under the idea that their possession will set them at ease and above the world. But the law of association often makes those who begin by loving gold as a servant finish by becoming themselves its slaves, and independence without wealth is at least as common as wealth without independence.—Colton.

She Settles It.

Convinced.

"What do you know about the constitution? I'll bet you can't repeat the opening clause."

"I can too: 'We, the people of the United States, being of sound mind and disposing will' "—

"That will do," interrupted the other man. "I didn't think you knew it, old top."—Puck.

Postage Reduced.

Arrangements have been made whereby the ordinary rate of two cents per ounce, applicable to all letters sent from Canada to the United Kingdom, will apply to letters addressed to British and Canadian troops on the continent.

The rate on ordinary letters from Canada for the continent is five cents for the first ounce and three cents for each subsequent ounce, so that this extension of the two-cent an ounce rate to letters addressed to our soldiers on the continent is a decided reduction in favor of correspondence going to the soldiers.

A Certain Rich Man's Son

How He Worked Out His Own Reform.

By GUY C. BAKER

Copyright by Frank A. Munsey Co.

"I mean just what I said—I'm not ready to go to work."

There were unlimited complacency and assurance in Hilling's voice as he said it.

"Then what—what do you want to do?"

"I want to run around a bit, you know, and see what's going on in the world."

"See the world! Why, good heavens, from reports I've had of your college career there's nothing left for you to see or do!"

"Plenty of time for drudgery and all that sort of thing later, dad. I want to knock about a bit like the other fellows I know."

"By thunder, you shall do as you wish! Pack your gewgaws and go—I don't give a tarnal rap where—but go! Go and see the world—all of it, every stratum of it. I'll pay the freight—every penny. But this is the condition—you've got to stay away five years! You are not to write home, nor shall any one from home write to you. You will draw upon my New York banker for your needs. I—but that's all—there is no need for further discussion."

Young Hilling stared with mild surprise at the broad shoulders of his father for a moment; then, the exasperating look of superciliousness returning, he arose languidly to his feet.

"Aw—er—I say, dad, isn't that—er—just a trifle strong?"

The older man did not look around.

"No; not a bit of it! Scoot!"

For a moment the mask of insolence fell away from the young man's face, and the natural strength of his features stood out strikingly.

"All right, sir; you're on! The five years begin today. Goodby, dad."

As he swung jauntily down the street of the prosperous southern town—a town that had seemed a good place in which to live before his eight years of college life—he became suddenly conscious of a feeling of uneasiness as he thought of the gentle mother, who but a few hours before had thrown her arms about him in a joyous welcome home. Many months passed before a realization filtered through his brain of how inconsiderate was her disillusionment.

When a couple of hours later Hilling boarded the train for the north he carried with him the disturbing picture of his mother's disappointment and solicitude. To him she had ever been the diplomatic buffer between the acerbity of his father and his own self willed follies. But he realized this last—this five years' silent absence—was too much for even her philosophy of indulgence.

But, whatever of remorse his precipitate departure caused him, it was of short duration.

He went abroad and for a time reveled in the glitter of the cafes of Paris. He idled precious hours in Italy. He barely escaped a duel in Berlin.

Then, after a month of stupid boredom in London, he hastened back to New York.

Thus two years passed.

Not once had he heard from either his father or mother. Not once had he written home. Once or twice his submerged manliness threatened to break through the veneer of his pleasure seeking existence—some eddy of memory which brought a fleeting recollection of that last glimpse of his mother—but always would he brush it stubbornly aside and plunge with increased abandon into the whirlpool of folly.

Then one evening, after an exceptionally strenuous day, he arrived at the theater during the third act just as a prima donna of worldwide fame was rendering her finest number.

Hilling stood at the head of the aisle for a moment, carelessly sweeping the audience filled theater with his glance; then, with a scornful shrug, he turned and strolled down into the smoking room.

The singer finished, and a tremendous outburst of applause filled the theater and echoed out into the corridors. Again and again the singer responded to the encores.

Curiously, Hilling wandered back into the foyer and once more took up his position at the back of the theater and watched the audience. Bowing and smiling, the prima donna was approaching the footlights for her fifth encore.

Hilling watched with patient antipathy. He fidgeted nervously, his forehead drawn in a scowl and his lips curled with unbounded sarcasm.

Then in notes low and tremulous the singer began the line, "Far from the old folks at home." At the same moment, with the startling suddenness of a crash of thunder, the audience was electrified to hear a man's voice—discordant, raucous, scoffing—join in the song with the prima donna.

Then, with a scornful laugh, Hilling permitted himself to be led away by a couple of pale faced, agitated ushers.

Out in the lobby he impatiently shook himself free of the ushers and imperturbably passed out and stepped into his motorcar. As the chauffeur threw on the power and the machine glided swiftly away Hilling flung back at the unchecked group of theater attaches the words of the song with taunting mockery.

When, at 4 in the morning, his valet admitted him to his apartments Hilling had worked himself into a frenzy. He seemed obsessed with the notion that the valet in some ingenious way was responsible for the hideous words of that song and treated him accordingly.

He tossed sleeplessly until daylight, the words of the song pounding his eardrums unceasingly. Gradually the whole line blended into one word—home.

"Confound that infernal, asinine word!"

Irascibly he got up and dressed, sent for his automobile, dismissed the chauffeur and all that day motored alone over quiet country roads that led through peaceful villages and over picturesque hills.

One moment he would viciously shift the throttle wide open, sending the car hurtling along at a reckless pace; then, coming a quick change of mood, he would slow down sharply, lean back against the cushions and gaze thoughtfully over the peaceful fields as his machine chugged slowly along.

The sarcasm and mockery were still in his face, but there was also something else creeping in there—lines which bespoke torment and raging conflict.

That night as the prima donna appeared again in the famous third act scene Hilling, pale and tense, sat alone in the deep shadows of a box. With eyes that burned with strange emotion and perfect sobriety he leaned eagerly forward as if his soul were drinking in the melody through eyes and ears.

Again was the singer recalled repeatedly. As she appeared for the fifth encore and the orchestra had started in on a lively prelude to some Scotch air Hilling, his voice strangely hoarse and shaken, called out, "Suwanee River!"

Instantly the call was taken up enthusiastically all over the house. A wave of applause shook the theater. With a smile the prima donna nodded to the orchestra leader, and a moment later the rich, clear voice of the singer was glorifying the old folks at home.

Hilling was as tense and motionless as a man of stone. Perspiration dampened his forehead; his dry lips stood apart; wide eyed, he clinched his nails into his hands. His very soul seemed a thing detached that floated upward with the melody of the song.

With indescribable pathos and expression, her voice low and trembling, the singer paused; then "Far from the old folks at home" floated out and upward like a benediction. It was grand, dramatic, glorious!

Something like a sob surged up into Hilling's throat. His eyes blurred.

The following morning early he discharged his valet and chauffeur, sold his machine, resigned from his club, gave up his apartments and packed his trunk. Then, his passing as unobtrusive as his advent had been vainglorious, he dropped completely out of sight.

Two years later and four years after the stormy scene with his father Richard Hilling again crossed the threshold of that grim gentleman's office.

Inside the door he waited respectfully while the stern faced, gray haired head of the great steel works finished the signing of certain papers before him on his flat mahogany desk.

Pausing, pen suspended, the elder Hilling glanced up briskly.

"Well?"

"I wish to speak to you on behalf of the men, sir."

The other gave a start and leaned forward. "You—why—Richard—why"—

He could say no more. For a time he stared into the marvelously changed face in silence. Slowly his appraising glance traveled downward, taking in every detail of the son's clothing and lingering wonderingly on the big, grimy hands. Again he spoke—hoarsely.

"What does the condition of my employees matter to you?"

"A great deal. I am one of them, and I find they are underpaid."

"One of them?" Skepticism and astonishment gave varying inflections to his tone of voice. "One of them? What do you mean by that?"

"Just that. For two full years I have worked out there in the shops. I began at the very bottom. I know whereof I speak."

Again the father surveyed the son in silence, searching his face long and critically. Slowly a look of conviction crept into his face, softening it and paving the way for one of great hope and gratification. Then, smiling, he puffed out his lips in mild reproof.

"Then—er—you did not observe my orders to remain away five years."

"I—I did not come to discuss—that."

The father persisted eagerly.

"But I want to know; I want to know."

"I obeyed you for two years, sir, and that was two years too long. You see, mother and—and home called me—strongly. Mother and home and—work."

"And does mother"—

"Yes, she knows—has known all the time." Then firmly, "But I wish to take up this matter of the workmen."

"Yes—yes, to be sure. But first tell me—did you—have you actually been working out there in the shops as a common laborer for two years?"

Silently the son spread out his blackened, hardened hands in mute answer.

For a time father and son looked each into the other's face. Then, his face inscrutable, the elder Hilling said:

"And—and—you think that reforms are needed—out there?"

The answer came forcibly.

"Yes, sir, I do."

"Then make them—it's your job—now."

BANFF IN THE ROCKIES MAY BOAST OF HAVING ONE OF THE FINEST GOLF COURSES IN AMERICA

THE golfing season for Canada is fast approaching, and in a very few weeks the greensmen will be busily engaged in preparing temporary greens for use until the grass has had a chance to recover its exuberance after lying dormant through the winter months. Golf is becoming more popular than ever throughout the Dominion and this is realised by the Canadian Pacific, whose officials are continually endeavoring to meet the wants of the tourists. With this object in view golf courses have been laid out in connection with some of the hotels belonging to the system, and the links at St. Andrews, N. B., and at Banff, Alta., rank among the most popular in North America. At St. Andrews there are two courses, one of eighteen holes and one of nine, the former being second only, in the opinion of prominent golfers, to the links of the Royal and Ancient Golf Club of St. Andrews, Scotland, where the game was, according to tradition, first played. The golf course at St. Andrews, along the line of the Canadian Pacific, is noted for its long holes and interesting bunkers, there being only three under two hundred yards, the remainder ranging from three to five hundred yards long, which, naturally, allows the player to make free use of his brassy for long driving. The Banff course is famous for its magnificent situation, lying in the beautiful Bow Valley, and is always patronised by Their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Connaught, when visiting the West.

Getting at A Secret

By DWIGHT NORWOOD

Jim Hathaway and I were not only chums, but occupied rooms in the same bachelor apartment house. Jim was a secretive chap and especially fond of making a mystery of what was an ordinary happening. I poked fun at him for doing so, but this seemed to have no effect in stopping him from continually trying to impress me with his ability to do things without my having any knowledge of them. Then when the denouement came he would assume an air of superiority as much as to say, "I don't go about blabbing of my affairs."

There came a time when I believed that Jim had an affair on hand with a girl. The reason why I came to this conclusion was that he began to show a contempt for women. "The best thing a fellow can do with a girl," he would say, "is to let her alone. By doing so he avoids the expense of theater tickets and flowers, only to find out later that she's encouraging some other fellow." I was not interested in Jim's love affairs, but I saw no reason why he should take pains to deceive me in the matter. However, it did not trouble me that he thought proper to do so. I was very fond of him and considered his idiosyncrasy of no real importance, not doubting but that I had others myself just as absurd.

Jim and I occupied a common living room, and one evening when we were about to go out to dinner together Jim picked up an envelope that had been left by the postman during the day, unsealed, and took out a booklet advertising some kind of goods. I noticed him looking at it, or some part of it, with apparent interest; then he tossed it in the wastebasket.

The next morning I happened to go to that same wastebasket to recover a bit of paper I had thrown in it containing an address. I stumbled on the envelope containing the advertisement and noticed that it was addressed in a feminine hand. I thought nothing of this, since girls are usually employed to address advertising matter, and was hunting on for my paper when I raked up the advertisement. It gave a list of articles that would alone interest a woman. This set me to thinking why it should have been addressed to a man. While meditating on this I noticed some lead pencil marks on the booklet. They were 8. 10. 7½.

Now, had it not been for what I have said about Jim and his mysteries it would not have occurred to me that these figures were not merely something put there by some unknown person for some very ordinary purpose, but intended for a cipher. First, advertisements of especial interest to women are not usually mailed to men. This suggested that the booklet had been received by a woman and had been used for cipher purposes by the recipient. What better method for communication could there be? Whether the figures had a meaning or not, I resolved that if I ever got a girl whose parents would not permit me to visit her I would use this plan of communication.

I tried hard not to pry into Jim's affairs, but the puzzle was too fascinating for me to let alone. Besides, there was the temptation to beat Jim at his own game. What 8. 16. 7½ meant haunted me till I hit upon the fact that the present month was August, the eighth month in the year. The present day was the 12th. Did not the figures contain an appointment? If so, it was for Aug. 16 at half past 7 (probably in the evening).

I could not quite bring myself to shadow my friend on that evening, but during the next month or so I noticed that he received a number of advertisements on which there were lead pencil marks. I did not try to decipher any of them. Indeed, I had not deliberately tried to decipher the first one. I had come upon it by accident, it had got into my head and I couldn't get it out till I had solved it. What I did was to buy a wedding present and leave it where Jim could see it. He was above asking me what it was for, so I told him that it was for a friend who was about to be married, adding that I could not name the person since the engagement was a secret.

The reason why I counted on Jim's coming marriage was that it is difficult if not impossible for two men to live together one of whom is engaged without the other knowing it.

Jim never told me of his engagement till a couple of weeks before the wedding. There had been no reason whatever for the secrecy attending the affair except such as influences young couples in similar cases and Jim's idiosyncrasy. The girl's parents were much pleased with the match, and Jim's parents were not living. Jim probably would have kept the secret from me longer, but he wished me to be his best man, and it was proper that he should give me timely notice.

The evening before the wedding I carried the wedding gift I had procured to the bride's home. Jim was there, and when I opened the box in which it was contained Jim started as if he had been shot. I laughed, explained the joke to the bride, and we all laughed together. But I kept them wondering for many months before I told them how I had got on to their secret.

That cured my friend of making mysteries out of very small things. Ever afterward he was frankness to perfection. As for his wife, I doubt if she had ever been so troubled.

Carpet Knights.

"Carpet knights," quoth a writer once in the long ago, "are such as have studied law, physics or other arts of sciences, whereby they have become famous, and, seeing that they are not knighted as soldiers, they are not therefore to use the horseman's title or spurs. They are only termed simply miles and milites, 'knight,' or 'Knights of the Carpetry,' or 'Knights of the Green Cloth,' to distinguish them from those knights that are dubbed as soldiers in the field."—Argonaut.

Ably Defined.

A certain archbishop when asked whether it was a grievous lie for a woman to misstate her age replied:

"A lie may be defined as a statement made by one rational being to another rational being with the intent to deceive. Now, as no rational being would think of asking a woman her age with the expectation of being answered truthfully, one of the elements of the lie is lacking, and the woman's statement cannot, strictly speaking, be defined as such."—Judge.

IDEALS.

Every man has at times in his mind the ideal of what he should be, but is not. This ideal may be high and complete, or it may be low and insufficient, yet in all men that really seek to improve it is better than the actual character.

Her One Weakness

A Story of Old Virginia

By EUNICE BLAKE

That peninsula which lies between Chesapeake bay and the James river is replete with interesting associations. It was there that the first settlement was made in North America, there sprang up the patriarchal system of the plantation, and there occurred one of the most noted struggles in a war that resulted in the downfall of that system.

The second of these periods is the most delightful to contemplate. The descendant of the cavalier had become the planter. His sons were fine men; his daughters were possessed of many virtues. The age of chivalry had not yet given way to the more matter of fact existence that has pervaded the south since the war between the states.

About Williamsburg, the seat of William and Mary college, were scattered families who were the flower of the Virginia aristocracy. Edward Fitz-Herbert, a planter living in this section, was blessed with sons and daughters who had grown up among customs that had been inherited from the defenders of King Charles I.

At this time, when the family of Mr. and Mrs. Fitz-Herbert were passing from youth to manhood and womanhood, an invalid, Bleeker van Tromp, went from New York to Williamsburg, hoping that the climate of Virginia might restore him to health. There he met Eugenia Fitz-Herbert, a typical southern girl, with a wealth of raven black hair, a complexion like the mingling of the magnolia and the rose, and a bewitching figure.

If there was one virtue among the southern planters of those days more prominent than others it was hospitality. Bleeker van Tromp brought letters to the Fitz-Herberts and was received and introduced by them to the planters of the peninsula. Eugenia Fitz-Herbert was drawn to him through pity for his lack of strength, induced by ill health, and he was drawn to her on account of an attractiveness that captivated all who knew her.

The life lived by these people was very like that of the country gentry of England. They gave house parties and rode to hounds. Eugenia was a fine horsewoman and fond of hunting, but, since Bleeker was not strong enough to engage in the sport, from the goodness of her heart she often made excuses to remain behind when hunting parties were formed that she might alleviate his disappointment. But while his body was weak his spirit was eager for action.

Naturally this attention drew him closer to Eugenia. Indeed, it was not long before he worshiped her. Her father and brothers noticed the growing attachment and frowned upon it, their ideal for a husband for this flower of the family being some man of prominence, some commanding figure upon whom the people of the south would look as a leader. Van Tromp, whatever might be his talents and attainments, was not strong enough even to enjoy the manly sports of a Virginia gentleman.

Eugenia, understanding this contempt held by her father and brothers for the want of vigor on the part of the man she loved, was troubled. When it was referred to by one of them she replied with fire in her eye that fortunately there was a way by which a weak man might show that he was equal, if not superior, to a strong man if it became necessary to do so, and she referred to the code duello, where the weaker could pull the hair trigger of a pistol with the same facility as the stronger.

This defect in her lover continued to trouble Eugenia. She nursed it and brooded over it, not because she considered it a defect, but because she was conscious that her family and her associates regarded Van Tromp as one who could not take a position in the community in which she lived such as she would desire. At any rate, she felt so deeply on the subject that she failed to conceal it from her lover.

Not only did the New Yorker learn it from Eugenia, but one of her brothers, who was friendly to him, said to him one day:

"Bleeker, why don't you challenge a fire eater and shoot him? That will satisfy everybody, and they'll let you alone."

"Because," was the reply, "I don't care to kill a man simply to prove that I'm not a coward."

There came to the peninsula from New Orleans a creole named Le Bouf, who was received in the social circle of the planters and, being a young man of aristocratic manners and having an aggressive way with him, was very popular with the women. He was not a man to brook any obstacle to his desires or advancement and was inclined to treat those whom he considered his inferiors with a silent contempt more galling than outspoken superiority.

What are now states united in reality as well as in name were then separate colonies, in many respects antagonistic. There was certainly nothing in common between Louisiana, which was mostly French, and New York, which was a mixture of Dutch and English. France and England were especially antagonistic, and the Louisianan's sympathies were all with France. This and the fact that he was absorbed in himself antagonized him against Van Tromp, and the latter's delicate physical condition induced Le Bouf to treat him as one unworthy of any consideration except the most formal politeness.

The two men might have existed in the same social circle indefinitely had not Le Bouf been charmed by Eugenia Fitz-Herbert. As soon as he began to pay her noticeable attention she saw that the fact troubled Van Tromp.

To analyze a woman's reasons for an act is usually a hopeless task. Eugenia gave Le Bouf some slight encouragement. Why she did so no one could tell. Some thought it an ordinary desire to pique him with a view to assure herself that she held him in thrall. Some thought that she had been captivated with that aggressive air of superiority which the creole assumed over most of those with whom he came in contact. The event proved that she was influenced by neither of these.

When a man loves a woman and another man intrudes himself between him and her, unless she makes a quick decision between the two, there is liable to be trouble between the men. Eugenia, while she did not change in her treatment of Van Tromp, gave Le Bouf just enough encouragement to cause him to think he might win her. The blood between the rivals grew hotter apace, and it was not long before, one evening while the young men of the neighborhood were regaling themselves at the tavern, Le Bouf spoke contemptuously to Van Tromp. Instantly all conversation ceased, the party being shocked by the act. Had the creole spoken the same to any other of the men present there would have been resentment, followed by a duel. What would the weakling do?

"This is all wrong," exclaimed one of the Virginians. "Mr. Van Tromp is an invalid."

"Gentlemen," said Van Tromp, rising, "I have never approved of the method of settling disputes more prevalent in the south than with us in the north, but I confess that it is a boon to me. I may not be able to stand up against an enemy with a rapier, but I need no strength to fire a pistol. If I am challenged the choice of weapons rests with me, and I shall choose the latter. And, furthermore, I propose to kill my enemy."

There was a cold bloodedness in the speaker's tone that impressed those present and sent a chill to Le Bouf. Nothing more was said at the time, the party breaking up. The sympathies were with Van Tromp because he was an invalid, because he was much liked and because the creole's assumption of superiority had prejudiced them against him. One of the young men offered to stand as Van Tromp's substitute in the affair, but he declined the offer with thanks, expressing surprise that it had been made.

Le Bouf saw at once that he was in an unfortunate position. He was compelled to challenge Van Tromp, who he knew had the sympathies of the others present and would, when the affair became known, elicit the sympathies of the planters generally. On consultation with others he was advised to send Van Tromp an apology for the words spoken at the tavern. He did so, and a reply was returned that the apology was not accepted.

He then reluctantly sent a challenge, which Van Tromp placed in the hands of a friend with instructions to choose the derringer pistol used in duels. The seconds arranged that the meeting should take place in a secluded spot the next morning, the second after the insult.

It was impossible to keep the meeting a secret. The afternoon previous to the meeting a brother of Eugenia said to her:

"Gene, Van Tromp is to have a chance to prove his mettle. He's going to meet Le Bouf tomorrow morning."

Eugenia turned pale.

"When and where?" she asked eagerly.

"Nobody knows. It's only known that they're going to fight."

Eugenia said no more, but sought the cabin of Sam, a negro, who adored her and would have given his life for her. She instructed him to discover and let her know the time and place of the coming duel. Sam gained the information from the servants of the principals, the negroes having lain in wait for it at the keyhole.

The next day, when, in the gray of the morning, two duelist parties had assembled, Eugenia rode up to the ground, jumped from her horse and advanced to a point between them.

"I am to blame for this," she said. "It must go no further."

The principals stood still and said nothing.

One of the seconds, after an embarrassing pause, asked Le Bouf if he would withdraw his challenge.

"Certainly," he said. "Anything the lady commands."

"Do you permit the withdrawal?" Van Tromp was asked.

"No."

Eugenia looked at him reproachfully.

"Not for my sake?"

"No," was the firm reply. "Let us proceed."

Eugenia went to him, kneeled before him and begged him to yield. He was obdurate until she assured him that should blood be spilled it would be on her account and it would wreck her life. Then he threw down his pistol and walked away.

But he never forgave her for the one little bit of feminine weakness that had led her to place him at enmity with a fellow being.

The German campaign of hatred against Britain is likely to be a boomerang with practically all the nations of the world on Britain's side.

And no doubt the Berlin newspapers issued special editions to describe the heroic work of the German armies in capturing a number of French doctors, nurses and attendants.

Old Time Detective Work

By EVERETT P. CLARKE

I have been a detective for many years, though now that I am getting old I seldom take a case, and then only one that promises to interest me. My leisure time I spend in study. And what do you suppose is the subject of my studies? I will tell you. I am searching the past when there were no detectives that I may learn how criminals were traced.

I have found a succession of conditions, beginning with confession by torture—to this may be added confession by influence of the clergy—and ending with our present highly perfected detective system. I regret to say that there still exists one relic of the practice of obtaining confessions by influence of the clergy. I refer to securing them by means of the "third degree."

A curious instance of confession I have found in a record of the latter part of the eighteenth century.

During the year 1790 an altercation occurred between James Thorpe and Pardon Winston in Bradford, a small town in Massachusetts. Robert Thorpe, a brother of James, came on to the scene while the fight was in progress and struck Winston on the head with a piece of wood, knocking him senseless. However, he revived in a few minutes, and the brothers, who had been friends of Winston, frightened lest he had been killed, assisted him to his home, expressing great regret at the occurrence.

Winston did not seem any the worse for the blow he had received and remained in Bradford some time after the scuffle. But one day he was missed, and, when months passed and he did not show up, among the various causes for his disappearance that were suggested was one that the quarrel between him and the Thorpe brothers had been renewed and the missing man had come to his death through their instrumentality.

However, since there was nothing but inference in the matter, the suspicion died down. Several years after Winston's disappearance Abner Twitchell, a citizen of Bradford, dreamed one night that the ghost of Winston had appeared to him and said that the Thorpe brothers had killed him, burned his body and buried the residue under a beech tree, the only tree standing in the back yard of his home. Twitchell gave the civil authorities an account of his dream.

At this point in my narrative it is well to remember the conditions of that period. The belief in witchcraft that had reaped so many victims had died out among educated persons, but still prevailed among the lower classes. Today a belief in revelation by dreams, though not what it was then, is not entirely extinct.

The Thorpe brothers were arrested, the ground about the roots of the beech tree was dug up, and some buttons and the metal parts of a pair of suspenders were found. This evidence was considered so strong that the Thorpe brothers were urged to confess in order that justice should be meted out to each in accordance with what he deserved. James, under the incessant pleadings of his spiritual adviser, finally gave way and confessed that he had been the murderer. But later Robert confessed that he, too, had taken part in the killing and had done the principal part in getting rid of the body.

Now, if we consider the evidence in this case as it would be regarded today there is nothing in it. First, we would not accept the dream as of any value whatever; second, the articles found under the beech tree might have been thrown out in the yard or burned with other refuse under the tree and become mingled with the soil; third, we have numerous confessions in murder cases that are not true.

But in those days, when the people were emerging from a period wherein an organized court of justice would convict a woman of vomiting crooked pins and sailing on the water in a sieve, the evidence against the Thorpe brothers, backed by the confession of both, was considered quite sufficient to hang them. They were tried, convicted and sentenced.

One day a man rode into Bradford and while sitting around the tavern stove was told that the next day there would be a hanging in the town and he had better remain over and see it. On mention of the name of Winston he said that he had seen a half witted man in Hadley of that name. A friend of the Thorpe boys was present, and he went to the judge with the story, asking for a stay of the execution in order that the matter might be investigated.

A constable was sent to Hadley and returned with the man for whose murder the prisoners were to have been hanged. The brothers were released and received an ovation, the townspeople really rejoicing that they had been saved by a mere chance from having committed murder themselves.

The blow that Winston had received from Robert Thorpe had caused an indentation of a bit of his skull on the brain. Even nowadays we are never sure when or what vagaries may be caused by such a pressure, though it can now be removed by surgeons. Whether the surgical process of trepanning was done in those days or not I don't know. I found no record of the subsequent condition of the injured man.

"Our beloved East Prussia is free from the enemy," the Kaiser writes. Perhaps the message is but a "scrap of paper."

Mistaken For a Spy

By SARAH BAXTER

When the great European war broke out I was in Berlin. Being a woman and not brave, I concluded that I had better remain where I was than try to get back to America. So I stuck to my quarters in the capital, though I displayed an American flag at my window and visited the embassy to make sure my passport was all right.

By October the lines of traffic over the Atlantic had become safe, and hearing that I could get passage at Rotterdam for New York I concluded to venture upon a trip home. The only danger in my personality lay in the fact of my accent. We Bostonians use the broad "a" like the English, and on this account I was liable to be taken for an Englishwoman.

At the time I started the allies in the west were engaged in repulsing the attacks of the Germans in France and a part of Belgium which was still occupied by the Belgians. Having crossed the Meuse I fell in with the German army in the rear of the line of trenches which was being held as a reserve. I was conducted to the headquarters of the general commanding, and my passport was examined by an officer of his staff who spoke English, but with the usual accent of a German. After a few questions he left me, but soon returned.

"There is fighting on the route you must take, and it would not be safe to proceed just now. The general desires that you join him at dinner, and we will see that you have a comfortable place to sleep."

I was sorry for the delay, but exercised patience, especially since I was to be well treated. Some British prisoners were brought in during the day, and I went among them, chatting with them. I noticed that they all supposed me to be English, several of them asking from what part of England I hailed. This troubled me, for there were German officers and soldiers present, and I was quite sure that at least one of the officers was listening to our conversation.

I dined with the general and several members of his staff. There was also another woman present besides myself, who spoke English fluently. Indeed, not every one would know whether she was English or German, though to me she betrayed her nationality in certain words that a German can never pronounce. For the "w" she used a "v." For a "g" she used "sh." But it seemed to me that she must have learned English while young, for these peculiarities of German pronunciation were very slight.

After dinner the men arose and said that they would smoke outside, giving us two ladies an opportunity to enjoy each other's society for a short time. They had scarcely left us alone together when my companion's manner changed completely. She drew her seat very near me and whispered:

"I am not German. I am English. I have very important information of the German forces which I wish to carry to England. But there are officers between me and the coast who know me, and if I proceed I will be arrested for a spy. If you will carry a bit of paper through the lines to General French's headquarters you will save the lives of hundreds, thousands, of our countrymen."

This speech frightened me dreadfully. I arose and attempted to leave the woman, convinced that she was really working upon me for some purpose which I did not know. She caught me by the skirt and held me, looking up at me with an expression which was intended for terror, but which I believed was feigned.

"Do not betray me!" she cried in a smothered voice. "It will mean death to me!"

"Let me go," I retorted. "I am not English. I am American."

The woman held me, imploring me not to betray her. I told her that I had no interest in her whatever. I was neither German nor English, but a native and a citizen of a neutral country. She played her part admirably, and for a moment such was the agony she assumed that I almost believed her. But I remembered how she had betrayed herself in her speech and refused to credit her.

I pulled myself away from her and fled. Outside the general and the other officers who had retired from the dinner table were seated on camp chairs smoking. They arose as I appeared and turned toward me.

"General," I said, "I wish to proceed on my journey at once. You have set this woman upon me to see if I am what I pretend or a spy. She is not English, which you know as well as I. She is German, though she speaks English better than any German I ever met. But when she tells me she is not a German I know better. I am an American bearing an American passport, and I demand to be allowed to proceed on my journey to Rotterdam, where I hope to find passage to my home in America."

The general broke into a laugh in which the other officers joined. The man who had examined my passport said to me:

"Why, if you are an American, do you use the broad 'a' like the English?"

"Because I am a Bostonian."

I was not only permitted to proceed at once, but was furnished with transportation and an escort. I reached Rotterdam a few days before the sailing of a steamer for America and secured a passage in her.

Did someone say that a German blockade order was in effect?

Keeping out of trouble seems to be Uncle Sam's best card just at present.

MARCHING ARMIES

For Infantry Fifteen Miles Is a Good Day's Work.

HORSES MAKE TWENTY MILES

But to Do This Day After Day Requires Good Artillery Stock and Almost Perfect Conditions—The Pace For Soldiers In Various Countries.

The infantry pace varies in detail in the armies of the nations. It varies not only in length of step, but in the number of steps to the minute, and each nation, of course, thinks its own step is the best.

One peculiar step, known as the "parade march," or "goose step," is used at times by German soldiers. No other army has a step similar to it. The German goose step consists in throwing out the legs without bending the knees, and it is used only on ceremonial occasions, in changing guard and when a detachment of men pass an officer of high rank.

The rate of march of a detachment of infantry in active service depends on many factors, including the size of the marching body or the length of the column, the training, physical condition and spirit of the troops, the road and the weather.

Two and a half miles an hour and fifteen miles a day is a good average for seasoned infantry carrying, of course, field equipment. Seasoned troops in good spirits and spurred by the prospect of action may be depended on to do much better than this when the situation requires it, but when an infantry division or even a brigade has moved over fifteen miles of road in one day it has done a day's work.

Stonewall Jackson's "foot cavalry of the valley" now and then covered forty miles in one march, but it was extraordinary infantry.

In some of the press reports from the Russo-Japanese war it was given out that on occasion large bodies of Japanese infantry covered fifty miles of road in a day and night and came up on the firing line fresh enough to shoot. But a great many prodigies were accredited to Japanese troops in that war.

It has long been a saying among military men of countries other than France that the French foot soldier has the best legs in Europe, and the mobility of an army depends on its feet and legs. Infantry is as good as its feet. An infantryman who can march and shoot is worth a regiment of men who straggle, hunt shade, pant for water, develop blisters on the feet and keep their ears pricked up only for mess call, sick call and recall.

In the American army the length of the full step in quick time is thirty inches, measured from heel to heel, and the cadence is at the rate of 120 steps to the minute. At 120 steps to the minute the soldier marches 3,600 inches a minute, which equals 100 yards. And marching 100 yards a minute he will march 6,000 yards in one hour, or three and nine twenty-seconds of a mile—a little under three and a half miles. They do not do this practically because time must be taken out for rest.

The British infantry step is thirty-one and one-half inches, the longest of all the steps. Germany keeps step with Switzerland, each doing thirty-one inches, while twenty-nine inches is the pace of the armies of Italy, France and Austria. The Russians take the shortest step, twenty-seven and one-half inches and only do 112 in a minute. The German infantryman does 114, the Austrian 115 and the French and Italian each manage 120. Consequently, to march a mile takes the Russian twenty minutes, the Austrian eighteen and two-thirds minutes, the French and Italian eighteen minutes, while the German could beat this by ten or eleven seconds.

A fair day's march for a battery or battalion or regiment of field artillery is twenty miles, but to make this day after day on the usual American road without killing the horses not only requires good artillery stock with some warm blood in their arteries, but perfect fitting harness and drivers who have some native intelligence and into whom discipline has been hammered. The usual practice in the light artillery is to march for fifty minutes and halt and rest ten minutes. During that rest, which is mainly in the interest of the horses, collars are opened and laid back so that a horse's shoulder may be relieved and cooled, and, of course, the limber props are let down that the weight of the pole may be taken off the necks of the wheelers.—Spokane Spokesman-Review.

SHORNCLIFFE CAMP GREETS THE SECOND CONTINGENT FROM CANADA

Were Given a Great Reception at Liverpool—Several Additional Wounded of the Princess Patricias Have Also Arrived at Hospital—Health of the Men Reported Excellent

LONDON, March 8.—(Special)—The four thousand men of the second Canadian expeditionary force who have reached England will be quartered at Shorncliffe camp, which is a big improvement over Salisbury Plain, and the men will be more comfortably quartered than the Canadians who came across in October. The camp at Shorncliffe is within a mile of the railway station, and is located on dry soil. There are paved roads and sidewalks, and there are brick huts to quarter the troops. The camp is also within easy reach of Folkestone, one of the most pleasant and picturesque seaside resorts in England.

Although the arrival of the contingent was quietly effected, the Canadians were given an enthusiastic reception when they reached Liverpool on Thursday night, the welcome being all the more hearty because the appearance of the troopships dispelled the rumors from hostile sources. The movement of the troops from the port to the camp was begun on Friday, and by midnight on Saturday the last of the troops had reached Shorncliffe.

The health of the men on the voyage is reported to have been excellent. On one of the ships a grand military athletic tournament was held during the voyage. Some of the men seem to fear that they will not get a chance to go to the front like the first Canadian contingent. This is caused by the belief that the war will be over before their period of training in England is completed.

Major Hamilton Gault, of the Princess Patricias, is now a patient at the Queen's Canadian Hospital at Shorncliffe, having arrived on Saturday. The Major is suffering from a bullet wound in the right forearm, and is being treated by Col.-Surgeon Armour, who expects that the officer's wish to soon return to active service will be gratified.

Several Patricia men who were wounded in a recent charge on a German trench were also admitted to the Shorncliffe hospital on Saturday.

NEW CANADIAN INDUSTRY

GUELPH, March 8.—(Special)—Another new industry has been secured for this city, one entirely new so far as Canada is concerned, and which promises to grow into a large concern. The name of the new company is the George B. Jackson Company. It has a large factory in operation at Westminster, Maryland. It manufactures all sorts of railway signals, torpedoes and fuses, and has been doing a large business in all parts of Canada. The new 7½ per cent. duty which has just been put on goods by the Dominion Government, however, interferes with the Canadian business, and the company decided to manufacture in Canada, selecting Guelph as its location. It is taking over the factory on Alice street, formerly used as an axle factory, and later as a brass foundry, and will make alterations to suit its requirements.

Indian Relief Fund Now Totals $5,000,000—Noblemen are Giving Lavishly

LONDON, March 8.—(Special)—A special despatch from Delhi indicates that enthusiasm for the outcome of the war continues unabated. The Indian Relief Fund now reaches the total of one million pounds sterling ($5,000,000). The largest sum previously raised in India was thirty-nine lacs of rupees ($1,263,600), contributed in 1900 for relief of the acute famine of that year. The chiefs and noblemen of India continue to present valuable gifts of every description for the prosecution of the war. Last month's donations include 25,000 rupees ($8,100) annually from the Maharaja of Datia and his Sirdars; from another native potentate 25,000 rupees; from the Nizam of Hyderabad, a hospital of fifty beds. Motor ambulances are given by another, while from others there are contributions of large quantities of hay and blankets. One loyal Raja announces that he will pay his soldiers from the revenues of his estates.

Funeral of David Cranston

Artillery Instructor of Cobourg for Past Six Years

COBOURG, March 8.—(Special)—A well-known military man of the town, Mr. David Cranston, was laid to rest here Saturday. St. John's lodge, A. F. & A. M., attended the funeral in a body. Mr. Cranston came here from Toronto in 1908 as instructor to the Cobourg Heavy Battery. He had not been well of late, but was about as usual on Thursday and down town that afternoon. He died that evening. He was born in Lancaster, England, but came to Canada when eighteen years of age. He joined the Canadian regulars in London and later the Northwest Mounted Police, with which force he served for some time, and took part in the rebellion. He married Miss McDonald of London, who with three children survive. He was fifty-four years of age.

WARNING TO ITALY BY RUSSIAN MINISTER

ROME, March 8.—(Special)—The resignation of M. Krupenski, the Russian Ambassador to Italy, is announced in an interview with the diplomat printed by The Giornale d'Italia. His retirement will not come until April, however, and he said it was due entirely to family affairs and had no political significance. M. Krupenski declared his relations were cordial, both with the Russian government and the Italian Cabinet.

In closing the interview the Russian Ambassador said "I will not attempt to give advice to the Italian rulers, but I think a moment like this for the realization of national aspirations never will occur again. Those who think Italy can obtain what she desires by remaining at th window are much mistaken."

Defence of Constantinople Entrusted to General Von Sanders

LONDON, March 8.—Special—"According to the latest advices received here", says a Reuter despatch from Sofia, "the sultan and the government are still in Constantinople. The government is prepared to cross to Asia Minor at any moment, but the sultan is in favor of remaining in the capital.

"It is understood that it has been decided to entrust the defence of Constantinople exclusively to the Germans, under command of Gen. Liman Von Sanders, the instructor of the Turkish army, while Bedri Bey, the perfect of police, wil be invested with the general control of the city, [illegible] powers equivalent to those of a viceroy.

"Measures of precaution already have been adopted to prevent the capture of the city. It is reported that all the troops at Adrianople and Demotica have been hurriedly despatched to the Gallipoli Peninsula."

GRECIAN COUNCIL DECIDES TO ENTER THE WAR IMMEDIATELY

(Canadian Press Special)

LONDON, March 8.—It is semi-officially announced that as a result of the Crown Council, held at Athens Greece will enter the war immediately.

Rome despatches say it is reported in diplomatic circles there that eight German officers have been arrested at the Italian colony of Eritrea. They are said to have been on a mission to Abyssinia with a view to fomenting trouble between that country and Italy and on the British Indian border.

Despatches from Athens today report that the Allied Fleet is making good progress in the Dardanelles. It is said that but a few forts of a small size remain now, the larger ones having all been silenced.

Allies Capture Extensive Trenches

Five Hundred Metres Between Perthes and Because Jour Occupied, Prisoners Taken

(Canadian Press Special)

PARIS, March 8.—A French statement says the Allies captured four or five hundred metres of trenches between Perthes and Beausejour with some prisoners, and dismantled a 12 centimetre gun which had to be taken to the rear for repairs, and repulsed with heavy loss to the Germans a violent counter attack at Reich Ackeropf in the Vosges mountains.

RIGHTS OF CHINESE TO BE EXTENDED

OTTAWA, March 8.—(Special)—An order-in-Council has been passed extending the present rights of Chinese who leave Canada on a visit to their native land to free re-entry within one year after leaving Canada. All Chinese who are now visiting in China from Canada, or who may leave up to August 1 of this year, have their right of free re-entry extended until six months after a proclamation in The Canada Gazette that war no longer exists. The reasons given for this extension of time are that it will induce many Chinese now in Canada to return temporarily to China during war times here, thus relieving unemployment conditions. It is stated that there are at present more than 6,000 Chinese out of employment in Canada, and 4,200 Chinese who have returned to China from Canada and who under existing legislation will be compelled to return to the Dominion within 12 months in order to maintain their right of free re-entry.

TURKISH FORTS ARE DEMOLISHED FROM SURROUNDING SECTIONS

British Battleship Queen Elizabeth, in Aegean Sea, Batters the Asiatic Strongholds Across Gallipoli Peninsula and the Dardanelles—Forts of Smyrna Reduced by a Second British Fleet

LONDON, March 8.—(Special.)—News of important developments in connection with the bombardment of the Dardanelles is contained in a statement from Paris that an expeditionary force had been concentrated in northern Africa and was ready to move to the Aegean should it be found necessary to supplement the forces of the fleet.

From Smyrna came news that a squadron of British ships, which on Friday had begun to shell to the Turkish guns and troops along the coast of Asia Minor, had concentrated in the Gulf of Smyrna, served notice upon the Turkish authorities of the intended bombardment of the defences of Smyrna, and, in accordance with the notice, begun operations. Some of the defence have already been destroyed. The object of this attack upon the chief port of Turkey in Asia is to prevent the use of Smyrna as a point of concentration for a Turkish advancing force toward the Asiatic side of the Dardanelles.

The forcing of a passage through the straits would be of little use were the allies unable to keep them open. The capture and holding of Smyrna are essential to the safety of the Dardanelles after passing into the hands of the allies.

In this connection a despatch from Athens is important. It says:

"Fifteen of the allies' ships bombarded the Smyrna forts, one of which, named the Two Sisters, was destroyed. The inhabitants of the town are fleeing to the interior panic-stricken.

"The warships are now firing against the forts defending the harbor of Smyrna. One report says that the batteries on the height have been silenced by the warships.

"Today at 9.30 a.m., the bombardment of the Dardanelles forts were resumed, the Dreadnought Queen Elizabeth leading the fleet in the firing from the Aegean Sea, eighteen miles away. The attack directed against the recently placed fortifications on the heights was successful. One battery was reduced by the British fire.

Progress of the Fleets.

"A telegram from the Island of Tenedos states that the allied fleets are in action against the Dardanelles, proceeding from the mouth of the Mender River. None of the battleships has yet gone farther up.

"Only after the destruction of the forts Kilid Bahr, Hamidieh and Medjidieh will they be able to advance farther in their course toward Constantinople."

Cautious and Thorough

George Renwick, in a despatch to The Daily Chronicle from Athens, says:

"The bombardment of the Dardanelles forts according to the latest news proceeds with success and cautious thoroughness. It is now anticipated before another two weeks are over that the allied fleet will be in the Sea of Marmora, and Constantinople, so often threatened by foreign guns, will quickly fall to the victorious allies."

Two features of the operations make extreme caution necessary for the attacking battleships. In the first place, the number of mines laid in the straits have been found to be enormous. They must all be picked up, and the work takes considerable time, seeing that it must be done thoroughly.

The Turks evidently have learned the lesson from their German taskmasters, for they also are using the floating mines, which they cast upon the swift current, to be floated down toward the sea, constitute a danger to the bombarding ships. Some of these mines have been picked up as far away as the Tenedos Islands.

Secondly, the larger batteries against which the allied fleet are contending are very skillfully hidden, and though brilliantly handled, the guns of the fleet have done tremendous damage to the works. It is necessary to knock out each gun individually. This requires time and great precision in marksmanship. The latest advices are to the effect that something like fifty guns have been actually hit and destroyed.

Description by Eyewitness

I have had an interesting talk with as gentleman who arrived here from Tenedos Island, and who, from the height of Mount Ilios, witnessed the bombardment. He tells me: "The sight was a most magnificent one. At first the fleet ranged in a semi-circle, some miles out to sea from the entrance. From the straits it afforded an inspiring spectacle as it came along and took up position, and the picture became most awe-inspiring when the guns began to boom. The bombardment at first was slow, the shells from the various ships screaming through the air at a rate of about one every two minutes. Their practice was excellent and with strong glasses I could see huge masses of earth and stonework thrown high up into the air. The din even at a distance was terrific, and when the largest ship with the biggest guns in the world joined in the martial chorus the air was rent with an ear-splitting noise.

Draw Turkish Fire.

"The Turkish batteries, however, were not to be drawn, and seeing this the British Admiral sent one British ship and one French ship close in shore towards the Siddil Bahr forts. It was a pretty sight to see the two battleships swing rapidly away towards the northern cape, spitting fire and smoke as they rode. They obscured the pure atmosphere with clouds of smoke from the funnels and guns, yet through it all I could see that they were getting home with the shots they fired. As they went in they sped right under the guns of the shore batteries, which could no longer resist the temptation to see what they could do. Puffs of white smoke dotted the landscape on the far shore, and dull booms echoed over the placid water round the ships. Fountains of water sprang high up into the air. The enemy had been drawn, but the marksmanship obviously was very bad. I think I am right in saying that not a single shot directed against the ships came within a hundred yards of any of the battleships. Out came the two ships, again ineffectively pursued by the shells from the Turkish batteries. As they retired they still continued to make excellent practice, and the parting shots were quite as good as their first position, and a number of the enemy's batteries had been discovered as a result of this brilliant little piece of work, and soon the Turkish guns were under a hail of the most deadly shells warfare has ever known. From a distance which must have been ten miles at least monstrous projectiles, dealing destruction and death were poured in upon the forts guarding the entrance, and each one appeared to create a frightful inferno where it landed. The people of the little island gathered on all the high points to see the awe-inspiring spectacle, and the wonder of it struck them with utter amazement."

Fire Over Promontory

Later my friend was able to witness the subsequent stage of the bombardment from a nearer point still. What he saw while on an island of the Rabbit Group was still more interesting. When the early part of the bombardment successfully dealt with the entrance fortifications several ships were able to enter the straits, and on the broad sheet inside were carrying on the work of destruction of the batteries still farther up the arm of the sea. Before that was done, however, the forts at Kum Kale had to be dealt with and that was done in an extraordinary manner. One section of the fleet, protected by the extreme point of the Gallipoli Peninsula, fired over the hilly promontory at the forts, making splendid practice. Another part of the squadron from a sheltered position [illegible] the coast northeast of Tenedos Island directed a telling fire on the same forts, besides turning attention with obviously great effect on groups of Turkish troops seen moving on the mainland.

Entrance is Opened

The silencing of the Kum Kale forts finally opened the entrance to the Dardanelles. On the fleet entering the straits the operations were not yet beyond the watcher, and my friend was still able to observe the work of the warships in clearing the passage. On one occasion he tells me parties of marines landed during the day in order to complete the destruction of the enemy's works. These forces were always withdrawn at nightfall and their work accomplished without loss to themselves. "Another interesting feature of the operations," states my informant, "was what the French call 'feu indirect' upon some of the batteries higher up on the north side of the waterway. The battleships were placed off the coast opposite Imbros Island and they sent shells shrieking over the heights and down on the batteries on the other side of the peninsula. I could see waterplanes out and doubtless they were directing the fire of these ships. It was impossible for me, of course, to see what damage was done by these ships, but judging by the commotion which could be observed it must have been considerable. I believe the waterplanes, besides being employed in observation and direction of the battleships fire, also dropped bombs on some of the forts and batteries lying higher up the Dardanelles.

When my friend left the island the warships could go well within the straits, and distance was preventing observation of the operations with anything like certainty. "It was a significant spectacle," he said in conclusion, "and anyone lucky enough, as I was, to see it will not forget it during his lifetime."

Torpedo Boats Active.

Another eyewitness says:

"On nearing Tenedos we made out the allied fleet in battle formation at the entrance to the Straits of Hellespont. Among the fleet were two liners serving as hospital ships. Around the Rabbit Islands were anchored special craft which during the night were engaged in removing mines. Torpedo boats and destroyers steaming at high speed were passing quickly hither and thither in all directions.

"The allied fleet usually begin action in the afternoon when the rays of the sun are favorable to the gunners."

Boxing Camp Broken Up

Willard and Referee Smith Leave —No Word From Johnson

EL PASO, Texas, March 6.—(Special)—Jess Willard left this afternoon for Los Angeles to join his family. Ed. Smith, who expected to be referee of the Johnson-Willard fight, has left for Chicago, and Tom Jones, manager of Willard, is expected to leave tomorrow for the east. This indicates that the big fight in Juarez is definitely off. Before leaving for Los Angeles, Willard announced that definite information would be received by cable from Havana tonight, settling where and when the fight would be held, if at all. This is taken to mean that there is no certainty that the fight will be held at all, and Willard has broken all training rules and was smoking a cigar as the train pulled out for the coast.

Everyone seems to be up in the air about the fight. The Weber-Well syndicate has no more information than the camp followers and all are pessimistic about the chances for the fight. Well announced this evening that, while he had had messages from Curley, nothing definite had yet been received.

GERMANY IMPOSING TAX ON PROFITS OF MANUFACTURERS

(Canadian Press Special)

LONDON, March 8.—Germany is imposing a tax on the profits of the manufacturers of war materials.

The activity of German steamers with coal cargoes on the West coast of South America indicates the probable proximity of German cruisers. It is believed that the Dresden is hiding in some Chilean inlet.

The economic situation in Spain grows worse. The scarcity of food has caused bread riots. Some families get food only every other day.

The Daily Express says it is understood that at a recent naval council at Berlin Admiral Von Ingenohl's policy of seeking a battle with the British fleet was condemned, and it may be taken for granted that the German fleet will remain hidden until peace is declared.

TONSILITIS, SORE THROAT, CHEST COLDS, CAN BE CURED OVER NIGHT

THEY VANISH QUICKLY IF NERVILINE IS WELL RUBBED IN.

When the throat tickles, when it hurts to draw a long breath, when you feel as if a knife were stuck in your side, it's time to draw out the congestion that will soon become pneumonia.

An ordinary cough syrup has no chance at all—you require a powerful penetrating liniment.

Nothing is known that possesses more merit in such cases than Nerviline.

Rub it liberally over the sides and chest—rub it in hard.

The warm, soothing effect of Nerviline will be apparent in five minutes.

Nothing like it for quick relief—takes soreness out of the throat in one rubbing—breaks up the chest cold, draws out the inflammation, stops the cough quickly.

Rub it on for rheumatism—it destroys the pain—drives it right away. Try it for stiff muscles—it works miracles in just such cases.

No pain-relieving remedy compares in power to cure with Nerviline. Largest sale in Canada of any liniment for nearly forty years. The reason is plain. It satisfies every time.

The large 50 cent family size bottle is more economical than the 25 cent trial size. Sold by dealers everywhere, or the Catarrhozone Co., Kingston, Canada.

HOW A BIOLOGIST VIEWS THE WAR

European Conflict Just a Battle of Protoplasms, Dr. Morris Says—Says Darwin Will Win—Thinks American Nation Won't Last Long Because Its Energy is Running Out

NEW YORK, Mar. 6.— The war in Europe is simply a case of two strong dominant types of varietal hybrids, each trying to get control of the other; in other words, a "strong, haughty, nouveau-rich protoplasm is in conflict with an equally strong, old patrician protoplasm," according to Dr. R. Tuttle Morris, ex-president of the American Association of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, who talked on "Warfare as Natural History" at the Cornell Club.

Putting it another way, Dr. Morris diagnosed the European conflict as a free-for-all show-down between "Mr. Darwin of England and Mr. Treitschke of Germany," and he predicted that Darwin would win out. It was not the Darwinian theory about the survival of the fittest that would win, he explained, but the other Darwinian theory about the mutual dependence of protoplasm.

Man Dr. Morirs described as a group of protoplasmic cells that were in constant warfare, and warfare as "one of Nature's methods of deciding the struggle for survival." That being settled, he went on to show how the whole war in Europe was a battle of protoplasms, and continued:

Germany Can't Be Crushed

"It makes no difference how many allies they have or how much the world suffers and pays out. They're going to fight it out, and one side is going to dominate. What's going to happen to Germany? Crush her? No. You can't crush a splendid protoplasm of 70,000,000. Press it down on top and it bulges out at the sides. The Prussian is always there, and he will be there ten years from now. Nor can you crush Great Britain, a splendid type of protoplasm that has dominated so long.

There was only one way out that Dr. Morris could see, and that was of a sort not calculated to bring peace to the separate groups of protoplasm in the trenches for several days to come.

"But if they only realized the natural history of it," he said. "If they would only pay more heed to the mutual dependence theory of Darwin instead of the survival of the fittest idea, then we would have sap channels of trade re-established with Dr. Butler's 'international mind' flowing through them and destruction would cease."

"As with all 'protoplasmic forms,'" he said, "the strength of a nation depends on the hybrids that caused that variety. The great fund of energy is in the race; the lesser funds are taken out by the nation."

And so, he reasoned, it was varietal hybrid like the Puritan that produced the longest and strongest stock, and that led him up to the Mexican situation. This, he said, was easy to explain. Mexico, was short on varietal hybrids—hadn't any at all, in fact.

Why the Mexicans Fail

"In Mexico," he said, "we have specific hybrids—that is, hybrids between species—crosses between the Aryan-Spanish and Mongolian-Indian. So, of course, we may expect a series of short; sharp revolutions down there. Naturalists laugh up their sleeves when they see good people getting excited because the Mexicans can't govern themselves. Of course they can't. There is no strong dominant type, and it takes some remakable mutant like a Diaz who executes his rivals without asking questions to govern and keep order."

Dr. Morris then advanced the theory that the Jewish people would be the next to dominate.

"It is true that they ceased to be a nation politically long ago," he said, "but through the habit of the species homo sapiens they are gathering in the cities and are thriving under urban life. They are increasing more rapidly than any others, and under natural laws they will dominate the Aryans. There is nothing in Zangwill's melting-pot theory. It is absurd biologically. The Jews or Semitics are not going to cross with the Aryans, they are not melting away. A sort of racial feeling that they must come again to rule the earth keeps them together."

For the same reason Dr. Morris did not think there was going to be any long-established American nation. The dominant varietal hybrids here were fast running out of protoplasmic energy, he said.

"How about the Filipinos?" he was asked.

"Specific hybrids and bound to have trouble," he answered.

"Does President Wilson know it?"

"No. Politicians as a class, being a small organized minority do not realize it. They wanted the Philippines. The vast majority of Americans did not."

AMERICA FEARS HOME TRUTHS IN THE PRESS OF PARIS

Figaro Points to Manner in Which Cornwallis Was Defeated in 1781—Dealing With Pirates—Says Temps, Therefore U.S. Should Not Condemn Allies for Attempting to Starve Them Out

PARIS, March 6.—The Paris press appears to be a trifle disappointed because the American newspapers do not seem to extinguish better between the "piratical Germans and the humanitarian Allies," and to understand that the Allies are forced to take severe measures in self-defense, but there is little independent comment here, the majority of the press following the lead of London.

The Figaro gives an object-lesson to America under the heading, "The American Blockade." After expressing the opinion that the Americans are not likely to take seriously a German blockade by half-a-dozen submarines, the writer maintains that history shows—despite the German protest, that the Allied action is barbarious—that a blockade is always necessary to gain a victory. Then follows the lesson: "In 1781 the American victory over Cornwallis with 7,000 picked troops was due almost entirely to the cutting off of his supplies by the French fleet, whose rigorous blockade prevented support from the British admirals Never has a historian suggested that, the French were behaving disloyally, so it will be surprising if the Americans denounce now the principles which enabled them to win independence then. We do not ask justice from the Germans. They are incapable of it, but history justifies it in the eyes of the Americans and other neutrals."

That America's dissatisfaction over the proposed enforcement of a German blockade by the Allies is realy a tribute to the Allies' humanitarian methods of welfare forms the keynote of the Temps article on this question. While admitting that the Declaration of Paris of 1856 prohibits a nation from declaring a blockade that it is unable to maintain by a close surveillance of the coast, the Temps says the conditions of naval warfare are so altered by the submarine that none save a long-distance blockade is now possible. The newspaper holds that the Allies are perfectly justified in establishing a long-distance blockade, even though they are unable to shut German ports to Dutch and Danish shipping. It also holds that: "The utter abandonment by the Germans of international usages justifies the Allies in making a slight technical infringement."

"But," says the Temps, "it is unfair that the Germans should receive favored treatment simply owing to their piratical conduct as the recent negotiations at Washington seem to indicate. The Americans appear to condemn on humanitarian grounds the measures taken by the Allies to starve out the Germans, which Washington considered legitimate when applied by a French squadron to force British troops to surrender by famine. Let us maintain our ground. The Americans, to whom trade with the Allies brings considerable compensation, will finally recognize the justice of our attitude and to renounce it would be a betrayal of the cause of all free peoples."

Has Faith in His Army

Sir John French's Belief in Victory Is Unshakable

LONDON, March 3.—The Daily Telegraph's correspondent, Ashmead Bartlett, who is now touring the British battle front on invitation of the military authorities, describes his visit to headqaurters. He says:

"All lovers of the sensational and showy in war would be bitterly disappointed if they came to headquarters. The great scenes, so beloved by the painters of 100 years ago, are gone forever.

"Headquarters gives you the impression of being the quietest and religious town in the world. If I ever have time I shall count the churches but the bells ring all day and most of the night.

"The streets seem almost deserted. You do not even see many British soldiers. Here and there are officers just passing from one of the great administration buildings of the army to another.

Immediately on our arrival we were received by Sir John French. The commander-in-chief of the greatest army England ever placed in the field lives in a very small house which can only be distinguished from its neighbors by the two sentries at the gate.

"On entering you find yourself in a tiny hall, filled with comforts which have been sent out for the troops. On the right is a small room, used by his aides-de-camp. In front is a small dining room, and opening from this is the Field Marshal's private working room, which contains a large table covered by a huge map, on which are marked the latest positions of all the units under his command.

"For the immensity of the task and the huge responsibilities which General French bears on his shoulders his quarters seem ridiculously humble and small. But in this respect, as well is in so many others, the Field Marshal has set the whole army a noble example, namely, extreme simplicity in living and a determination at all costs to keep physically fit. For instance, the rations issued to the last newly joined recruit and to the Commander in Chief are identical.

"Sir John's greeting was delightfully friendly and informal It is fully astonishing how well he has stood the strain and stress and the tremendous responsibilities of the campaign He has not aged a day, and looks as fit and as well as the younger subaltern in the army.

" 'Never once', said an officer to me, 'has Sir John French shown any sign of anxiety or loss of confidence. He has always remained the same confident and cheerful of the issue of the war.'

"This was absolutely confirmed when I had the honor of again being received by the Field Marshal. It was gratifying to hear the one person who should know take such a perfectly calm and confident view of the final issue of the general struggle. Even the praise which he bestows in his official dispatches gives no adequaete idea of the immense pride and confidence that the Field Marshal has in the British soldier."

It is said that Roumania will enter the war in April. "Everybody's Doing It" should be a popular tune soon.

Liquid Fire Attack Failed

PARIS, March 6.—How the Germans squirted liquid flame into the French trenches in the Argonne district is told again in La Liberte today. One of the wounded is quoted as saying: "It was at the close of an uneventful February day when suddenly liquid spattered on us. Some one cried, 'I believe it is gasoline.' Immediately the Lieutenant ordered all pipes to be put out, but at the same moment a jet of flame struck the trench followed by a rain of incendiary bombs, grenades and torches.

"Everything flamed, the shelters, uniforms and even the ground itself. All blazing we were forced to retire, but unfortunately we had built a trench just behind this one, which enabled our supports to meet the attacks which came speedily.

"Then our comrades avenged our agony, dashing furiously against the enemy with the bayonet. Vainly they brought up reinforcements. They were soon forced to withdraw, leaving 150 dead and sixty prisoners. The burned trenches remained ours."

FOUR MEN KILLED

BRUNSWICK, Ga., March 8.—Special—Four men were shot and killed and five others seriously wounded here yesterday by Monroe Phillips, a lumberman, who fired at random on the street. Phillips was killed by a policeman who sought to arrest him.

One of the men killed was H. H. Dunwoody, a prominent attorney. The others killed were W. M. Hackett, an undertaker; Rex. Deavers, a policeman, and W. P. Padgett, a former policeman. Several of the wounded are prominent citizens of Brunswick.

Worried over finanicial difficulties, which he blamed on others, is said to have made Phillips temporarily insane.

TROOPS FROM CANADA RECEIVE SPECIAL MENTION

OTTAWA, March 8.—Special—That Canada has good reason to be proud of the Caandian troops who have already reached the firing line is the tenor of despatches which have reached Ottawa from various sources in England and in France

In addition to these despatches it is understood that the Government is being kept informed from day to day in official communications as to the progress of the operations in France and Belgium, including the work of the Canadian troops These communications are said amply to bear out the unofficial messages which have come across the ocean with reference to the splendid showing of the Canadians in action

The Canadians are showing themselves to be unusually expert in rapid and accurate rifle shooting, and in this respect are said to be the equal of any troops in the field.

CAPTURED IN MID-AIR

Lieutenant Spratt, of the British Royal Flying Corps, was stationed at Montmorency. A German airman appeared, and Spratt went up in pursuit of him. After some manœuvring, he managed to get above the German, and trained his gun on him. The German airman made vain efforts to escape, but finding he was "out-flown" signalled that he would surrender.

He commenced to descend, but suddenly altered his tactics and tried to escape. But he wasn't sharp enough for Spratt! The English lieutenant was after him like a hawk after a sparrow. The machines collied, and crashed to the ground together.

Neither of the men was killed, but the German was severely injured. Lieutenant Spratt is a Hendon airman, and was one of the first to volunteer for the war.

Military Fashions

In a number of interesting directions the war is having its effect on present day fashions in dress. Amongst young men khaki shirts and ties have become popular, whilst Union Jack handkerchiefs are all the rage. Ties with pictures of soldiers worked on to them are appearing in England, and socks on which little flags take the place of the usual "clock" are enjoying a run of popularity. Ties bearing the colors of famous regiments are selling in hundreds.

Shot, Plucking a Duck

A sergeant was wounded in the following remarkable circumstances: He was not in the firing line at the time, but was engaged in plucking a duck, off which his commanding officer was to dine. Suddenly a German shell burst close by, and the sergeant was wounded in the head and back, which brought to an end his attack on that duck!

What is Transpiring Among the Soldier Boys at Belleville and Kingston.

BELLEVILLE

Members of the 15th and 49th Regiments who have enlisted, on Sunday morning attended divine service at Holloway Street Methodist church. The turnout was most creditable and the men look well in their new khaki suits. There were upwards of 250 on parade. Rev. A. R. Sanderson, paster of the church, delivered the discourse, and his sermon was most appropriate. The subject of his sermon was: "The Canadian Soldiers and the Soldiers of Europe." It is needless to state the discourse was an able effort and inspiring to all who heard it. Special music was rendered by the choir for the occasion.

The enlisters are all now quartered at the canning factory and are being well looked after.

This morning the men were marched out in a body and drilled upon the old cricket field. They showed efficiency in drill.

It is confidently expected that during this week enlisters who are members of the 39th Battalion, wil: arrive here from Peterboro', Lindsay, Kingston and Port Hope.

A body of the soldiers had a march out this morning. They made a fine appearance in their new new uniforms.

KINGSTON

There is some talk of trying to convert the new "C" Battery, R.C.H.A., into a battery of field artillery.

The riding school on Place de Armes square is used during a part of the day for teaching new buglers of the R.C.H.A.

Captain Dew of the 13th Field Battery, Toronto, has been granted his certificate from the R. S. A. for the rank of Captain.

The militia department at Ottawa are asking for tenders for supplies and barrack services for the next year. All tenders must be in Ottawa not later than March 16th

The machine gun section of the 21st Battalion will be moved from the artillery park dormitories to the Cereal Works. Lack of room at artillery park is the cause of the change.

GENERAL SAM HUGHES AS A SCHOOLMASTER

Some Interesting Reminiscences of a Man Much in the Public Eye—Insisted Upon Discipline

"His brother, Mr. J. L. Hughes, has let the public enjoy an autobiography," said a well known trust company manager, "but some reminiscences from Major-General Sam Hughes himself would make good reading, too. He was one of the best teachers Jarvis Street Collegiate, Toronto, ever had, and before he exchanged the classroom for the Warder sanctum, at Lindsay, in 1885, 50 per cent. of the men of my own age in similar positions in Toronto passed through his hands. Sam Hughes was undoubtedly a great disciplinarian.

"I often wonder what kind of predictions he used to mak to himself about his different pupils, as he sat at his desk, eyeing them over at their lessons, his stern jaws usually going. Sam had a curious habit of nibbling a bit of blackboard chalk in the schoolroom. The good, old-fashioned custom of caning had not gone out then, and we boys certainly dreaded one from the muscular Sam, whose good right arm was always in shape from playing lacrosse. 'I will not cane — to-day,' he would generally inform the class concerning some offending student. 'I might give him more than he deserves. I do not wish to punish anybody in anger.' That sort of thing tended to impress the class as well as the individual delinquent, and was salutary. Sometimes Sam Hughes' temper would get the better of him. One day a boy was caught sticking a pin playfully into the back of the boy who sat in front of him. Now the joker's father had been a drawing-master in the schools, and probably he thought he ought to be allowed latitude. When he saw the cane produced from the desk he made a bolt from the room and into the school yard, with Sam after him. The boy was a school sprinter, but the lacrosse expert was in better training, and the pair—Sam in the rear—went up and down that yard fully a dozen times. Eventually the pupil was lugged, breathless, into the class-room, and after the teacher had exhibited to the grinning class a certain pin of his own that he had been using on the culprit, out in the yard, the latter was induced to stand up and take his medicine. The class saw the 'point' of the joke. 'That and many such incidents, too, were salutary. No matter who the lad was, if he deserved a 'licking' he had to take it."

MAJOR-GENERAL HUGHES

TOO MANY DAIRY BREEDS

Each Community or District Would Gain by Breeding Uniform Type

In this day of organization, one of the first things that farmers' clubs should take up is the breeding of better dairy cattle, and at the same time effort should be made to have a uniform breed of dairy cattle. A community should decide upon one breed and whatever breed the majority selects the rest should use. The aim should be to select a breed best adapted to the natural conditions of the section. Personal likes and dislikes are not half so important as some people think. A farmer will like best what pays him best as a general rule, and the advantages of one breed pay better than fancy of some particular color or shape.

Where there are numerous breeds there will be cross-breeding and cross-breeding leads to nowhere. Where sires of different breeds are bought intot the same community, exchange of sires cannot be made, and very often we find pure-bred dairy sires sold to the batcher just when they are at their best.

In novels the man nearly always marries the right woman. And he succeeds in doing so about half the time in real life.

ROYAL YEAST
MAKES PERFECT BREAD

Splendid Concert By 15th Band

That our popular Regimental Band, under the leadership of Mr. E. R. Hinchey, out-did all previous records at their Sunday concerts was the opinion of the capacity house that greeted them last evening. A vast crowd waited for the doors to open and several hundreds were unable to gain admission. The programme was rendered in excellent style, all the band numbers being of excellent tone and quality. No one number can be singled out for special mention.

A new feature was introduced—the Band Male Choir, in the rendition of "Nearer My God to Thee," which fairly brought down the house with applause. A most difficult cornet solo was rendered in fine style by Mr. A. Wannacott. Mr. G. Stallworthy's vocal solo, "Do We Believe," called for an encore, both being highly appreciated. The Band String Quartette was also an excellent feature and as an encore played "My Old Kentucky Home." Miss May Terwilligar sang "Oh, Dry Those Tears" to the entire satisfaction of the audience. For an encore she sang a stirring patriotic song.

To say the least the concert was grand, and the band deserve the hearty support of every citizen. An effort is being made to have this same programme repeated next Sunday evening.

TELLING AGE OF CATTLE

Teeth and Horns Are the Points to Consider

A cow's age can be estimated quite accurately by noting the appearance of the second set or permanent teeth The first set is known as the milk teeth. A calf is born with a central pair of teeth, and the remaining pairs appear within the first month. When the animal reacches the age of 18 months, the central pair of milk teeth is replaced with larger and permanent ones. These are easily recognized, as they are nearly twice as broad as the first ones. Other pairs appear at intervals of approximately nine months, but this may vary somewhat, according to conditions. When the animal reaches the age of 27 months, the intermediate pair of teeth appears, making four permanent ones, easily recognized by their larger size. The third pair usually makes its appearance at the age of 36 months, and the fourth pair, the two end teeth, at the age of 45 months. If there is any variation, the animal is apt to be older rather than younger than the teeth would indicate.

There is comparatively little change in the teeth of cattle after the fourth year until they have been used a few years. As the animal grows older, the teeth become narrower, and by the ninth year there is considerable space between them. After this they shrink away from each other, become discolored and drop out one by one.

Most of the horn growth takes place the first two years. After this each year's growth is marked by quite a distinct ring, so that the age can be estimated fairly accurately by counting the rings and adding two. The first ring appears at the age of two years.

KEEPING CATS HEALTHY

Don't Refuse Them Some Meat and Bones

Cats are as often killed by kindness as human beings. A little carefully-directed attention can make pussy's life one of comfort and pleasure.

For the cat's drink milk is by most people considered not only the proper but the only one required. This idea, though widespread, is erroneous.

A cat is often thirsty for water, and, when chance offers, will drink it and let a saucer of milk go untasted. Always have a pan of water easy of access to pussy.

Without plenty to drink, pussy cannot spare the saliva used each time she licks her fur and makes it so clean and smooth.

Give your cats plenty of meat and plenty of bones to gnaw. Bread and milk alone do not make a sufficient diet to enable them to retain health and strength. The bones will help keep cleanly teeth. Many people withhold meat from cats, expecting them to complete their bill of fare by catching mice. This is frequently a mistake, for a poor pussy, hungry and faint, has neither strength nor patience to watch long hours until the mouse pops out of its hole.

A cat invariably catches mice because of the ingrained instinct and love of sport, and not for food. For a few minutes she tosses her captive about, and often leaves it in some out-of-the-way place untasted.

ROOSTS FOR CHICKENS

Flat Perches the Best—Birds Should Not Huddle Together

James G. Halpin, a poultry expert, lays much of the blame for mortality among young chickens during the early winter months from roup and similar diseases to a neglect on the part of their owners in not seeing that they are placed on roosts early in the season.

When chickens are left out on frosty nights in an improvised shelter they are sure to huddle close together, and in this way the bodily temperature is raised far above normal, making it easy for them to catch colds which often lead to fatal diseases. Feather development, so important to fowls in the North, is also retarded as a result of these improper housing methods.

The charge that "crooked breast" is a sure result of placing chickens on roosts too early in the season is partially refuted by Mr. Halpin, who believes that by using flat perches most of the danger from that trouble may be avoided. He recommends that two by fours, turned edgewise, be used for roosts where the span to be covered is over eight feet.

An electric machine that works automatically has been invented for stuffing sausages.

NEED OF GREATER PRODUCTION

Great Britain has invested more money in this country than in any other country in the world, outside of the United States. The sum total is no less than $2,800,000,000, being equal to $400 for every man, woman and child.

This money has gone largely to provide railway and other facilities for carrying on our business. It is loaned money, and bears one hundred and twenty millions of dollars interest annually. That interest must be met. It can be met only by exporting surplus products. There is a ready market for all the farm products we can produce over and above our own requirements. A twenty per cent. increase in farm production will cover our interest payments and maintain the country's credit.

This is one answer to the question—Why is it necessary that Canada at this particular time should increase the output of the farm?

It is neither asked nor expected that the farmer should bear the whole burden. The railways and other organizations engaged in the transportation of products must bear their share. The financial institutions of the country must be asked to assist in financing the farmer's business as well as the manufacturer's. The farmers of almost every country in Europe enjoy the advantages of rural credits. Similar facilities are urgently needed here.

The need of supplying the farmer with information that will enable him to distribute and market his products to the best advantage, is becoming more and more urgent. The Canadian Minister of Agriculture recently put the matter in this form: "It is not, therefore, only greater production, but better production and cheapened production, more accurate knowledge of markets and better facilities for reaching them. All these things are tied up together, and it is to these things that not only farmers but Governments, bankers and transportation men have to address themselves."

A clearer understanding of some of the handicaps retarding production will be one of the good results that must grow out of the present campaign. But let not the farmer stay his hand because these and other defects in the economic system have not yet been remedied. Your country needs you, and needs you now.

The loyalty and patriotism of the farmer has never been called into question. He has the opportunity before him to give expression to his patriotism by helping to keep up the food supply of Britain and her Allies. There is a higher motive than that of the pocket merely, and it should be a stronger one. At the same time the business aspect must be recognized. With a food shortage staring it in the face, the world is ready to absorb at good prices all we can produce. The main object of the campaign is to make clear the situation. There is no more reasonable body to deal with than the farmers. Lay the facts before them clearly and fully and they may be relied on to reach a correct decision.

There is no necessity for calling upon the farmer to work harder or for longer hours. Neither it is advisable to dictate to him as to what he should produce nor how he should produce it. The individual farmer must decide for himself how best to meet the demand.

We see the question asked, and asked, too, by agricultural journals, How can the farmer increase the output without putting more acres under cultivation and employing more labor?

That production may to some extent be increased without a corresponding increase in labor is clearly indicated. The best strains of seed will give larger yields than inferior kinds. A strain suited to the soil and climate and sown at the right time will give better returns than seed that is not. Pure seed, plump seed, seed of strong vitality, will increase the yield. These and other important principles are not as widely applied as they might be.

There is an appalling and almost universal waste in the handling of liquid and solid manure in this country. Rectify this and restore to the soil the elements of fertility now lost through lack of care, and production may be increased without any appreciable increase in labor.

If the facts of the case indicate it, as we believe they do, then the farmer is warranted in employing more labor, provided suitable labor can be secured; he is warranted in preparing his land better, sowing his seed better, and in this manner doing what he can to meet the Empire's needs. The man who fails in his duty in the country's crisis, will regret it all his days.

THE BRIBE THAT FAILED

The British authorities have warned newspaper readers to treat with a degree of suspicion interviews with men who have returned from the front. Wounded soldiers have not always a clear recollection of events and the imagination sometimes runs amuck. What nonsense gets into the dispatches is seen in an example dated from London last week. A German prisoner, a corporal Essenhortt, being wounded, was attended by a Canadian doctor. Here is what the dispatch says:—

"He told the doctor in his gratitude for medical treatment that much German capital had been sent to Canada at the command of the government; that three German Canadians whom he named and whose names I understand have been forwarded to Ottawa, controlled a large investment fund. The arguments of the German Chancellor were that firstly the investments would ecertainly cause a friendly feeling between the two countries, and in the event of Canada entering the war as a unit of the British Empire, the funds could be easily and quickly withdrawn through agents in the United States. Prompt measures by the British and Canadian governments in August prevented this."

"I did not think Canada would join Britain," declared the corporal. "I have been five years there working in Canadian banks and large financial houses. We have given you $60,000,000 for the development of your country, and we were sure you would at least remain neutral."

If the corporal actually did talk such piffle, says the Monetary Times, the size of Germany's $60,000,000 investments in Canada must have dwarfed, in true Prussian style, the $2,500,000,000 of British investments here.

CURRENT COMMENT

The question, what will become of Constantinople when the Allies take it, is beginning to be much discussed.

Boston Transcript: "The blowing up of the first ship may have been an accident, and the second a coincidence, but if there's another we shall be forced to the conclusion that it's a habit."

New York Tribune: "The whole German argument is simply an appeal to neutral nations to help her to overcome the military disadvantage under which she labors from the inability of her fleets to keep the seas.'

In every country outside of the war zone the story is the same—decreased revenues, shrinkage in trade, an almost entire stoppage of development. It is so in the United States, in South America, in India, in the neutral lands of Europe.

Secretary Bryan is responsible for the statement that affairs in Mexico are "very bad." The contemptuous indifference with which that thirdrate power continues to treat the United States must be sorely trying to the pride of its executive.

Montreal News: "We need hardly remind our readers, however, that Great Britain, as never before, will seek to strengthen Canada, in common with the other overseas dominions. We have been a source of strength—moral and material—to the Motherland in this world war. We ask no favors in return."

Toronto Star: "The London Morning Post prints a letter from its Constantinople correspondent, dated ten days ago. He says that the Turks have been fed up with accounts of tremendous German victories. The whole Russian army is in retreat, so the Turks are told, and Great Britain is blockaded by German submarines. But the bombardment of the Dardanelles does not quite harmonize with these stories, and the Turks are growing nervous."

The developments of the past week relative to the declaration of a war zone by Germany and the retaliatory declaration by Great Britain of an embargo on all foodstuffs destined for German consumption, have naturally been the overshadowing factor of the week. That the United States is in an extremely delicate position position can not be denied but should power be given to President Wilson to, in turn, declare an embargo against both belligerents, they might come to terms. In the meantime, of course, exports are bound to suffer to a certain extent both in Canada and the United States.

"BAITING" RAILWAYS

In the past, Canada has learned many lessons of importance from the experience of her nearest neighbor, the United States. While the Canadian people are always disposed to act with independence they are not short-sighted enough to reject what may be learned with profit from another country very similar in nature to this one.

A few weeks ago, the Interstate Commerce Commission of the United States, handed out a decision granting to the railway companies in certain sections the right to increase their rates. A few years ago any such decision would have aroused a storm of protest. The recent decision was accepted, generally, in such good part as to suggest that the public is being educated in economic truths.

President Woodrow Wilson, who is one of the leading economists of his day, sometimes hands out hints to the public along with his messages. One of these he handed out when he first mentioned the subject of freight rate increases. He said the prosperity of the country is bound up with the prosperity of the railways. He suggested that the public; in hurting the railways, were hurting themselves. Justice for the railways was justice for the public also.

Big industries, like some big men, are sometimes not popular favor with the general public. They are expected to give evidences of generosity to all and sundry; otherwise, they are roundly condemned. They lend themselves to the critical uses of catooning. Such has been the experience of the United States. But the United States is learning what an expensive habit railway-baiting is, and is quick to profit by the lesson. In the last election, the remarkable gains of the Republican party, once shot and apparently killed because it was believed to be a friend of the "big interests," has been interpreted by all disinterested political experts in the United States as sufficient evidence that the nagging of business just because nagging was popular and not because business was guilty of sin, had begun to pall on the American public.

When an application by the Canadian railway companies for permission to increase their freight rates is before the Board of Railway Commissioners, it is timely to point out that the great danger both the railways and the public have to fear is popular prejudice against the railways. Let such prejudice take form, and it will be extremely hard for justice to be done, with the result that the railways will suffer and the country with them—Montreal Evening News, March 3rd

CHAUFFEUR WITH A RECORD

Civic Employe of Montreal Used to Take Sultan's Wives For Airings

Michael Mairkovsky, former chauffeur of the Prince Selim Effendi eldest son of the late Sultan Abdul Hamid of Turkey, now drives an automobile in the Montreal fire department.

Mairkovsky, who was the driver of the Prince's cars in Constantinople for three years is a Russian, and stands six feet high. He speaks but little French, but this did not trouble the Mayor of Montreal, who was quite impressed with the man's certificates of past service, signed by Prince Selim himself, as well as certificates from other high Turkish officials. Frequently, Mairkovsky took the Sultan's wives out automobiling four at a time. How many wives the ex-ruler of the Turkish nation had Mairkovsky could not say, but he declared it took thousands of guards to look after the Sultan's harem, and his various palaces.

Mairkovsky tells now when he was married in Constantinople his employer, the Prince Selim told him to celebrate and send the bills to him. The wedding and attendant ceremonies Mairkovsky said cost over $1,000, every cent of which was paid for him. The big Russian left Turkey about eight years ago.

BIG THAMES TROUT

They do Not Rise to a Fly—Spinning Bait Best

Trout fishing in the Thames, says London "Answers," might almost be called a thing apart, so far as fishing is concerned.

These fish, which grow to a great size, very rarely rise to a fly, but are usually caught by live bait or spinning bait. At the beginning of the season the angler's success depends in a large measure on knowing where to find individual fish, though later in the year the trout make their way to the weir pools.

The trout varies in color, according to whether it lives in large or small rivers or lakes. The soil over which it swims has also an effect on the general marking of the fish. A trout taken off a weedy, muddy bottom will often be found to be of a rich yellow shade on its sides and belly, while another fish caught even in the same lake, but on the opposite shore, which, say, is rocky and sandy, will be of a steely blue color.

This, of course, is a provision of Nature to make it difficult for the fish to be seen by the herons and other keen-eyed birds who delight in a meal of trout.

The Savage's Brain

The savage found a champion in Mr. W. McDougall, who lectured on "The Mind of Savage Man" at the Royal Institution, London.

Fifteen years ago, he said, he was one of a party of scientists who journeyed to Torres Strait, and in carrying out their investigations they discovered that the head measurement, or cranial capacity, of the natives was just about the same as that of the average Oxford undergraduate.

Mr. McDougall dealt chiefly with his experiences of a savage tribe in the interior of Borneo, who live in houses a hundred yards long, raised on twenty-foot poles, with chambers for each family and a long corridor for the communal life of the joint tenants.

A MARRIAGE MAKER

Lucrative Calling Pursued in Jewish Quarter of London, England

There are scores of Jews who live comfortably in old London simply by contracting marriages between their co-religionists. These marriage-makers are known as "Shadchans." The custom which prevails among the Ghetto Jews of getting married through the agency of a marriage broker is imported from the Continent where Jews consider it immodest for young men to do their own courting without intervention of a "Shadchan."

The Jews who dwell east of Aldgate, have great respect for the "Shadchan," for they never know when they might have to utilize his services. The remuneration of the "Shadchan" usually consists of a fee from the bride and bridegroom, according to their means, and often he also claims a percentage of the dowry as his perquisite.

The business of the "Shadchan" is, apparently, in a very flourishing condition. One of the fraternity informed a writer that a Jewish marriage broker would consider it a bad year indeed if he did not make $2,000. Only recently a "Shadchan" well known in the East End of London died, leaving more than $35,000 accumulated by fees for bringing couples together.

A "Shadchan" sometimes employs curious means of persuasion. He threatens the prospective bridegroom, whom he has introduced to one of his clients, with a breach of promise action should he refuse to marry her. Fortunately, the majority of the matches turn out well, and the most prominent individual under the "Chuppah" (wedding canopy) is the "Shadchan," who is held in high esteem by all assembled on the happy occasion.

The occupation of the "Shadchan" has been a highly respected one for over 1,000 years, and formerly even great Rabbis did not think it beneath their dignity to engage in it as a means of subsistence.

FIFTY YEARS A CABBY

Old Toronto Driver Has Many Interesting Recollections

John Barnes is an old Irishman who has driven a cab in Toronto for fifty years and during that long time he has driven many illustrious personages.

"There was a time when every notable that came to Toronto rode in my bus, and a great lot of royal folks I have carried around," he told an interviewer. "I drove the Marquis of Lorne and his party round town without a footman, and they asked me a whole lot of questions. I drove Lord Dufferin up to open the first Exhibition in Toronto, and it was an awful ride out there in those days.

"Sir John A. Macdonald was one of the best customers I ever had. Hundreds of times I drove him when he was in Toronto. One night he had been giving some campaign speeches in Stratford, I remember well. He arrived here about three in the morning. It wasn't so very long before he died, and he was looking pretty sick that night. A few days later I drove him down to the station, and when I handed him his grip he slapped me on the back and said good bye. That was the last time he was to be in Toronto, and I think he must have known it by the way he said that good-bye."

AID FOR SHIPS IN FOG

Radio Waves and Compass Used In Making Calculations

Wireless apparatus designed to help ships groping in fog to determine their positions soon will be established at Cape Cod by the United States Navy Department. The apparatus has been perfected to such an extent that it will be possible to locate an enquiring ship after measurement of the radio waves by the points of the compass.

A ship enquiring by wireless first might be informed it bore S.S.E., one point E. Upon the receipt of a second message from the same shore station half an hour later, showing a change in the compass points, the navigator, knowing his vessel's speed, would be able to determine his position on a chart with accuracy. The apparatus is of foreign origin.

Graves Full of War Supplies

In scores of cities along the French frontier where Germans "died" by hundreds in the eighteen months before the war, and which were taken by the French, the graves were opened and big supplies of rifles and ammunition produced from the coffins.

Folded paper drinking cups, bound together like a check book, are a novelty for travelers.

It is going counter to popular opinion to say so, but the fact is no lady can properly support a husband by taking in washing.

SAVE YOUR WOOD ASHES

By A. R. Whitson.

Don't waste wood ashes. Apply them, as produced, to acid soils.

Wood ashes contain a large proportion of lime which makes them of value in correcting acid soils. Oftentimes land intended for clover or alfalfa can be better prepared for the crop by a top dressing of fresh wood ashes, either hard or soft wood being equally satisfactory. Such a treatment will be of especial value on marshy and sandy soils.

If not allowed to leach out wood ashes are also rich in potash and so form a home source for a much needed element. Practically all our potash supply has been imported into this country from certain of the countries of Eruope now at war which fact has caused considerable concern with many here who purchase in large quantities.

Whether or not it will pay to use ashes for agricultural purposes depends upon the distance they have to be hauled. When buying ashes the purchaser should satisfy himself that the material is neither adulterated nor full of coal residue.

SEX IN GEESE

I have a flock of geese and would like to keep some of the young females for next year. Is there any way of telling the sex?—J. F. M. Essex., Ont.

While there is a strong resemblance between the gander and goose, there are certain characteristics which are well defined. The head of the goose is smaller and narrowed than that of the male, while the latter has a thicker neck and general masculine appearance. Perhaps the most noticeable difference is in the voice, that of the female being coarser and harsher than that of her mate. The same rules hold good with drakes and ducks of all varieties, and it is well to familiarize oneself with the cry of the two sexes, for in birds whose feathers are alike in male and female, it is easy to overlook the other points of difference, but the cry of each sex is so dissimilar as to make an infallible distinguishing sign.

Most of the mysterious things are fairly easy of explanation, but the little man's desire to dance with large women has never been cleared up.

Fraser in March Rod and Gun is no lap dog story but an account of a desperate encounter which two adventurers in the far north had with a band of ferocious huskies from which they narrowly escaped with their lives. "That Cub of Patrick's" is a somewhat amusing tale—though Pat himself found the experience very provoking—of a captured bear cub that proved one too much for his captor. REICHSBANK GOLD

(New York Herald)

"Where does the Imperial Bank of Germany get the gold which, according to its weekly statements, has constantly increased since the beginning of the war?"

The question is often asked, and the reply generally given is that since Germany's ports are blockaded and her export trade has gone to smash, the gold must be drawn from circulation within the empire.

This is correct. Just how it is done was explained the other day by Sir Edward Holden in his annual address to the stockholders of the London City and Midland Bank. Through the establishment of war banks the country has been flooded with inconvertible paper money and the gold thus driven out of circulation enables the Reichsbank to keep up a front before the world.

A Stagecoach Wedding

By DONALD CHAMBERLIN

I was standing in a room crowded with men and women in evening dress when I heard a cheery feminine voice near me exclaim:

"Why, Tom!"

"What luck!" responded a young man, with blond hair, parted in the middle, and his chin held up by a very high collar.

"I don't know a person here," said the girl, who had spoken first.

"Nor I. I would rather have met you than own a gold mine."

"Isn't it nice to meet some one you don't expect, but whom you wish to meet?"

Happy smiles illuminated the faces of these two youngsters, whom it made me happy to look at. Indeed, there was one especial reason for my enjoyment of this pleasant surprise, for it reminded me of one that had occurred in my own family years before.

In the sixties—I refer to the last century—my father, then a young man, went out to Denver to grow up with a new town. Albert Reeder had gone there a few years before with his family for the purpose of building a stamp mill on Clear creek, up in the mountains, and had become interested in the extraction of gold from ore. My father, who was as poor as a church mouse, found work in the service of Mr. Reeder and was sent up to one of his stamp mills, where he soon became superintendent.

Mr. Reeder thought my father one of the brightest young men in the world and was ready to do anything for him till he discovered that his employee had a love affair with his daughter, Agnes. Then he suddenly turned against him. The trouble was that Reeder had a prospect of soon becoming very rich and had begun to cherish expectations of Agnes marrying either a duke or a prince or something of that order.

The young couple were in a peck of trouble in consequence of the old man's refusal to consent to their union. Of course the matter rested with Agnes My father couldn't do anything without her concurrence, and she was indisposed to break with her father. But her father must have been uncertain of her, for he ordered her to get ready to go back east to stay awhile with an aunt. Agnes seemed disposed to yield to his commands. She wrote my father that he might come down from the mill and say goodby to her. He did so and there was a very affecting scene between the lovers.

Inasmuch as Agnes was making her preparations to go east and it was supposed that she was bidding her lover a last farewell, no opposition was made to the two youngsters seeing as much of each other as they liked. They spent a whole evening together, during which Agnes told my father that if she married him her father would disinherit her and that she would lose a very large fortune. Her mother was bitterly opposed to her marriage with my father, for it was she who was determined to exchange the wealth she would inherit for one of those rundown titled foreigners who are in the market for American heiresses.

My father was the more cast down because, while Agnes talked about her mother's wishes in this matter, he was not quite sure that Agnes herself was not inclined to the plan of marrying a title and was accustomed to do pretty much as she pleased.

However, there was nothing for my father to do but submit, and he said goodby to Agnes lugubriously. One thing he knew—if she was disposed to obedience he could not move her, and if she was not disposed to obedience her parents could not hold her.

My father, notwithstanding his employer's opposition to his marriage, was continued in his position and the morning after his farewell left for the mill. He always rode on the outside of the coach and climbed on top, where he resigned himself to brooding over the severest blow one can receive, whether young or old—separation from a mate.

From Denver the road westward extends for fifteen miles to the base of the mountains, then rises abruptly. The morning was bright to every one on the coach except my father, and those inside seemed to be having a hilarious time. My father thought nothing of this, for stagecoach travelers always become acquainted, and he supposed they were enjoying each other's companionship.

They were approaching the base of the mountains when a voice from below called out that Jim Harkaway—that was my father—was wanted inside. Nothing was further from his inclination, and he refused to descend. But the request was repeated, and at last he climbed down and entered the coach. All looked at him expectantly, and one of the men said smilingly:

"Every one loves a lover. Cheer up, young man! If you must have a girl here's one for you."

He pointed to an old lady on the back seat. My father looked at her wonderingly, and suddenly she threw back a veil and exposed the smiling features of Agnes.

This meeting between my father and mother came back to me as I looked upon the young couple and saw their expression of pleased surprise, only I fancy my father's was far more radiant.

There was a clergyman in the coach, and the wedding took place then and there.

Lightship No. 4

By M. QUAD

Copyright, 1914, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

One day thirty years ago it was reported to the Trinity board, which has charge of all lights on the coast of Great Britain, that a shoal had made in the English channel about nine miles due east of the Lizard. At the spot indicated there had been thirty fathoms of water ever since a British ship went to sea, and the board, of course, argued that there had been a mistake. It was a fishing craft which had reported the shoal and found only fourteen feet of water over it, and a craft was sent out at once to make an official investigation. What had happened was this: It was a bowlder strewn bottom, and two or three old wrecks had drifted together and piled up on each other until a dangerous obstruction had been formed. It was as if a great rock had been heaved up from the bottom, and the board must guard against the danger without delay.

Thirty years ago the diver's dress was not what it is today, nor could men handle explosives under water as they can now. After two or three vain attempts to clear away the wrecks the work was left for a storm to accomplish, and meanwhile lightship No 4, under Captain Crox, was moved around from Mounts bay and anchored near the spot and notice given to mariners.

That night it was the captain's watch from 8 till midnight. A gale had come up. It had come 10 o'clock when a sudden hail reached the lightship. The captain was aft and his mate forward, but he knew at once that the hail came from seaward. It was not so dark but that one could see a ship 300 feet away, even though she had no lights aboard.

As soon as a port fire was ignited the sea was lighted up for hundreds of feet around in a ghastly way, and both men looked for the craft they supposed to be near by. They looked in vain till the signal was nearly finished. Then a ship's yawl, driving right up in the teeth of the gale, hove into sight. She was without a mast or sail or oars, and the only figure in her sat in the stern sheets, and his arms and legs were bound around with ropes.

The man was bareheaded and dressed as a landsman, and as he drove past within twenty feet of the rail they had a look square into his eyes, and the agony on his face made them shudder. They started to throw him a rope, but as the coil swung into the air they remembered that, being bound, he could make no use of it. The yawl and the man went straight to windward and in a couple of minutes were out of sight, and the men found themselves all a-tremble. Captain Crox was full of indignation over the crime of sending a man afloat in that manner and of pity for the victim, when his mate touched him on the arm and shouted in his ear:

"If I was ashore, captain, all the money in England would not bribe me to set foot on this deck again!"

"What's the matter with you?" was called in reply. "It's only a bit of shore villainy that we must report."

"It's nothing that's happened ashore, sir. Did you take notice that the craft was driving right in the teeth of the gale? It wasn't a live man in that boat. She was going to windward with a ghost, and I'd give the bit I have in the bank if I'd not seen it."

It was agreed between them that nothing be said to the other watch when they turned out, and they went on duty without knowing or suspecting that anything out of the way had happened.

While carrying the thing out with pretended indifference, Captain Crox was, as a matter of fact, pretty thoroughly upset over it and on turning in found he could not go to sleep. He had been lying on his bunk and turning the thing over in his mind for an hour or so and the gale was still howling and the lightship bouncing about when he realized from the movement of the watch that they had been hailed. He was out of his bunk and on deck just as one of them lighted a port fire, and you can judge his feelings when he saw the former scene re-enacted. There were the yawl and the man, and the boat slowly forged past them and disappeared to windward.

There was no more sleep for anybody on board No. 4 that night, and next day, when the gale broke and the tender came alongside, all demanded that they be put ashore at once. The captain was as badly rattled as the others. They were guyed and ridiculed, of course, but they stood so firm that the tender brought off another crew, and they were relieved from duty. A new crew was assigned, but the man and the boat appeared to them twice in one night and drove them ashore, as they did the others.

A third crew went out and for two weeks began to prepare to remove the wrecks. Some progress had been made when a three days' gale set in from the north, and there were more wrecks than had been known for ten years before. For two days the lightship hung to her anchors, though having a signal of distress out after the first day, but when the gale abated she had disappeared. She had been swept down the channel and out to sea, and a week later she was passed bottom up more than 300 miles away. The same storm broke up and removed the wrecks, and there was no longer need to keep a light at that spot.

While the crusade against tuberculosis is doing pretty well, the efforts to discourage war have had no success at all worth mentioning.

ADVANTAGES OF THE ZEPPELIN IN WAR.

The value of the airship in warfare has been much underrated for the reason that its powers and limitations are imperfectly understood. It is true that when it goes abroad in daylight and in a clear sky it his small hope of escape when when attacked by hostile aeroplanes. In such a case its bulk, which enables it to raise heavy weights and to fly for days without alighting, is a serious disadvantage. But the commander of an airship, if he has studied the limitations of his craft, will not expose himself to attack in daylight; or, if compelled to do so, will go out under the guard of a patrol of aeroplanes An airship, hovering from dawn until dusk behind its own lines, protected by guns and by aeroplanes, can make a detailed and continuous survey of the enemy's position.

At night, with engines silenced, and flying so high perhaps that it is hidden among clouds, an airship can steal over the hostile territory without being seen or heard. Of course the enemy may dtect its presence by means of searchlights; but it is not easy for a searchlight to find it, especially above the city, where the dense atmosphere reduces the penetrating power of the light.—Claude Grahame-White, on "Aircraft in War," in The Youth's Companion.

CHAPTER IV.

Preparing lint, reading reports, following on the map the chess-board of the war with my little movable flags, prayers for the success of our side, talking of the events of the day: such were our occupations. All our other interests lagged, one question alone occupied us: When and how will this war end? We ate, drank, read, and worked with no real concern, only the telegrams and letters from Italy seemed of any importance. Arno was not given to letter-writing, but his short notes always gave me the cheering word that he was still alive and unwounded. Letters were irregular, for the fieldpost was cut off during an engagement, and then my anxiety and suffering were indescribable. After each battle, the list of the killed filled me each time with fresh terror, as though my loved one had held a lottery ticket, and might have drawn the doomed number.

When, for the first time, I read the list and found no Arno Dotzky among them, I folded my hands and prayed softly: "My God, I thank thee." But with the words still in my ears they suddenly grated upon me. Was I perhaps thanking God that Adolf Schmidt and Karl Muller, and many others had been slain, but not Arno Dotzky? Naturally those who prayed and hoped for Schmidt and Muller would have been glad to read the name of Dotzky instead of those they dreaded to find. And why should my thanks be more pleasing to God than theirs? That Schmidt's mother and Muller's sweetheart should break their hearts, this had made me rejoice? And I realized the selfishness of such thanksgivings, and presumptuousness of our prayers.

On the same day a letter came from Arno:—

"Yesterday we had another hard fight, and, unfortunately, again a defeat. But cheer up, darling Martha; the next battle we shall surely win. It was my first great engagement. To stand in a thick shower of bullets gives one a peculiar feeling. I will tell you about it by and by: it is frightful. The poor fellows who fall on all sides must be left in spite of their cries—but such is war. When we enter Turin to dictate terms to the enemy, you can meet me there, for Aunt Marie can take care of our little corporal until we return."

Such letters formed the sunshine of my existence, but my nights were restless. Often I awoke with the horrible feeling that at the very moment Arno might be dying in a ditch, thirsting for water, and crying out for me. I would force myself back to my senses by imagining the scene of his joyful return, which was much more probable to be my experience than the contrary.

Bad news followed thick and fast. My father was deeply distressed, first over Montebello, then Magenta; and not he alone, for all Vienna was disheartened. Victory had been so certain, that we were already planning our flag decorations and Te Deums. Instead, the flags were waving, and the priests chanting in Turin. There they were thanking God that he had helped them to strike down the wicked "Tedeschi."

"Father dear, in case of another defeat, will not then peace be declared?" I asked one day.

"Shame upon you to suggest such a thing!" he silenced me. "Better that it should be a seven years', even a thirty years' war, so that our side may be the conqueror, and we dictate terms of peace. If we fight only to get out of it as quickly as possible, we might as well never have begun."

"And that would have been by far the best," I sighed.

"Women are such cowards! Even you, whom I grounded so thoroughly in principles of patriotism and love of fatherland, are now quite willing to sacrifice the fame of your country for your own personal comfort."

"Alas. . . . it is because I love my Arno so well!"

"Love of husband, love of family, all that is very good, but it takes the second place to love of country."

"Ought it?"

• • •

The lists of fatalities grew apace, and contained the names of several officers personally known to me, among the rest the only son of a dear old lady whom I greatly respected. I felt I must go and comfort her. No, comfort her I could not; I would only weep with her. On reaching her house I hesitated to pull the bell. My last visit there had been on the occasion of a jolly little dancing party, and Frau von Ullmann, full of joy, had said to me: "Martha, we are the two most enviable women in Vienna. You have the handsomest of husbands and I the noblest of sons."

And, to-day? I still, indeed, had my husband, but who knows? Shot and shell might make me a widow any minute. There was no answer as I stood and rang at the door. Finally a head was thrust out of the window of the adjoining apartment:—

"There is no use ringing, miss, the house is empty."

"What, is Frau von Ullmann gone?"

"She was taken to the insane asylum three days ago," and the head disappeared.

I stood motionless, rooted to the spot. What scenes there must have been! What heights of agony before the poor old lady broke into madness!

And my father wished that the war might last thirty years for the welfare of the country! How many more such mothers would there be then?

I went down the stairs shaken to the depths. I started to call on another friend, and on the way I passed the Relief Corps storehouse, for there was then no "Red Cross" or "Convention of Geneva" to distribute supplies, and the people were all eagerly offering comforts for the sick and wounded. I entered, feeling impelled to empty my purse into the hands of the committee. It might save some poor fellow—and keep his mother from the madhouse. I was shown to the room where the contributions were taken. I passed several rooms where long tables were piled with packages of linens, wines, cigars, tobacco, but mostly mountains of bandages, and I thought with a shudder, how many bleeding gashes it would take to use them all—and my father wishing that the war might last for thirty years. How many of our country's sons would then succumb to their wounds?

My money was received thankfully, and my many questions were answered, comforting me much to hear of the good being done.

An old gentleman came in, offering a hundred florin bill, and saying: "Allow me to contribute a little toward the useful work. I look on all this organization of yours as the most humane. I have served in the campaign of 1809-1813, when no one sent the wounded pillows and bandages. There were never enough surgeons and supplies, and thousands suffered a hideous death. You cannot realize the good you are doing." And he went away with tears in his eyes.

Just then there was commotion outside, and throwing open the double doors, the guard announced: "Her Majesty, the Empress!"

Lovelier than in her court costume or beautiful young sovereign, who in her simple street dress appeared even lovlier than in her court costume or ball dress.

"I have come," she said gently, "because the Emperor writes to me from the seat of war how useful and acceptable is your work." She examined the rolls of linen. "How beautifully done it is," she exclaimed. "It is a fine patriotic undertaking, and the poor soldiers——" I lost the rest of the remark as she passed into another room, so visibly content with what she was seeing.

"Poor soldiers!" These words sounded strangely pathetic in my ears. Yes, poor indeed, and the more comforts we sent them the better. But the suggestion that ran through my head was: "Why not keep them at home altogether? Why send these poor men into all this misery?"

But no, I must shut out the thought, for is war not a necessary thing? I found the only excuse for all this cruelty in that little word: "Must."

I went on my way and passed a book-store. Remembering that my map of the war region was worn to shreds, I stopped in to order one. A number of buyers were there, and when my turn came the proprietor asked: "A map of Italy, madam?"

"How did you guess it?"

"No one asks for anything else, nowadays." While wrapping up my purchase, he said to a gentleman standing by, "It goes hard nowadays with writers and publishers of books. So long as war lasts no one is interested in intellectual matters. These are hard times for authors and booksellers."

"Yes, this is a great drain on the nation, and war is always followed by a decline in intellectual standard."

For the third time I thought: "And father, for the good of the country, would have the war last thirty years."

"So your business suffers?" I asked.

"Not mine alone, madam. Except for the army providers, all tradesmen are suffering untold losses. Everything stands still in the factory, on the farm, everywhere men are without work, and without bread. Our securities are falling and gold rises in value, while all enterprise is blocked, and business is being bankrupted. In short, everywhere is misery, misery!"

"And there is my own father wishing——" I found myself thinking as I left the store.

My friend was at home. The Countess Lori Griesbach in more than one respect shared the same lot with me. Her father was a general, and like me she had married an officer. Her husband as well as two brothers were in the service. But Lori's nature was very light-hearted. She had fully convinced herself that her dear ones were under the special protection of her patron saint, and she was confident that they would return. She received me with open arms.

"So glad to see you, dear; it is good of you to come. But you look worried. Any bad news?"

"No, thank God, but the whole thing is so terrible to me."

"You mean the defeat? Oh, do not think about that, for the next news must be victory."

"Defeat or victory, war is horrible," I said. "How much better if there never were a war."

"Oh dear, what then would become of our glorious military profession?"

"Then we should not need any."

"What a silly way for you to talk," she said. "How stale life would be with nothing but civilians. I almost shudder at the thought, but, fortunately, that would be impossible."

"Impossible?" I said. "But perhaps you are right, or it would have long ago been changed."

"What do you mean?"

"I mean that armies would have long ago been disbanded. But no, one might as well expect to prevent earthquakes."

"I cannot understand how you can talk so. For I am rejoiced that my Louis has this splendid chance to distinguish himself. And for my brothers, too, it is a good thing, for promotions are so very slow in times of peace. Now they have all opportunities."

"Have you received any news recently?" I interrupted.

"Not for some time, but you know how very uncertain the post is. After an engagement they are too tired to write. But my mind is easy, for both Louis and my brothers wear the blessed amulets. Mamma put them round their necks herself!"

"Can you imagine two armies meeting, when every man wears an amulet? Tell me; if the bullets are flying here and there, can they all be deflected into the clouds?"

"I do not understand what you mean, dear Martha, and your faith is so lukewarm. Even your aunt complains about you."

"But why can't you answer me?"

"Because you are jesting at what is sacred to me."

"Jesting? Not at all. I was simply suggesting a reasonable argument in things that are above us."

"You well know that it is a sin to argue and trust your own reason in things that are above you."

"Yes, my dear, I will be quiet. You are right. Logic and reason are dangerous. Reflection and research are of no use. All sorts of doubts torment me and I try to answer them, but find only pain. Were I to disbelieve in the necessity of war I could never forgive those who——"

"You mean Louis Napoleon? Oh, what an intriguer he is!"

"Whether he or another. . . . but I must try to believe that men do not cause wars, that they break out of themselves like nervous fevers, and the flames of Vesuvius."

20 Years of Growing Business

Our Anniversary

20 Years
MARCH 7, 1895,
TO MARCH 7, 1915

WITH the appearance of this advertisement we begin the TWENTY-FIRST YEAR of our Business in the City of Belleville, and for the measure of success that has been ours, and made possible by the hearty co-operation of our many friends, we wish to express our appreciation and thank our ever increasing patrons for the continued confidence reposed in our store during all these years.

Beginning in a very small way, it has been our good fortune to experience a continual growth of business until now our annual turn-over of Staple and Fancy Dry Goods and Ladies' and Children's Garments is surpassed by no store in Central Ontario.

"Not how Cheap," but "How Good" was one of the maxims on which our business was built, knowing from experience that the memory of quality remains long after the price is forgotten; and as we look forward into our Twenty-First Year we feel that if we have served you well in the past we should be able to render better service for the future, and our ambition is not only to receive but also to merit a continuation of the liberal patronage conferred upon us in past years.

Never were we in a position to serve you as well as now, for twenty years of the closest personal attention to business has taught us many lessons, and our staff, some of whom have been studying your requirements for ten, fifteen, and even twenty years, are here to serve you, as only long experience can serve.

Again thanking our many friends for their patronage of the past, we pledge you our Whole Hearted Service for our Twenty-First Year, and remain,

In the early part of last evening a rumor became freely circulated about the streets, that an enlister, a member of the 15th Regiment of this city, had been drowned. It was alleged the victim had fallen off the C.N.O.R. bridge, at the foot of Front street, and as a result met a watery grave. There was apparently no grounds for the report as no one was seen to fall into the surging stream and no one is missing. The report caused considerable excitement and anxiety on the part of many.

FELL UPON THE WALK

A young lady, named Miss Sharpe, whose home is on Front street, was on Saturday evening the victim of a painful accident. She was walking along Front street, when from some cause she slipped and fell in such a manner as to injure her spine. The unfortunate lady was carried into a store and a physician summoned. Her condition was such that she was removed to the hospital, where her case was diagnosed. It has been ascertained that the injuries Miss Shrape sustained, whilst painful in their nature are by no means serious.

CALLED KAISER COMRADE

Bold Infantryman Also Asked Him for Cigarettes, and Got Them

LONDON, March 6.—The Daily Mail quotes the Hamburger Nachricten as saying that when the Kaiser was on the western front he dropped his handkerchief and an infantryman picked it up. The Kaiser gave him some cigarettes and the man said "Thank you, your Majesty." Thereupon the Kaiser said: "Oh, you need not call me your Majesty. Here you can simply address me as comrade."

Another infantryman in the neighborhood heard this and promptly called: "Comrade Wilhelm, suppose you give me some, too? The Kaiser laughed and handed over the rest of his cigarettes.

BELLEVILLE CHEESE LEADS IN ENGLAND

The Trade Bulletin of Montreal, in its issue of March 5th, 1915, gives the following particulars regarding a sale of Belleville Cheese in London, England.

"This season has been noteworthy for the high prices of Canadian cheese in England, and a case is mentioned of the sale of a choice lot of twenty boxes of prime, mellow Belleville cheese in London by a Tooley Street House at 97s. 6d. per cwt. It is referred to as the highest price ever obtained for a lot of Canadian cheese in the English market. At the same time 92s. per cwt. was the other highest sale reported in the London market. Reports such as the above are very encouraging to all those in the Belleville district who are interested in the production and manufacture of cheese.

On the 1st of March the supply of available cheese, both in Great Britain and Montreal was very small, that in the latter place being but 4430 boxes as compared with 11,059 boxes on the same date last year. It is to be hoped that the farmers may have the opportunity of participating in the high prices which the new cheese is sure to bring."

DEATHS.

MRS. C. N. FULTON.

Many friends and admirers will regret to hear of the death of Mrs. Charles N. Fulton, of 5 Yeomans Street, which occurred last evening at the Belleville Hospital, after a brief illness. Mrs. Fulton, (formerly Miss Jeanie Shaw of Montreal), was favorably known in this city as a promising soprano singer, her voice being heard in several of our churches, always to good effect. Ever ready to assist in a vocal sense, and always an agreeable companion, Mrs. Fulton will be greatly missed. The body was forwarded to Montreal today, accompanied by Mr. Fulton.

HOCKEY.

FAST GAME FOR TONIGHT

The City League Championship, which carries with it the Y.M.C.A. Cup will this evening be definitely decided, when the Belleville Hardware and the Midgets meet in the final game. This game will no doubt close the hockey for this year, and with a good sheet of ice a fast game is expected. The Midgets have strengthened their lineup by two new men, and they are confident they will be able to pull down the two goals lead the Hardware have piled up, while the Hardware are depending on the same team, to do the trick again.

WEALTH FROM THE WAR

A Bright Idea has Brought Gold to Many a Merchant

Many new fields of enterprise were opened without any warning when the war broke out, and many persons have been enabled to seize a chance and make a comfortable sum.

There is a prominent hardware dealer in Birmingham who has hitherto been successful in the manufacture of gas burners. A man of less initiative must have followed fortune in his accustomed groove. But at the first hint of war a plant was hurriedly bought and erected, metal was obtained, and since then buttons for every ally, and sympathetic smaller buttons for his children's suits, have been produced in amazing quantities and scattered far and wide at a gratifying profit.

Makers of patriotic postcards have reaped a rich harvest, all the more satisfactory because hitherto it was the practice of Britons to buy patriotic cards in Germany to a large extent. Anyone who has chancel upon a trifle that looks useful for a soldier has not gone without reward.

A simple article, modest in itself, is the think for an enterprising person of alert intelligence to look for. A boot tag, a pipe lighter, a patriotic brooche for someone left at home—these are the lines that make a small fortune in time of war says the London Daily Mail. Many men are working with their wits and turning the passing hour into gold.

In other spheree the war has been made a source of revenue. The war dentist has fitted many a recruit to serve the King, and the war photographer has caught many of these warriors in all the radiance of a new smile.

Incognita

By F. A. MITCHEL

It so happened that King Caspar of Walkaria and Queen Bertha of Zingerland inherited their kingdoms when very young. Their domains joined, but they had never met, for during their childhood their fathers had been at continual warfare. When these two kings died—about the same time—the cabinets of both countries decided to make a match between the young king and the young queen.

Queen Bertha would not consent to the match without some acquaintance with the man she was to marry. She therefore insisted on their meeting in one of her palaces near the border line between the two kingdoms, the king to be attended by three men and the queen by three women. To this the king gladly assented.

Before leaving for the rendezvous the queen said to a maid of honor, who was also her bosom friend: "I wish you to exchange places with me at this meeting, you to personate me, I to personate you. This will be easy, for I have purposely limited the number of my attendants so that there are only two besides ourselves to be in the secret."

When the king met the substitute queen, whose name was Catherine, he was well pleased with her, for not only the queen herself, but her attendants, were beautiful women. Bertha had charged Catherine to treat her with some severity lest by her accustomed deference she betray the secret. During the first interview Catherine spoke to Bertha somewhat sharply, and the king's notice was turned from the spurious to the real queen, who bore the reproof with becoming meekness. Indeed, King Caspar was charmed that the maid showed no temper whatever, while the reproof, which seemed to be uncalled for, prejudiced him against her supposed mistress.

Queen Bertha had gone to the meeting with no other object than to overlook her future husband incognita. But from the moment she saw him she was much smitten with him and resolved to win him if possible. She directed Catherine to lose no opportunity to show her severity while in the king's presence. Catherine, who was an excellent actress, played her part remarkably well. Did she order the queen to do her any service, no matter how speedily the duty was performed, the spurious queen would reprimand her. At such times the real queen would cast down her eyes, bearing the injustice with angelic sweetness.

One morning Catherine sent Bertha to the royal garden for some flowers and when she returned scolded her for not getting the kind she wished. Nevertheless she handed several of the choicest to King Caspar, whose brows were knit at the harsh treatment of the maid of honor. Taking the gift, he selected the most beautiful flower, a rose, and handed it to Bertha.

As might have been expected had the play been a reality, Catherine after this, with the queen's concurrence, redoubled her harshness to Bertha, who availed herself of the opportunity to show herself an angel of patience. This excited the king's sympathy and admiration for the poor maid to such an extent that he resolved to break off the negotiations.

When Bertha considered the fruit ripe for plucking she contrived to meet the king in a corridor in the palace as if by chance. He stopped her and, despite her pretended efforts to get by him, forced her to chat with him. This she did with her eyes bent upon the floor in well affected modesty. While they were together a door opened and Catherine came out into the corridor. With fire in her eye she ordered Bertha to her room, then said to the king:

"If this is a sample of your majesty's constancy I think we had better go no further in this matter."

"As your majesty pleases," replied the king with a formal bow.

Thus was the king turned from one woman to another. Queen Bertha and her maids of honor returned to Zingerland and King Caspar to Walkaria. But the king did not remain there long before he took a step which he must take with great care, since his failure to marry the queen of Zingerland had made him unpopular in both kingdoms. He sent a confidential friend to Zingerland to learn if he could marry one whom he supposed to be the queen's maid of honor.

King Caspar had no hope that he would be permitted the woman of his choice. The queen had shown herself insanely jealous of her maid of honor and would doubtless refuse his request with some harsh accompanying message. During his messenger's absence he walked the floor impatiently and with anxiety, waiting for his answer.

His emissary returned with a surprise, announcing that the maid was the queen and the queen was the maid. Without losing a moment the king mounted his horse and, summoning his escort, rode night and day to the capital of Zingerland and, appearing before Queen Bertha bespattered with mud from his quick ride, knelt before her and kissed her hand. When he looked up he saw her face bent down upon him filled with merriment.

Turning his eyes to a maid of honor standing by the queen, she saw Catherine looking at him with the same amused expression.

And so it was that the two kingdoms were united and there were no more wars.

Carry a laugh with you and you will find a welcome almost everywhere—with the exception, possibly, of a funeral.

UNDER WATER AND IN AIR

Lieut. Porte Studied Both Branches of Warfare—Likes Flying Best

On the shoulders of Squadron-Commander Porte, the young Irish aviator, rests much of the responsibility of guarding London from attack by the Kaiser's aircraft. He is in control of the Naval Flying Base at Hendon Aerodrome.

When aviation first loomed on the horizon of practical affairs, Commander Porte was a distinguished officer in the submarine service. Flying gripped his imagination, and he and a few brother officers built a glider and experimented with it at Portsmouth, sustaining many bruises, and running up formidable bills for repairs. These experiences made the young naval officer more determined than ever to take up aviation, and eventually he journeyed to France and learned to handle an aeroplane at Rheims.

Having to resign from the navy owing to ill-health, he devoted himself entirely to the science of flying and speedily built up a reputation as a daring pilot. During the last two or three years he has flown in company with the cleverest British and continental pilots at Hendon Aerodrome, and the great 100-horsepower machine carried him to victory in many air races.

LIEUT. PORTE

On one occasion Commander Porte was the victim of a dastardly outrage. An unknown person placed a bolt in the engine of his aeroplane, which almost resulted in the young Irishman meeting with a terrible death. Commander Porte took his aeroplane aloft with a passenger, and reached a height of 500 feet before the crippled engine smashed itself to pieces in mid-air. The lieutenant kept his nerve, and by skilful airmanship succeeded in gliding down in safety. The engine of his machine was minutely examined, and it was found that a strange bolt had been inserted into one of the cylinders. The piece of metal was not part of the mechanism of the engine, and had obviously been inserted by some person who bore a grudge against the pilot of the machine.

Commander Porte gained prominence just before the war by trying out a new type of aeroplane, with a view to flying across the Atlantic from Newfoundland to the coast of Ireland. He is probably the only naval man on record who has served his country under the water and in the air, for he has come from the submarine service to the air service.

Russian Military Marvel

The new Napoleon that the war produced is oddly enough a Russian. He is General Russky. It was Russky who led the Russians against Lemberg, and through his strategy and perseverance the city fell. General Russky is sixty years of age, but a man of aggressiveness and power. He is beloved by his men, who regardless of the hard driving he gives them, worship him.

His own feats on the battlefield—he is a veteran of two wars—have made him one of the most famous of Russians. He served as a lieutenant in the Russo-Turkish War, and was decorated for gallantry. When the Russo-Japanese War broke out he was sent to the front as chief of staff of the second Manchurian army.

The Kaiser a "Big Noise"

Pharaoh is described in the Old Testament as "a great noise," said Ven. Archdeacon Cody at a war prayer service in Toronto. "There has been more than one 'great noise' since that day. No matter how great may be the military monster, the great noise will pass away, but the word of the prophet will remain."

Preserving Railroad Ties

In Canada last year about 10 per cent. of the cross-ties purchased by both electric and steam railways were given a preservative treatment to retard decay. The practice is a fairly recent one, as is seen by the fact that in 1910 practically no ties were treated at all, and that the percentage of treated material has increased steadily since that time. The treatment is most profitable when applied to the harder, stronger woods that if used untreated would decay before the end of their mechanical life.

American Sympathy Strong For Britain

We Have Never Been Closer in Spirit, With Our Mother Than at Present

TORONTO, March 8.—That the present war might be followed by a lasting peace, was the hope expressed by Dean George Hodges, of Cambridge, Mass., in a sermon in Convocation Hall yesterday morning. The greatness of war has declined; it has lost its glammor, and today no nation was willing to take the responsibility for starting a war. Each tried to shift the blame on the other. If it were left to the people there would be no war; it was governments that made war, and when the people obtained more power war would cease.

Dean Hodges referred to the strained relations that had at times existed between Canada and the States during the past hundred years, and which had been settled by arbitration, as showing that there was no real desire for war.

"Never have we of the United States been closer in spirit to our mother country than we are at present," said Dean Hodges. "In these present days of deep distress the heart of the American people goes out to Great Britain. With all our intentions of neutrality, with all our endeavors to maintain a balanced judgment, and notwithstanding the fact that our population is made up of representatives of all the States of Europe, we follow with a sense of personal concern the fortunes of the people whose blood is in the veins of most of us, and whose language and institutions and ideals are the same as ours."

Nine Automobiles Destroyed by Fire

Gasoline Tank in Garage, However, Was Saved by Firemen

TORONTO, March 8.—A disastrous fire at Joseph Meyers' garage, rear of York street, near Wellington street, at 1 o'clock this morning destroyed seven taxicabs and two touring cars. The damage is estimated at $10,000. The building was not damaged to any extent, most of the damage being done to the cars. Four of these belonged to Meyers, while the others were the property of people who had rented storage space. About half the loss is covered by insurance.

Nobody was in the building when the fire broke out, Meyers and a couple of the chauffeurs having gone out to get a midnight meal. A driver for another garage while passing along Wellington street, in his car, noticed the blaze and turned in an alarm. The firemen managed to keep the blaze away from the tank under the sidewalk in which about a hundred gallons of gasoline is stored.

DYNAMITE UNDER RAILWAY BRIDGE

Kingston Lad "Who Found Some on Street" Detained by Police

KINGSTON, March 8—Seven sticks of dynamite were found this afternoon secreted under some planking over the railway crossing of the C. P. R. and G. T. R. at Cataraqui street. Whether it was placed there to do harm is not known. The police are working on the case. A lad who had dynamite in his pocket is being detained. He says he found a stick on Princess street.

BUSINESS LIKE SESSION OF THE CITY COUNCIL

A Number of Recommendations Adopted—City Pool Rooms to Close Every Night at Eleven O'clock

A business like session of the City Council was held last evening. As a result of a bylaw passed pool rooms will be compelled to close at 11 p.m. every night instead of at 12 o'clock.

Those present were Mayor Panter, Aldermen Woodley, Platt, Smith, Duckworth, McFee, Wallbridge, St. Charles and McCurdy.

After reading and confirming the minutes of the last meeting the Council went into committee of the whole on reports, communications, etc., Ald. Platt in the chair.

The accounts recommended to be paid by the various committees were passed and the following recommendations were disposed of:—

That the corporation of the City of Belleville contribate the sum of $3,000 towards the construction of a Children's Shelter.

Ald. Wallbridge said that the Executive Committee had signified its intention that this was the amount it felt able to contribute.

Mayor Panter stated that the amount named in the resolution was all that the City Council felt they were able to contribate to the erection of a Children's Shelter. If this was not satisfactory to the Children's Aid Society it could be referred back for further consideration. The ratepayers, not the Council had to decide the matter.

Ald. Smith moved that it be referred back to the Executive and ascertain if this amount is satisfactory to the C. A. Society.

The motion of Ald. Smith prevailed.

That no person or persons be allowed to use any of the departments in the City Hall without permission from the chairman of the Market and City Property Committee or the Mayor.—Carried.

That the matter of having a new roof put on part of the city gas building be left in the hands of a committee composed of the chairman of the Gas Committee and chairman of the Executive Committee.—Carried.

That a bylaw be prepared to authorize the closing of pool and billiard parlors and rooms in the city of Belleville every night at eleven o'clock instead of 12 o'clock, as at present.—Carried.

City Engineer Evans presented a report estimating the cost of a trunk sewer on Coleman and Moira Streets from the river mouth to Elm street, as follows:

Macadam excavation	$ 2,146.20
Rock Excavation	5,972.60
Sewer Pipe, 20 inches	4,560.00
Lateral pipe, 6 inches	361.00
Labor and cement for connections	550.00
Manholes	595.00
Excavation for laterals	2,680.00
Engineering and contingent	1,000.00
	$17,861.80

Catherine Street branch sewer from Yeomans to Coleman street—$6,018.75.

The committee arose and reported. The report was received and adopted.

GOOD ROADS.

Mr. L. E. Allen addressed the Council and asked the members of the Council to attend the Good Roads convention which is to be held in Toronto. It was desirable that all members of the Council attend this convention, which would prove interesting and instructive.

Mayor Panter said a delegation from from the city would attend the convention. His Worship thanked Mr. Allen for speaking to the Council in reference to this matter.

Mr. Archibald asked on behalf of the Orange Societies the privilege of decorating Front and Bridge streets for the celebration here July 12. He said there would be some thousands of visitors in the city that day. The matter was referred to the Council for consideration.

INQUIRIES.

Ald. St. Charles asked when Front Street would be cleaned.

Ald. McFee said it was frozen rather hard at present.

INTRODUCTION OF BYLAWS.

Ald. Wallbridge introduced the following bylaws:

A bylaw to provide for borrowing $5,448.85 upon debentures to pay for the construction of a sanitary sewer on Front street, from and including lot No. 58 on the east side of the street to the corner of Pinnacle, Foundry and Mill streets.

A bylaw to amend original bylaw No. 410, Chap. 6 of the Consolidated Bylaws of the City, relative to pool rooms.

After the first reading of the bylaws the Council went into committee of the whole on bylaws, Ald. Smith in the chair.

The bylaw to amend Bylaw No. 410 relates to the closing of pool rooms at 11 o'clock every night.

The bylaws were passed through their various stages and numbered 1970 and 1971.

Ald. Platt moved that the Chairman of Public Works attend the Good Roads convention to be held at Toronto—referred to Public Works committee.

Ald. Smith moved, seconded by Ald. McFee that the gaslights south of Dundas street be discontinued at once.

Ald. Platt stated that he would like to see the condition of the street lighting before the motion was passed.

Ald. McFee said the gas and electric lights were not far apart and there was light enough without having the gas lights. This would effect a saving to the city.

Ald. Smith contended that there was no necessity to continue the gas light.

Ald. Wallbridge said that a committee appointed to look into this matter had not reported.

The motion was withdrawn for the present.

Moved by Ald. Smith, seconded by Ald. Platt, that the Board of Railway Commissioners be requested to rescind their order No. 19481, dated June 2nd, 1913, and that application for interswitching facilities between the three railways be made, namely, the G.T.R., C.N.R. and the C.P.R. as shown on plan submitted by the City Engineer.—Carried.

UNFINISHED BUSINESS.

Under this head Ald. Wallbridge stated there was no proper foot crossing near the canning factory and this should be remedied.

Mayor Panter said that whatever the city does, it should relieve the railways from doing anything in this matter.

NOTICE OF MOTION.

Ald. Smith gave notice that he would move that the assessment of the city be published.

Council adjourned.

MASSACRE OF YOUNG TURKS WILL FOLLOW CAPTURE

Fall of Constantinople Will Completely Discredit the Germans—The Views of an Old Turk—As Soon as First Battleship is Sighted at Capital the People Will Surrender

PARIS, March 8.—A man who belonged to the school of the old Turks for a long period of years and is in close touch with what is happening in Turkey, discussed with men to-day the aspects of the situation in the Dardanelles as it appeared to be developing.

"From what I know of Turkey and the Far East", he said, 'the fall of Constantinople will mean the complete discrediting of Germany. Hitherto the people of Constantinople and throughout the Empire have been fed on lies, and once they realize the truth, as they will do when Constantinople is forced to capitulate, they will be furious with the Government that misled them. A massacre of the Young Turks will be one almost certain result, and I have for my own part little doubt that as soon as the first battleship is seen from Constantinople the people will take things into their own hands, and white flags will be seen flying from the windows of every house in town.

"Presumably the Allies will establish a committee of control and keep the administration of things in their own hands; but there will clearly be need of native administrators. It is too soon yet to speak of the men who are fitted for such work; but they exist—men who have neither been dominated by the Young Turks, nor mixed up in their schemes."

BRITISH PRISONERS ILL-TREATED IN GERMANY

(Canadian Press Special)

LONDON, March 9.—The Morning Post says information it has received about the ill-treatment of British prisoners in Germany is revolting. The British press has been recommended to say as little as possible on this matter lest their protests should aggravate the prisoners' lot, but the Post calls on the Government to make the German Emperor understand that he will be strictly called to account for these barbarities.

Fatal Error of A Madoc Man

W. W. Hudgins Takes Carbolic Acid in Mistake for Brandy

MADOC, March 9.—(Special.)—Willis W. Hudgins, a well-known resident of this village, is dead as the result of a mistake through which he took a large dose of carbolic acid. He had complained of not feeling well when he got up, and went down town to the drug store, where he made a purchase of four ounces each of brandy and carbolic acid. He explained to the druggist that the wanted the carbolic acid for use in wash water, owing to the presence of smallpox in the neighborhood. Returning home, he retired and was left undisturbed for some little time, but when Mrs. Hudgins went to call him she was surprised to find that he was dead. The partially opened bottle of carbolic acid and an unopened bottle of brandy told the story of the terrible mistake. Mr. Hudgins was 52 years of age. Until five years ago he conducted a successful mercantile business, but then retired to a farm near Madoc.

MUST PROTECT FOREIGNERS

(Canadian Press Special)

WASHINGTON, March 9.—Representations made to General Carranza in Mexico City that he must protect foreigners there, indicate that the United States Government is fully informed of the situation and considers it serious. General Carranza has verbally assured Consul Silliman that General Obregon has not prevented food coming into the city of Mexico or shipped any out of it. Carranza has promised to reply to the American representations.

SHIPS OF ALLIED FLEET SILENCE BIG FORTS

Climax of Two Days' Bombardment by Some of Most Powerfull British and French Warships at the Dardanelles—Five are Struck by Turkish Shells, But Only Slightly Damaged

LONDON March 9.—(Special.)—The batteries in three forts—Dardanos, Roumeli, Medjidieh Tabia, and Hamidieh I. Tabia—defending the narrows of the Dardanelles, have been silenced. The reduction came as a climax of two days' bombardment by some of the most powerful ships of the Franco-British fleet. Official announcement of this fact was made by the British Admiralty last night. Five of the ships of the allied fleet were struck by Turkish shells during the attack, but no serious damage was done to any of them One of the ships struck was the super Dreadnought Queen Elizabeth.

Two of the forts whose batteries have been reduced to silence are the most powerful defending the straits: Hamidieh I. Tabia on the Asiatic side, part of Chanak works, and Fort Roumeli Medjidieh Tabia on the western or European side.

Following is the text of the announcement:

"The operations against the Dardanelles are progressing, and are being favored by fine weather. Vice-Admiral Carden reports that on March 6 (Saturday) the Queen Elizabeth, supported by the Agamemnon and the Ocean, began the attack upon forts Hamidieh I. Tabia and Hamidieh 11. by indirect fire across the Gallipoli peninsula, firing at 21,000 yards (about 12 miles). These forts were armed as follows:

"Hamidieh 1: Two 14-inch guns, seven 9. 4-inch guns.

"Hamidieh 11.: Two 14-inch guns, one 9.4-inch gun, one 8.2-inch gun, four 5.9 guns.

"The Queen Elizabeth was replied to by howitzers and field guns. Three shells from field guns struck her, but did not cause any damage.

Despondent Because Of Recent Losses

Tailor Drank Carbolic Acid and is Found Dead in Store

TORONTO, March 8.—The loss of a large amount of money in real estate speculations is stated to have been the cause of the suicide yesterday of Louis Brown, a Jewish tailor, residing at 595 Huron street. He drank a quantity of carbolic acid and was found dead in his store at 410 Queen street west, by his brother-in-law, Joseph Pomerantz, 531 Queen street west. The Chief Coroner was communicated with, but he decided that an inquest was unnecessary. A friend of the dead man told the police that Brown owned quite a few houses and had another tailor store on Bloor street west. Lately, however, he had lost a huge sum on various properties and feared that he would be unable to meet his debts. He had threatened to take his life upon several occasions.

Mine Exploded Under Trench

(Canadian Press Special)

LONDON, March 9.—The semi weekly report from the headquarters of Sir John French, issued today, says, the situation on that part of the front held by the British forces is unchanged. In certain sections advantages have been gained, the report continues. This result was materially assisted by successful mining operations.

On the night of March 5th a mine was exploded under a German trench southeast of Ypres. Several of the enemy were killed. The crater was occupied temporarily by our troops and the enemy's trench on either side was rendered useless. The enemy's artillery has been more active than usual, but the effect has been slight.

COMPLIMENT PAID TO RUSSIANS ON ENTERING THE DARDANELLES

(Canadian Press Special)

LONDON, March 9.—The Russian Government has prohibited, except on special permit, all exportation of food and forage.

The Berlin Vorwaerts expert says the composition of the British fleet at the Dardanelles, particularly the presence there of the Queen Elizabeth, indicates that Britain has added two squadrons of new ships to her navy since the war began, and entertains no anxiety regarding her superiority in the North Sea. The same writer thinks the difficulty of forcing the Dardanelles without heavy land forces may be exaggerated and that the operations are no bluff.

A Morning Post despatch from Petrograd says a graceful compliment was paid Russia, and the solidarity of the Allies was emphasized when the Russian cruiser Askold was invited to take the lead in the advance into the straits, where ordinarily the flag of the nation having the largest squadron would take precedence.

AMSTERDAM DESPATCH CLAIMS SIGNAL DEFEAT OF BRITISH ARMY

(Canadian Press Special)

AMSTERDAM, March 9.—An official statement from the Turkish War Minister says the British lost 400 men in a recent battle at the head of the Persian Gulf. The statement follows: Three battalions of British infantry, with two quick-firing field guns, two mountain guns, one machine gun section and one squadron of cavalry attempted on March 3rd to attack our positions in the region of Ahwaz (in Khuzistan). After a counter attack by our troops the British fled in disorder to their ships, leaving four hundred dead or wounded. Among the dead were one British major and four other officers. We captured three guns, 500 rifles, 200 horses and a great quantity of Red Cross material. Our losses were insignificant.

Three Years for Passport Fraud

Charles Ruroede Punished—The Chief Conspirator is Caught in Scotland

NEW YORK, March 9.—(Special.)—Charles Ruroede, one of the six persons indicted in an alleged conspiracy to defraud the United States in obtaining false American passports for German reservists, pleaded guilty today to one of three indictments against him and to the second count of another.

District Attorney Marshall, in recommending a light sentence for Ruroede, announced that Hans Adam Von Weddell, who was also indicted and who fled the country, had been captured, and would be returned here. He said that Von Weddell was the chief conspirator in the case.

Federal Judge Neterer, before whom the cases are being tried, sentenced Ruroede to serve three years in the Atlanta Penitentiary. The maximum penalty that could be inflicted under the indictment is twelve years.

In imposing sentence the Judge said the offense of using false passports "placed a cloud upon every citizen of the United States travelling abroad.

EX-SULTAN FREE PLANS RETURN

LONDON, March 9.—(Special.)—Ex-Sultan Abdul Hamid, imprisoned by the Young Turks when they seized the reins of government, is free, according to a Central News despatch from Bucharest. He has surrounded himself with numerous friends and plans to execute an unexpected coup, the Bucharest correspondent cabled.

He plans, it is said, a dramatic return to the Turkish capital. Since he was forcibly removed from the throne on April 27, 1909, he has dropped out of sight. Vague rumors came from time to time that he had been assassinated. Other stories had him imprisoned by the Young Turks on a small island near Constantinople.

FROM GERMAN SOLIDERS' DIARIES

Citations of Barbarities Quoted as Betraying a Lack of Civilized Restraint in War

The German language is rich in expressive compounds, but it sorely needs a new one—Kultur-Barbaren. The term is so self-explanatory that I need hardly add that it may seem either the most civilized or barbarians or the most barbarous of civilized folk. It is a term that should not be rashly applied to any nation. That it applies to modern Germany may be readily proved by German evidence.

Section 75 of the German Military Regulations enjoins soldiers to keep diaries. Thousands of these have been taken by the French. In these journals as simple memoranda one may read of the slaughter of wounded and prisoners, the massacre of civilians as a screen against gunfire, and, finally as a consummate effort in frightfulness, the burning alive of noncombatants. The revelations cover a dozen widely scattered villages, are made by privates, subalterns, and officers, from every quarter of the empire—Prussia, Bavaria, Saxony, Baden, Silesia. Eventually a great mass of these documents of Kultur-Barbarity will be published. Meanwhile Professor Joseph Bedier of the College de France has published and annotated forty typical documents in a little brochure called "Les Crimes Allemandes d'apres des temoignages Allemands," (Paris: Armand Colin.) Professor Bedier has substantiated his case with the most scrupulous care. He usually gives photographic facsimiles of the document, always transcriptions in the original German, so that no reader is dependent solely on the translations. He included nothing which could be interpreted as the act of an irresponsible soldier. These are deeds for which the Germany army an Germany collectively must answer. The display is so simple that, as Professor Bedier justly remarks. Its truth must be apparent where there is an eye to see, the implied moral ignominy plain wherever there is heart to feel.

The evidence may be presented under terse and grim rubrics:

Killing Prisoners

Here the capital document is General Stenger's famous order, which deserves presentation in its original form. It is dated Aug. 26:

Von heute ab werden keine Gefangene mehr gemacht. Samtiche Gefangene werden niedergemacht. Verwundete ob mit Waffen oder wehrols niedergemacht. Gefangene auch in grosseren geschlossenen Formationen werden niedergomache. Es bleibe kein Feind lebend hinter uns.

Oberleutnant und Kompagnie-chef, STOY; Oberst und Regiments-Kommandeur, NEUBAUER; General-Major und Brigade-Kommandeur, Stenger.

The German is so energetic as hardly to need translation. Yet at the risk of attennating an extraordinary literary monument I proceed:

"From today on no prisoners are to be taken. All kinds of prisoners are to be slain. Wounded, whether armed or defenceless, slain. Also prisoners in larger close formations are to be slain. Let no foe remain living behind us."

On page 29 of Professor Bedier's pamphlet will be found the evidence that this order was actually promulgated and in some cases acted on. It is not a Prussian instance; General Stenger's brigade is from Baden. It is safe to say that this is the most remarkable military paper in the annals of war. Slaughtering prisoners is no new thing. Barbarians usually do it. The world has had to wait for a race of Kultur-Barbaren to find a nameless deed phrased with such businesslike felicity.

Hear next Subaltern Klemt of the First Company of the 154 Infantry Regiment as he writes at length to his home paper, the Silesian Jaursches Tageblatt describing a glorious victory of Sept. 24 near Hannonville, Lorraine. Klemt depicts the vigorous resistance of the French with something like admiration. At length they were driven back, except for the groaning wounded. But let Klemt speak:

"Our men of softer spirit give the wounded a bullet of deliverance, the others hack and stab as they may. * * * They lay wounded and asking quarter. But whether lightly or severely wounded, our brave riflemen saved for the Fatherland the expense it must have incurred for numerous foes."

Has a great principle of military economy ever been more succinctly praised? Klemt closes with a poem and his Lieutenant, whose honorable name, de Niem, I should be reluctant not to record, signs the article as correct. The editor of the Jaursches Tageblatt supplies the headline, "A Day of Honor for Our Regiment." It may be questioned if anywhere in the world outside of Germany such news could have been printed to the honor of the nation. The entire article is fac similed in Bedier, Pages 32 and 33.

Killing prisoners is the most venial act we have to consider. Noncombatants even in barbaric epochs have enjoyed at least a relative and theoretical immunity. Our next rubric is

Screening an Attack With Captive Noncombatants

On this point let us consult Oberleutenant A. Eberlein of the Bavarian Army, who writes to one of the best newspapers in the world, the Muenchner Neueste Nachrichten, issue of Oct. 7 concerning an exploit of his own in the town of Saint-Die. The date of the event is late in August. He describes the street fighting and its difficulties, then continues:

"We took three other civilians. Then a good idea occured to me. They were set on chairs in the middle of the street. Wringing of hands and weeping on their side, a couple of blows with the rifle stocks on ours. Gradually one becomes terribly hard."

The fire from the windows slackened and the fight went better. The Oberleutnant continues:

"As I later learned, the reserve regiment which entered the town more to the north had had experiences like ours. The four civilians which they made sit in the street were killed by French bullets. I saw them myself stretched out in the street near the hospital."

This is war as practiced by a German officer and tacitly approved by one of the best German newspapers.

I fear to weary the reader with typical instances of mere uncomplicated slaughter of civilians, yet for the sake of completeness we need a rubric:

Massacre of Civilians

Here we may learn from Paul Spielmann of the First Company, Reserve Battalion, Infantry Brigade, Prussian Army of what happened near Blamont, Sept. 1.

"The blood splashed on all the houses and what faces we saw It was awful. Soon they were all dead together, sixty in number, and buried right away. Old women fell, fathers, and a pregnant woman. Three children had clasped themselves together and were killed. The altar and the church roof were demolished. They had telephone connection with the enemy. Shot for shot. Thunder for thunder."

Even more graphic is Philip of Kamenz, private of the 178th Saxon Regiment, when he tells of a burned village north of Dinant.

"At the entrance of the village lay about fifty citizens, shot for having fired from ambush on our soldiers. In the course of the night many more were shot, so that we could count over 200. Women and children, lamp in hand, were compelled to witness the horrible spectacle. Then we ate our rice amid the corpses, for we had eaten nothing since morning."

And unsigned diary deads as follows:

"Langviller (Aug. 22) Village destroyed by the Eleventh Battalion of Pioneers. Three women hanged on the trees. The first dead I have seen."

The last entry in this book is of a week later, and for the credit of human nature one is glad to note a suggestion of pity—the very rarest note, incidentally, in this entire literature:

"So we destroyed eight houses, with their inhabitants. In one of them two men were bayoneted with their wives and a young girl of 18 years. I could have been sorry for her, her look was so innocent. But one could not control the excited band for in such times they are not men, but beasts."

The reader will for himself distinguish between the beastliness which is, unhappily, latent in all humanity and that calculated beastliness which is the subject of German Army orders.

Even in massacre there are degrees. Burning alive is perhaps the worst. The reader by this time will not be surprised that the German dogma of frightfulness has been enforced by this certainly efficacious means. Our last rumric then is

Burning Civilians Alive

Private Hassemer of the Eighth Corps writes, at Sommepy, Marne:

"3-9-1914. A frightful massacre. Village burned down, the French thrown into the burning houses. The civilians all burned with the houses."

It is well that our last piece of evidence should close with an expression of compassion. A Saxon officer of the 178th Regiment, Twelfth Army Corps, writes in his diary under date of Aug. 26:

"The beautiful village of Gue d'Hossons seems to have been burned, though innocent. A bicyclist is said to have fallen, his gun going off. Immediately they, (the Germans,' shot that way. They simply threw the male citizens into the flames. It's to be hoped that such horrors may not be repeated."

Such is the testimony the German army gives of itself. Few words of comment are needed. From the point of view of civilization, such acts bespeak simply the most bestial form of cruelty. From the point of view of barbarism, these are normal, legitimate and most efficacious forms of warfare. As a matter of course, barbarians slay at random, sparing neither age nor sex, and burn when that is the handiest way of killing. The really important question is, How has what passed for a highly civilized nation reverted to these methods of barbarism?

The answer seems plain: "Germany as a whole has never been really civilized. Germany, Christianized three centuries after the rest of Western Europe (Prussia, five centuries,) has never had the Teuton barbarian tamed out of her. Exceptionally she has produced cosmopolitans, the latent barbarism has persisted in the stock as a whole. Centuries late in education and political stability, Germany has suddenly sprung into bewildering power. Technically at the head of the world, spiritually she is still of the seventeenth century. The veneer of civilization is specious, but thin over the stalwart barbarian core. Any perturbation awakens the essential Teuton. More plainly speaking, a German is as civilized as any one as long as he is not excited. But civilization consists precisely in exercising self-restraint and following the code of humanity even in excited states. Excitement is the test of civilization. How Germany has responded to this test let the distinguished officers and humble privates who wrote these diaries witness. The same lack of civilized restraint has been shown in the conduct of her diplomacy and in the apologetics of her scientists, philosophers and men of letters. Scratch a German—I mean of the Prussianized type only—and you find a barbarian. Or, more accurately, without scratching such a German, you will find a Kultur-Barbar.

I do not wish this analysis of the soul of a great nation to take the form of empty abuse. The very practical question arises. What is the civilized world to do about it? Plainly, what Germany needs is real civilization. How can she get it? In the issue which she herself has courted it seems plain that she cannot get it until she has been so beaten that there is no more will to war in her. After defeat she must listen not to her incorporated Kultur-Barbarity as expressed in the present empire, but to the large saving remnant of really civilized Germans. We must not forget that there were humane spirits among those who set down these scenes of wanton carnage. But such spirits simply cannot prevail until the German war machine and the social order it implies have gone to the scrap heap. To scrap the war machine is the most necessary protective precaution for the civilized world, the most efficacious remedial preliminary or Germany herself.

One more consideration. The present outburst of furor Teutonicus has been liked to that great migration of the Teutonic barbarians that overthrew the Roman Empire. There is this ominous difference; The Teutons of the Volkerwanderung admired the civilization they were assailing. They wished to share in its benefits, they admitted its superiority. They may be better regarded as a sort of boisterous immigrants than as conscious destroyers. But in modern Germany there is none of this respect for the superior civilization they are assailing. The Kultur-Barbaren are complacently contented with their own Kultur. They have no desire to learn, they come to teach and to dominate. So today the Anglo-Latin world faces a peril far graver than that which confronted the Roman world in the days of Alaric the Goth. It is a peril to which the United States, as an inheritor of Anglo-Latin culture, cannot remain indifferent.

The evidence presented in this article is drawn solely from German sources. It represents a fraction of the small fraction which Professor Bedier has selected from thousands of similar documents in the possession of the French Government. It is sufficient to tell us how Germany makes war. It tells us also what those who are supporting Germany at war are really supporting.

KINGSTON

Lieut. Rackham, formerly of the 3rd Dragoons, has been appointed signalling officer of the 39th Battalion, Belleville.

Te 21st Battalion spent the day at the ranges in Barriefield. Dinner was served at the ranges and the men enassistant caretaker at the Armouries joyed themselves in the sunshine.

New "slop" sinks have been placed in the artillery park dormitories for the use of the right half battalion of the 21st.

The 26th Battery when mobilized will occupy a part of Regiopolis College. The building now belongs to the Militia Department, and as the staff of the division are not ready to move in, the building will be used by the artillery.

The new dormitories at the R.M.C. are now in use, and one half the Cadets, numbering 44, are quartered in the same. The old dormitories are still occupied by the other half of the Cadets.

A number of recruits for the 26th Batetry have been secured in Deseronto, Belleville, Gananoque and Kingston, and in a few days these will be brought together and the battery organized. Local military headquarters is still awaiting for the appointment of the officers for this battery by the militia department at Ottawa.

Major Malley, of Deseronto, has been transferred from the reserve of officers and placed on the active list again. The Major has been given command of the 9th Brigade in succession to Lt.-Col. Rathbun.

Sergt. Williamson of the 14th, has succeeded the late Charles Jackson as assistant caretaker at the Armouries. The sergeant has served for nearly 20 years in the 14th, and it is said will make a capable caretaker.

THE CARRIE DAVIES CASE

Dear Sir,—

I have been asked my opinion of the verdict in this case. Sympathy secured the verdict of acquittal. Looking at the evidence from a legal point of view, I think the verdict should have been at least manslaughter, or possibly, murder. Life is carefully guarded by our laws. The only legal ground which could have been suggested to secure an acquittal was, that when she did the act, she was emotionally insane. Those persons who have closely watched the Harry Thaw case will remember the vast array of alienists who gave evidence. These gentlemen were experts in lunacy. They disagreed, and the result was that Thaw was committed as a lunatic, and his life saved. Looking at the evidence in the Davies case, I do not think Carrie Davies was emotionally insane when she killed Massey. The common sense meaning of emotional insanity is, that a person takes the life of another because at that instant the impulse to do the act was overpowering.

Alienists strain this point in such a manner that after a careful perusal of their testimony one's mind is left in utter confusion as to what they really mean. In this case Mrs. Massie was momentarily expected to arrive at home. When Massie approached the girl in the bed room he could have overcome her feeble resistance if he had chosen so to do. He did not resort to violence when the opportunity arrived. His son was in the house. He let the girl go. The girl knew the hour when Massie would return home. She could have gone to her sister's and remained there, or had her sister or some girl friend remain with her at the house. She knew well, had Massie desired to injure her he had had the opportunity. She could not have anticipated any attempt upon Massie's part, when his wife was momentarily expected, and his son was in the house. She deliberately went to the son's room, got the revlover, carefully loaded each chamber, replied to the man who came to the house with the paper, knew well that with the revolver she could have shot Massie to pieces if he attempted any violence. She was thus protected from him. When he approached she did not wait to see what he might do, but deliberately fired once; failing to hit she fired again, and killed Massie. Under this evidence there was no such emotional insanity proved which could reasonably cause a verdict of acquittal. I sympathize deeply with the unfortunate girl. No one could possibly feel any sympathy for Massie. But if human life is to be so cheapened by this suggested "emotional insanity" it will not be long before we shall have in Canada many similar cases.

I was present many years ago at the trial of George Brayden (a lawyer) for murder. Chief Justice Galt was at the bar, and was counsel for Brayden. One Henderson was an intimate friend of Brayden, and his wife. He was very frequently at their house. Henderson seduced Mrs. Brayden and destroyed Brayden's home. Some weeks elapsed. Henderson left Cobourg. One day the steamer Arabian arrived at the port. Brayden and a friend stood on the wharf close to the steamer. Henderson put his head out of the bar window and said: "How are you, George?" Brayden drew a pistol and killed Henderson. The plea of emotional insanity was not raised, but the circumstances so influenced the jurors that a verdict of acquittal was pronounced. In Brayden's case the plea of emotional insanity might have been raised, but was not.

Yours truly,

JOHN J. B. FLINT.

THAT JOSTLING CROWD

Editor Belleville Intelligencer.

Dear Sir,—Permit me to use a little of your valuable space to offer a few suggestions to the public of this fair city.

I will simply contrast conditions, as it was my privilege last evening while waiting for the doors of our Opera House to open for the eager, anxious throng with a similar condition it has been my privilege to witness in a Western Canada city.

Instead of jostling, impatient crowd, each one apparently trying to get in ahead of the other, with no regard for the fair sex or the remonstrances of the officials in charge—such an unruly state of affairs would not be tolerated in the Western Canada city I refer to simply because each citizen constitutes himself as a custodian of precedence and without any compulsion on the part of police or officials. The waiting crowd simply line up two by two in military order, forming an unbroken line along the street, the late comers always falling in at the rear, and when the doors are opened, you can readily appreciate how quickly and orderly such a crowd, who are content to wait their turn can be admitted.

I have seen crowds admitted to performances in this way extending for miles with not even a sign of jostling or crowding because everybody respects his neighbour and is willing to give him a chance.

Another feature, which to my mind, shows very poor respect to the performers, is the practice of the impatient ones who want to get up and run out during the rendering of the closing piece.

Would it not be a grand sight, and call for our highest type of citizenship to see a crowd as I have intimated patiently waiting for admittance, and then at the close, when our National Anthem is being played, for every individual to stand with respect and not move until the last note has been sounded. Such a sight, I am sure, would not only inspire those who take part, but would, I am sure, show the public spirit of the citizens of Belleville to be of a high order, not to say anything of the respect and appreciation we could all show the members of our worthy XV. Bandsmen which is their due.

Thanking you, yours, etc.,

B. E. SILLS.

WON DEATH HE DESIRED

An individual tragedy in the midst of the many of war is pointed out in a Strassburg dispatch to the Frankfurter Zeitung in connection with the death on the battlefield in Galicia of Heinrich Dammann, an attorney and notary of Metz, about whom there was much press comment some time ago.

Dammann was formerly a Councillor of the War Court at Metz. A few years ago he was obliged by the unwritten law of the army to give up his position as a Lieutenant of Reserves by reason of his refusal to accept a challenge to a duel. The case was at that time discussed extensively in the German press, as well as in the Reichstag, and the correctness of Dammann's conduct throughout was shown.

Immediately upon the beginning of the war Dammann re-enlisted in the army as a Lieutenant-Colonel. He had charge of his company in an attack by storm on the Russian position in Beskids and met his death at the head of his company.

In one of a number of youthful poems written by Dammann, and published in 1889, when he was only 15 years old, he expressed the hope that some day he might die "the finest death, on the battlefield", in a war that Germany would carry on with Austria as her ally.

WAIT TILL HE GETS HOME

One of the recruits with the first contingent, who promised to send half his pay to his wife, had been remitting a certain sum regularly each month for some time. His wife, learning from a friend that a more convenient plan would be for her "man" to leave half his pay with the paymaster and have it sent through official channels, as was done in other cases, ordered her husband to follow this course.

A day or two ago she received the first remittance under the new plan from Ottawa. When she opened the envelope she found $16. She looked at the money and her face clouded over. "What's the matter; ain't it right?" asked a friend who was present.

"It isn't that it's not right," said the woman; "but all along he's been telling me his pay was only $20 a month. Wait till he gets home; if the Germans don't kill him, I will."

THE ADAMS COMPANY PLEASE GOOD AUDIENCE

Minnie L. Sample, Soprano; Helen Grant Cello; Winnifred Hamilton-Bent, Reader; and Crawford Adams, Violinist Do Valiant Work

The audience that crowded the Y.M.C.A. gymnasium last night was well satisfied with the evening's entertainment. Mr. Adams, literally and practically made his instrument talk, while his readiness to please individuals, made him the favorite of the evening. Mr. Adams has every class of music, from Grand Opera to "I wont be home until morning," at his command, Southern Melodies and "Tipperary," being exact opposites, the greatest silence prevailing while "Down upon the Swanee River," "My Old Kentucky Home," and others similar trend were rendered, while "Tipperary" acted as a vent for the feelings of the spectators. The college boys were hugely pleased with the slang phrases, and rhymes, that Mr. Adams gave on the violin.

Miss Bent was always a pleasing change, and both of her selections were encored. "Rose o' Plymouth Town" is a catchy little story of the Quaker settlements, while "The Initiating of Mary Elizabeth," is a comic story of every day child life. Then, as encore, Miss Bent gave "Foolish Questions," to a highly amused audience.

Miss Grant, with her 'cello, and Miss Sample, with her fine soprano voice, lent largely to the pleasures of the evening. Miss Sample also gave "The Island where Babies Grow." Following is the programme:

Grand Trunk Pacific

OTTAWA, March 8.—The Grand Trunk Pacific Railway is severely slated by Mr. H. L. Drayton, Chairman of the Railway Commission, in a judgment just handed down. He intimates that the Grand Trunk Pacific, in order to assist a townsite proposition in which it is interested has refused proper railway accommodation to a rival nearby town.

The judgment rose out of the application of the town of St. Louis, Sask., for better railway accommodation. An order was given some time ago for better accommodation for St. Louis, but despite this order freight for St. Louis has been dumped at Hoey, a station three miles away. It has been claimed that in many cases such freight has been stolen.

The chairman intimates that the G. T.P. is interested in developing the townsite of Hoey and declares that the Board cannot permit business to be done in such a manner. The Board orders that the company establish a box car station with siding for the use of the people of St. Louis.

"JOE" AT IT AGAIN

Joseph Martin, M.P. for St. Pancras, England, one of the most Radical Socialistic constituencies in England, who is better known in Canada as "Joe Martin," not being able to control affairs in England, Premier Asquith having declined his advice as to the manner in which affairs should be conducted in that part of the Empire, has returned to his native heath, Canada, and has been assigned by the Liberal Leader, Sir Wilfrid, the organizer, management and general manipulator of the Liberal party in the West, has commenced his work in Vancouver, B.C. A telegram from that city of the 7th inst. informs us that there is quite an "exciting time" at an election for the Mayoralty, in Vancouver, the Mayor elected at the general election in January last having been unseated on a technicality. At the nomination for the selection of a new Mayor there were, the telegram says, three gentlemen put in nomination: "Ex-Mayor L. D. Taylor, who was elected in January but disqualified on a technicality; Alderman Hepburn and W.T. Whiteway. One of the spicy episodes of the campaign was an attack against Taylor by Joseph Martin, M.P. for St. Pancras, London, who challenged Taylor to sue him for libel when he charged that Taylor was getting funds for campaign from people interested in the re-opening of the restricted district and Chinese gambling. Taylor entered a suit for $25,000 damages on Friday, and on Saturday night Martin published in his newspaper, the Journal, an abject apology and retraction of statements made against Taylor. The election will occur next Saturday."

This is just the policy that may be expected from "Joe" whenever a general election takes place. The West must watch him, for "Joe" is never at peace with himself and friends, unless at war with his opponents, and like the Germans, not particular as to the methods adopted to win.

CURRENT COMMENT

The Brockville Times, in commenting upon the acquittal of Carrie Davies, for shooting Massey, says, "It is not a good precedent." That may be; but is it not a "good precedent" not to be forgotten by men when attempting to ruin an innocent girl who may be a servant in his own house?

The Times of Ceylon on the 18th of January, 1915, reporting the sale of a German prize steamship, the Australia, remarks inter alia: "It may be recalled that the Australia made a bold bid to escape capture by adopting a different color to her original, and also by flying the Danish flag.

The sale of wheat or rye flour on Fridays, Saturdays and Sundays in Berlin has been forbidden. The authorities have discovered that thrifty housewives who have found it unnecessary to use during the week their entire supply of bread cards have been using the surplus to lay in a reserve stock of flour.

Kingston despatch: "The 38th and 39th Battalions of the third contingent, C. E. F., may not be mobilized in Ottawa and Belleville. In a month it will be possible to put the men under canvas and use Petewawa as the training ground. The order for mobilization has not yet been issued, and may be held back until the camp can be prepared." This scarcely seems possible after the large expenditures in Ottawa and Belleville.

Sir Gilbert Parker submits the following reports as having an important bearing on the question of the use of the neutral flag raised in connection with the Lusitania and the Orduna: The chief engineer of a British steamer captured by the Karlsruhe states he was landed at Teneriffe on the German steamship Crefeld, and adds: 'This steamer hoisted the Spanish flag when nearing Teneriffe, as it was known that there were British cruisers around there."

The war supply scandals are not all to be found on this side of the Atlantic. A fine of $50 was recently imposed on an English dealer who sold socks made of wool and cotton shoddy as "Irish hand-knit socks passed by military experts as the finest and most suitable for active service." Stories like that explain why the knitting needles of patriotic women are in use all over the Empire. In Canada let there be no leniency shown this kind of thieves.

Hon. Geo. P. Graham displayed much energy in Parliament because certain literature unfavorable to the Liberal party had been circulated by Conservatives. The eloquent silence in the Government ranks was the shame-faced reply to Mr. Graham's wild arraigoment. Apparently, according to Mr. Graham, "the truce" should be kept by Conservatives, and the glorious privilege of free speech reserved for Liberals. That's the policy of all Liberal tyrants.

For the month of February the Dominion's revenue shows an increase of $825,224 as compared with February of last year. The increase is in the main made up of $148,854 in customs revenue, $381,520 from excise, and $146,858 from railway receipts. The increased customs and excise receipts reflect the result both of the increased tariff and excise duties and of the rush of importers and manufacturers to forestall the expected increased taxes announced in the Finance Minister's Budget speech in the middle of the month. Expenditure for the month shows a considerable drop, as compared with February of last year. Current expenditure decreased by $1,488,431, and capital expenditure by $555,732.

There were hisses at the Dominion Alliance over the suggestion to compensate hotel owners when licenses are extinguished. In Quebec compensation running up to $5,000 in certain cases is allowed when licenses are cancelled. Curiously enough one result was that as many license holders volunteered to close their premises in return for the compensation as was needed to meet the reduction which the Legislature had ordered. In Great Britain it is recognized that when licenses are extinguished compensation should be granted. In Ontario certain prohibitionists would destroy a man's property because he is in a business they think should not be allowed to exist.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars free.

THE WAR

THE ENGLISH PRESS.

London Daily Mail: The war has lasted now over six months. During the whole of that time the Germans have, of course, done all they can to sink our transports and merchantmen and cut off our food supplies. They have met with phenomenally little success. Are they likely to achieve by proclamation what they have not yet been able to achieve by actual warfare?

London Express: It is idle to expect Germany to act with decency. Our forefathers hanged pirates when they caught them. They did not argue with them or bother about their conversion. We may safely rely on the Admiralty to check the malevolent activities of the mine-layers, and any success they have will merely harden our determination to destroy the power that has ceased to be military, and has now become merely murderous.

London News and Leader: It is easy to see that the United States and, indeed, all neutrals may view with uneasiness the prospect of a general assumption by threatened ships of colors other than their own. The use of neutral flags is an expedient to be adopted very sparingly, not so much because Germany has announced her intention of disregarding it, as because it may involve endless complications with the neutrals themselves. It is not worth this.

London Mail: The completeness of the British command of the sea is shown by the perfect security with which one million men have been transported by the navy over-sea, some from the ends of the earth. Not a transport has been touched or, a British soldier injured in this work by the enemy's efforts. It is proved by the total disappearance of the enemy's flag from the ocean and the safety of British trade. The German warfare against our commerce is as utter a failure as the German warfare of attrition against our fighting fleet.

THE UNITED STATES PRESS.

Springfield Republican: The war has killed off 861 newspapers in Germany alone, a fact critics of the modern press may regard as one of the unlooked-for compensations of this great militaristic blow-out.

New York Sun: Austria could have prevented the war by agreeing to an international adjudication of her dispute with Servia. She did not. The case against her rests on her own State papers, which leave nothing to the imagination except the origin of the motive which decreed her stand.

New York Press: Nobody could question the right of the Allies, under accepted international practices, to exercise the blockade. It is legitimate warfare when Germany has begun the submarine raiding; it would be legitimate warfare if Germany had never proclaimed the von Tirpitz programme and never dreamed of it.

TURKEY

Arrivals from Smyrna say Rahim Pasha of Smyrna is determined to surrender Smyrna on the first summons. The 19,000 Turkish troops who are assembled at Smyrna are in a pitiable condition. Their uniforms are in tatters, and many of them wear no boots. They are the worst troops the Turks possess.

The Turkish Minister, Salih Bey, has declared openly during the last ten days that massacres would take place in Turkey if Greece broke with the Porte, while Count Mirbach, the German Minister, informed the Diplomatic Corps that Austria and Hungary would immediately declare war on Greece the day that Greece moved against Turkey. This "Turkish Minister" should be told at once by the Imperial authorities that for every Christian murdered two Turkish officials would pay the penalty of death.

WORLD'S CROPS AND WAR

Returns From Eleven Countries — Canada's Crops

The 11 countries which produce two-thirds of the world's wheat crop will probably have a crop this year of 2,455,376,000 bushels, compared with a crop last year of 2,557,499,000 bushels. These figures do not include Canada's wheat crop, which for the entire Dominion in 1913 was 231,717,000 bushels grown upon 11,015,000 acres, the wheat having an estimated value of $156,462,000.

The Canadian Commissioner of the International Institute of Agriculture has forwarded to the Department of Trade and Commerce at Ottawa, the following table containing the official estimates of production of wheat in 1914, as compared with that of 1913, in the countries so far reported to the institute:—

Country	1914. Bushels.	1913. Bushels.
England and Wales	56,448,000	53,137,000
Belgium	13,973,000	14,769,000
Hungary	133,504,000	168,249,000
Spain	120,314,000	112,402,000
Italy	172,697,000	214,407,000
Luxembourg	654,000	644,000
Russia-in-Europe	687,131,000	837,795,000
Switzerland	3,469,000	3,509,000
United States	930,000,000	763,380,000
India	313,040,000	364,000,000
Japan	23,813,000	25,207,000
Totals	2,455,376,000	2,557,499,000

TWO-THIRDS OF CROP.

The above countries produce about two-thirds of the world's wheat crop. The chief producing countries yet to report, outside of Canada, with the final estimates of their wheat production last year are: Germany, 171,077,000 bushels; Austria, 59,626,000; France, 319,373,000; Roumania, 81,192,000; Russia-in-Asia, 189,861,000; and Algeria, 36,848,000 bushels. The crops of the countries of the Southern Hemisphere cannot yet be considered.

The chief features in this year's crop are the great increase of 166,000,000 bushels in the United States, and the decrease of 150,600,000 in the crop of Russia-in-Europe. Most of the other European countries also show large decreases in the crops of Austria, Germany, France and Roumania. Judging from the reports now available, the total world's crop of 1914 will probably be smaller than that of 1913.

IMPORTS OF EUROPE.

Great Britain, France and Germany import about 350,000,000 bushels of wheat and flour every year. Great Britain depends on her imports for about 250,000,000 bushels and Germany's average is somewhat under 90,000,000 bushels a year. The French imports vary from 20,000,000 to 80,000,000 bushels, according to the harvest garnered in France. The main sources of supplies for these countries are the United States, Russia, Canada and India, which in better years supply about an equal quantity each. Last year Canada shipped 115,000,000 bushels largely to English ports. Russia's supply, which is likely to be cut off for the time being, ranges from 100,000,000 to 130,000,000 bushels a year. The Argentine wheat supply is practically disposed of.

WHEAT PRODUCTION IN EUROPE.

The wheat production of these belligerent countries credits Germany with an average of about two-thirds of her total requirements. Russia is best supplied of all by an average wheat yield of from 500,000,000 to nearly 1,000,000,000 bushels of wheat in addition to a rye crop of 1,000,000,000 bushels, being the largest producer in the world of this staple foodstuff. Austria-Hungary has a wheat yield of from 200,000,000 to 250,000,000 bushels and a rye production averaging about 160,000,000 bushels.

DEMAND FOR OATS.

In war time there is a big demand for oats and corn needed for the maintenance of cavalry and artillery horses. Russia's oats crop of 1,136,000,000 bushels is her mainstay in this respect, and as that country produces little corn. Austria-Hungary averages 250,000,000 bushels of oats and 200,000,000 or more of corn. Germany's oats supply averages nearly 600,000,000 bushels.

Canada's oatcrop last year was 404,669,000 bushels, with a value of $128,893,000, the biggest oat crop on record in the Dominion. Corn is a small crop in Canada, but a large one in the United States. The value of Canada's principal field crops last year computed at average local market prices was $552,771,500. The wheat crop of the Dominion this year undoubtedly will be smaller than that of 1913, as may also some other crops, but the value should be greater, if it is possible to ship the crops, which is altogether likely.

She Sees For The First Time

Girl Who Was Blind From Birth 21 Years Ago

MARBLEHEAD, Mass., March 8.—What she is convinced is a miracle has come to Maude Emerson Lincoln, who lives in a very old house in Marblehead. Practically blind from her birth, twenty-one years ago, she now sees clearly. In an instant unexpectedly, as she was going about her household duties, the veil that had darkened her eyes all these years was swept away and sight came, first to one eye and then to the other.

Hitherto she has been able to distinguish only between light and dark and sometimes between one distinct color and another; to-day she can see distinctly.

Sight came to the right eye as she was putting the dishes in the china closet after the noon meal. Two days later, in the evening, as she sat with her parents, the other was uncovered and sight was given it.

"It is a revelation—from darkness into light", she said this afternoon as she told her story at her home. "And I am the happiest girl in the world."

Immediately after her sight came to her, Miss Lincoln was in a nervous condition. The sight of people frightened her, the sight of food was strange and she could not eat; everywhere she turned saw things she had never seen before.

WHERE CHAMP CLARK FAILED

Champ Clark was foredoomed to failure in his attempt to rheumanize George Washington. As Ingersoll said, Washington has become "a steel engraving", and the American people refused long ago to consider him a creature of flesh and blood.

But how did the Speaker hope to get anywhere by referring to the fact that George Washington sometimes swore, that he drank mintjuleps and that he bet on horse-races? Why did he neglect that great historical occasion when Gen. Washington and Mrs. Nathanael Greene danced three hours without stopping?

Juleps and race-horses and cuss words leave this generation cold, but a Father of His Country who could have fox-trotted all night, a Father of His Country who could have tangoed until the last Broadway lobster palace was closed by the clamorous cops, a Father of His Country who could have danced the Vernon Castles off their feet and left the ragtime orchestra hanging limply to its banjoes—that is the kind of George Washington the Speaker should tell about if he wants a sympathetic American audience.

DENYING SON OF GOD DARKNESS FOR LIGHT

Does Billy Sunday Deny That Jesus Is the Son of God?

Darkness Masquerades as Light — Foolish Words Mislead the Ignorant—Christians Often "Babes In Christ"—Few Have Their Senses Exercised by Reason of Use—Bible Study Never More Needed Than Now—"What Say the Scriptures?" Not, What Say the Preachers, Evangelists and the Creeds?

PASTOR RUSSELL

New York, Mar. 7.—Speaking at the New York City Temple today, Pastor Russell took for his text John 1:34; "I saw and bear record that this is the Son of God." He declared that about three-fourths of all the preachers are his enemies. Because they cannot resist the force of his Bible teachings, they misrepresent them and vilify his reputation, that thus they may hinder good people from hearing and from reading. "By their fruits ye shall know them," said the Master; and evidently many clergymen must be seriously wrong of heart; else they would not bear these unscriptural fruits—unmanly fruits—"works of the flesh and of the Devil."—Galatians 5:19-21; 1 John 3:8.

But the Pastor would not slack his efforts to make known the true character of the God of the Bible, so in contrast with the Satanic god of the creeds. Thousands of letters from all parts of the world tell him of new life, new joy in the Lord, through his efforts; and he is encouraged to go onward in the narrow way which the Master and the Apostles trod. He would not render personal abuse in retaliation. To do so would be contrary to the Word and the Spirit of the Lord. But the creeds and false doctrines he would continue to smash with all the power granted him, that thus hungering, thirsting souls might be delivered from error into the joyous liberty of the children of God.

Billy Sunday has joined other evangelists and preachers in the slanderous misstatements that Pastor Russell denies that Jesus is the Son of God. By such false statements, said the Pastor, they seek to prevent people from coming to hear me and from reading my Bible expositions. Yet how foolish it is for them to make such deliberate misstatements; for eventually their falsehoods will be found out! People who learn of the gross misrepresentation realize that only desperation, attempting to support a weak cause, could lead men professing to be ministers of the Truth to thus do it violence.

Really, it is I who believe that Jesus is the Son of God, while the great majority of preachers and evangelists do not clearly so teach. They confuse their argument and bewilder their hearers by telling in one breath that Jesus is the Son of God, and in the next breath that He is His own Father.

According to them, He is Jehovah God, who sent His Son into the world to die, and He is the Son who sent Himself, as God. When He prayed to the Father it was a mockery; for He was the Father — "one in person." When he said, "The Father is greater than I," He misrepresented the facts, according to these preachers, evangelists and creed-makers. He spoke of the Cup which the Father had poured for Him, and said He could do nothing of Himself, and that He would return to the Father. He prayed, "My God! My God! Why has Thou forsaken Me?" and said to Mary, "I have not yet ascended to My Father and your Father, to My God and your God." But these wiser-than-the-Bible teachers contradict Him, and feel like saying, "Jesus must have been a Millennial Dawner! But we know better!"

Such teachers make void the Word of God through their traditions. In claiming that Jesus is Jehovah God, they really deny that He is the Son of God; for common sense tells everybody that a son receives his life from the father. This is exactly what the Bible tells us respecting Jesus.

I invite truthful criticisms of my teachings; but my opponents know that to treat me fairly, justly, would be to turn all thinking people to my side—the Bible side—the reasonable side. For thirty years they ignored my presentations, lest people should find out; but as my sermons now reach millions, they are alarmed for the safety of their musty creeds, and resort to rank falsehoods, misrepresentations and slanders — the weapons of moral cowards, who realize their own weakness.

If they would charge me with disbelieving the doctrine of the Trinity—that three ones are one—I would cheerfully admit it, and point them to the fact that the word Trinity is not found in the Bible, and that the thought of a trinity is not there, except in one passage, which all scholars of all denominations admit is a forgery of the Seventh Century—1 John 5:7, 8. See Revised Version.

I believe in the Heavenly Father, Jehovah God. I believe in His Son, our Lord Jesus Christ, who left the Heavenly nature, took the human nature, died for our sins, and was afterward highly exalted to the Divine nature. I believe in the Holy Spirit, the Spirit of the Truth, the Spirit of God, the Spirit of Christ. My crime is that I do not believe that the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit are "one in person, equal in power and glory," neither one existing before the others, neither one the Son and neither one the Father, really. The Bible says nothing of this kind; and I am glad that my head is not so illogical as to lead me to deny the Bible and common sense for the sake of being in harmony with creeds made in the Dark Ages.

The Bible makes no mystery of who Jesus is; and we would not have been in confusion had we relied solely upon the testimony of Jesus, the Apostles and the Prophets. Our misleading came during the twelve hundred years when the Bible was ignored, because it was believed that the living bishops were Apostolic and had the plenary power of the original Apostles. This serious error Jesus emphatically warned against in advance.—Revelation 2:2.

The Bible tells of Jesus' present glorious station, "far above angels," "partaker of the Divine nature." But many ignore this, and claim that Jesus is a man in Heaven, completely out of touch with His surroundings; for a man, according to the Bible, is "a little lower than angels," whereas the Apostle declares that Jesus at His resurrection, was exalted far above angels. This glorious One, although of a different nature, is the same One who, while on earth, was "the Man Christ Jesus," "a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief." St. Paul tells us how Jesus left the Heavenly glory, how He humbled Himself, to take a bondman's form—to take the same nature as humanity, which had come into bondage to sin.

The Bible explains how Jesus could be of our race, and yet be "holy, harmless, undefiled, separate from sinners." It tells us plainly that Jesus had a human mother, but that his life came not from a human father; and that therefore He was perfect, and able to be the Ransomer of the race by giving to God sacrificially a full corresponding price for Adam, whose life was forfeited because of sin. Thus the Bible explains that Jesus' death is sufficient for Adam's sin and the sins of the whole world; for the world was not condemned individually, but merely partook of Adam's condemnation to death.

Whoever thinks of Jesus as being the Father and also the Holy Spirit—all one in person—must be confronted with nonsensical errors such as these: How did the Universe manage to progress during the period leading up to Jesus' birth and on to manhood? How did the affairs of the Universe prosper during Jesus' ministry, when He was fully engaged with earthly affairs to the extent of weariness? How did the Universe get along when Jesus died, and until He arose from death?

Some even go to this absurd length: to wit, that Jesus raised Himself from death; whereas the Apostle declared positively that the Father raised Him from the dead on the third day. How refreshing it is to get out of the fog into the clear statements of God's Word, which declare (1) "To us there is one God, the Father," (2) "and one Lord Jesus Christ!"—1 Corinthians 8:6.

It seems astounding if my opponents have never read the plain Bible statements that our glorious Redeemer was "the First-born of all creation" (Colossians 1:15), "the beginning of the creation of God" (Revelation 3:14). If they have read these simple, plain Bible statements, why do they prefer the confusing views of the Dark Ages respecting a Trinity of three persons, yet one person? Some say one God in three persons; others say three Gods in one person. Both propositions are alike unscriptural and absurd.

Jesus Himself, in His last Message to His Church, declared, "I am the Alpha and the Omega, the beginning and the ending, the first and the last." (Revelation 1:8, 11.) Thus He clearly differentiates between Himself and the Father; for the Father had no beginning—"From everlasting to everlasting Thou art God."

Do our opponents claim that Jesus is God? We agree most heartily, provided the word God is understood in the sense in which the Bible uses it. Throughout the Old Testament the word for God is elohim—mighty one. It is applied to Jehovah, the Almighty One; it is also applied to angels and to men whom He sent as His messengers. Acording to this view, our Lord Jesus Christ is a God. The Bible clearly indicates that He is above all other gods except Jehovah.

In harmony with this we read respecting Messiah and His Kingdom: "Thy throne, O God, is forever and ever." The Apostle applies these words distinctly to Jesus, but does not say this proves that Jesus was His own Father, nor does he ignore the Almighty God, of whom are all things. On the contrary, the context tells us explicitly that the Father, who always was above all, as a reward exalted His Son to this glorious Kingship and Godship, declaring that even the angels of Heaven should worship Him. — Hebrews 1:1-9.

One very simple statement confuses some needlessly. It reads, "I and My Father are one." It does not say one person. It refers to the oneness of spirit, or harmony, between the Father and the Son; and this oneness is explained by our Lord, assuring us that He came not to do His own will, but the will of the Father. Since He accepted the Father's will in everything, He and the Father were always one in purpose. Jesus prayed for the Church, saying, I pray for them that Thou hast given Me, that they all may be one in Us, even as Thou, Father, and I are one. (John 17:9, 20-24.) Surely no one would claim that Jesus expected His Church to become one person! And it is equally absurd to think that He and the Father are one person.

Because Jesus was thus the Father's Representative, in the only sense that men could see the invisible Jehovah, He answered Philip on one occasion, "He that hath seen Me hath seen the Father." Thus the President's secretary would say to a caller, "I represent the President."

As Matthew's and Luke's Gospels make very plain how the glorious Son of God was made flesh, yet not a partaker of human sin, so St. John's Gospel provides us with information still further back, pointing out and explaining clearly the glorious prehuman nature of the Son of God. The translation, however, is slightly defective, and hides from the English reader the full import of the opening verses which, literally translated, read:

"In the beginning was the Logos, and the Logos was with the God, and the Logos was a god. The same was in the beginning with the God. By Him were all things made, and without Him was not one thing made * * * And the Logos was made flesh and dwelt among us; and we beheld His glory, the glory of an Only Begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth."—John 1:1-3, 14.

The beautiful simplicity of this account is wonderful. The beginning it mentions was not that of Jehovah's existence, which the Bible declares was without beginning. The word refers to the beginning of creation, and immediately introduces us to the great Logos, "the Beginning of the creation of God." (Revelation 3:14.) While the name Logos may be not improperly translated Word, it has a much fuller significance; namely, representative, messengers, mouthpiece.

Jehovah's entire Message has been, and will be, given to angels and to men through the great Logos. (He was the Alpha, the first; the Father created none before Him. He is the Omega, the last; the Father has directly created none since Him. This explains simply, satisfactorily, that all subsequent creations, while executed by Jehovah's Power, were worked out by His great Son, the Logos. "By Him were all things made that were made."

When the time came for the outworking of the great Divine Plan for human salvation, and, incidentally the showing forth of God's Justice, Wisdom, Love and Power, the offer properly came first to the Logos. The proposition to be man's Redeemer carried with it a great blessing, as St. Paul explains. (Hebrews 12:2; Colossians 1:18.) This exaltation to God's right hand, far above all other creatures, was an advance step. Although originally higher than all the others, the Logos was not so "far above" then.

It was God's purpose to have a New Creation: and the Logos, through the redemptive Plan, was to be the first and chiefest on that highest plane—the Divine nature. During this Gospel Age, God has been calling and accepting the honest, the obedient, lovers of righteousness, haters of iniquity, to be associates with Jesus in the Kingdom and participants with Him in the highest nature of all—the Divine. So, St. Peter declares, "God hath given unto us (the truly consecrated, the Church) exceeding great and precious promises, that by these we might become partakers of the Divine nature."—2 Peter 1:4; Hebrews 2:10.

Is it right, is it Christian, is it true, is it manly, to charge my teachings with denying that Jesus is the Son of God? What object could there be in so doing except to keep the Lord's hungry sheep away from the green pastures of Divine Truth? Well, do my traducers know that they have nothing Biblical, sane or sensible to give instead! The very bitterness manifested by ministers against me is being used of the Lord to arouse investigation amongst those who are truly His people. If my reputation must be thus assassinated in order that the true sheep may hear the Master's voice, I shall acquiesce as joyfully as possible, remembering that it will be difficult for them to say bitterer or untruer things of me than they said of my Master.

My crime is the same that incited the Pharisees against Jesus and the Apostles. "They were angry that they taught the people." Preachers who do not believe in eternal torment any more than I do are angry that I am informing the people; for they fear that the people will justly think that their ministers deal dishonestly, receiving wages for keeping them in darkness. The time has come when all who are for the right, the Truth, should manifest themselves. I have many letters from ministers, marked personal and private, assuring me of their sympathy with my work, but fearful to come out boldly. I am sorry for these. The Lord exhorts, "Be thou very courageous." "He that hath a dream (an imagination), let him tell the dream (if he has nothing better to tell); but he that hath My Word, let him speak My Word fearlessly."—Jeremiah 23:28.

As our knowledge of God and of His glorious Son, and our true understanding of the Holy Spirit, become clearer, we can the better worship God: for the eyes of our understanding opening wider and wider, we shall comprehend with all saints the lengths and breadths, the heights and depths, and know the love of God—whom to know aright implies fitness for life everlasting.—Ephesians 3: 17-19.

Food-stuffs Got to Germany.

Since the war began the following foodstuffs have found their way to Germany from Canada: 983 barrels of pickled salmon, value $20,388; 256 barrels of flour, value $1,282; 40,000 bushels of wheat, value $38,240. The wheat, however, was foreign produce.

Says Audacious Good As New

Salvaged and Nearly Ready for Service, Englishman Writes to Montreal Friends

In a private letter just received in New York, describing wartime conditions in London, the statement is made unequivocally that the British dreadnought Audacious, reported sunk by a German submarine, has been docked and repaired, and is now nearly ready for active service.

"I am afraid," says the writer, "you have some curiously twisted impressions about conditions in England now. You ask if we are receiving papers regularly from outside.

"There is no restriction, so far as I know, even on German papers. The Berliner Tageblatt, Kolnische Zeitung, Hamburger Fremdenblatt, and Frankfurter Zeitung are received here regularly. Practically every English daily has a regular column headed 'Through German Eyes', or something to that effect, and the column consists of copious extracts from the German papers. From these extracts, we learn every day of the famine which is imminent in England, and of the terms of peace which will be dictated in London next midsummer. We also learn that Belgian children have chopped off their own hands in order to cast reproach upon the Germans, and that the shells which are being fired by the British and French artillery have undoubtedly come from American factories. During the winter months, while rain and mud are making progress on either side almost almost a physical impossibility, many people have given up reading the ordinary war news on account of its monotony; but many make an exception in favor of the entertaining extracts from the German press. In addition to them, of course, our papers publish every day the official bulletin circulated by wireless from the German headquarters.

German War Cartoons Popular.

"German art has also a tremendous vogue in this country at present. Nearly every day our papers print reproductions of German cartoons of Kitchener, Churchill, Uncle Sam, Woodrow Wilson, or William Jennings Bryan—none of them particularly kindly, as you may suppose. In fact, Simplicissimus, Jugend, and Lustige Blatter are quoted nearly as often as the Berliner Tageblatt and the Kolnische Zeitung. Almost as much hate is shown in German cartoons as in German hymns.

"Even more interesting are the reproductions from the German illustrated papers of beautiful wash drawings showing the Japanese fleet helping to sink the German cruisers off the Falkland Islands—and, more recently, the sinking of H.M.S. Tiger. All the details of this latter catastrophe are given—the artist's sketches being based upon the reports of German airmen and German naval officers who were eyewitnesses of the event. On the principle that what Admiral von Tirpitz says three times is true, the Tiger was certainly lost—but happily her loss has not yet been discovered by our somewhat slow-witted Admiralty.

"Of course, there are some points upon which we do not get reliable German information. We are still waiting, for instance, for the official version of the recent engagement in the North Sea We know, of course, from Admiral von Tirpitz that the British fleet turned and fled as soon as the Germans were sighted. We also know, from the same source, that the fastest of the English ships, the Tiger, was overtaken and sent to the bottom. It has also been admitted that the Germans lost the slowest of their vessels the Blucher. What we are really anxious to know is just how it happened that the shells rained thickest about the slowest of the German battle cruisers and the fastest of the British battle cruisers when the British were in flight. Somehow or other, one would have thought that it would have been the other way about. Perhaps you in America have received an explanation of the apparent paradox from Count von Bernstorff.

First-Hand Reports from the Front

"You remark that it seems amusing that you in America should know so much more of what is happening than we in England. The really amusing thing is that you should imagine anything so foolish. Your knowledge in America comes chiefly from the highly colored reports which appear in your papers, which have never been noted for accuracy, even in the most favorable circumstances. Here in England, however, there is hardly a man, woman, or child who has not seen and talked with many men home from the front; men who have been actual eye-witnesses of the things they talk about. Your information is second, or possibly third or fourth hand; ours is, for the most part, first hand.

"You mention the Audacious. The Prominent Merchant Thinks His Life Was Saved By "Fruit-a-tives".

They were a great boon to me, I can tell you, for about two years ago, I was laid up in bed with vomiting and a terrific pain at the base of my skull. The pain nearly drove me mad. Doctors feared it would turn to Inflammation of the Brain, but I took "Fruit-a-tives" steadily until I was cured. A RAILWAY CASE

Some facts bearing on the case of the Grand Trunk Railway were made public yesterday by Mr. E. J. Chamberlin. Like all railways on this continent the Grand Trunk has suffered from the reduction in freight and passenger movement following the check in trade activity which became evident last year, even before the war broke out, and which the war helped to make more serious. Besides the drawbacks of the common lot, the Grand Trunk suffers from some peculiar to Canada and some peculiar to the particular section of Canada it serves. The provinces, which always need money discovered that what they wanted could be more safely extracted from commerce than from the people generally, and the railways were called upon to pay more even than their just share of the total. The Grand Trunk in 1914, it appears, contributed $732,000 to municipal and provincial treasuries, or something like thirty per cent. of all railway taxes though it has only about twelve per cent. of the mileage. This sort of thing, coming with heavy increases in the rates and amount of wages, increases in the customs taxes on materials and fuel that must be imported, and the incidence of workmen's compensation laws, etc., as a matter of course, gravely affected the financial position of the road. For the year just closed there was a decrease of £537,000 in the revenue and an increase of £64,000 in the expenses. The common and preference stocks had to be passed on dividend day, and on the four per cent. guaranteed stock only three and a half per cent. could be paid. Worse showings than this have been made in the railway world. A less serious general situation, however, compelled such a change of sentiment in the United States that for a large part of the country an increase in rates was authorized and was everywhere accepted as just. Railways cannot progress and maintain their powers of doing the country's transportation unless they are permitted to justify the confidence of the men who invest money in them—Montreal Gazette March 4th.

BARONESS VON SUTTNER

"What a state your mind is in! Let us be sensible. Listen to me. Soon both our husbands will come back captains. I shall have a jolly six weeks at a watering-place with mine. It will do us both good after this suspense. You need not think that I have not suffered at all. And it may yet be God's will that one of our dear ones shall meet a soldier's death—but what is more noble, more honorable, than death in battle for emperor and fatherland?"

"You are talking like the next best army proclamation."

"Yet, it would be dreadful—poor mamma—should Karl or Gustav be lost. But let us not think of it. Yes, I shall go and refresh myself at some watering-place. I think I would prefer Carlsbad. I was there as a girl and had a glorious season."

"I, too, went to Marienbad, and there I made the acquaintance of my husband. But don't let us be sitting here idly. If you have linen at hand we can be making bandages. I just came from the Relief Corps——"

We were interrupted, for the footman brought in a letter.

"From Gustav," cried Lori, joyfully. She read a few lines and, shrieking fell about my neck.

"Lori, my poor dear, what is it? Your husband?"

"Oh God, oh God!" she exclaimed "Read for yourself."

I took the letter up. I can recall the contents perfectly, for I afterwards copied it in my diary.

"Read aloud, for I could not finish."

I read:—

"Dear Sister—Yesterday we had a severe encounter. There was a long list of dead and wounded. Prepare poor mother, tell her Karl is severely wounded, but I tell you the truth—the brave fellow died for his country."

I stopped to embrace dear Lori, and continued reading, choked with my tears.

"Your husband is safe, as well as I. Had the enemy's bullet only hit me instead! I envy Karl his heroic death. He fell at the beginning and never knew we were defeated. Oh, how bitter it all is. I saw his fall, for we were riding together. I sprang to lift him up, but one look told me he was dead. The ball must have hit the lungs or heart. His death was surely instant and quite painless. Many others suffered hours of agony and lay long in the heat of battle till death came. It was a bloody day. More than a thousand, friend and foe, were left on the field. Among the dead I found many dear faces, and with the rest, there is poor"—here I had to turn the page—"poor Arno Dotzky."

I fell insensible to the floor.

CHAPTER VI

"It is all over now, Martha! Solferino is decisive. We have been beaten." With these words my father hurried to me one morning, as I was sitting under the linden trees in the garden.

I was back in the home of my girlhood with my little Rudolf. Eight days after the great battle which left me a widow, I returned to live with my family in Grumitz, our country place in Lower Austria. Just as it had been before my marriage, I was surrounded by the loved ones—father, aunt, two growing sisters, and my little brother. Their kindness and sympathy touched my grief-stricken heart. My sorrow seemed to have consecrated me in their eyes and raised me above the ordinary level.

Next to the blood poured out by the soldiers on the altar of their country, the tears of the bereft mothers, wives, and children are considered the holiest libations poured on the same altar. What was almost a feeling of pride and heroic dignity took possession of me, for to have sacrificed a beloved husband in battle conferred upon me the equivalent of military merit, which grew to be quite a comforting thought, and helped me to bear my sorrow. But then I was but one of many whose loved ones slept beneath the Italian sod.

No particulars were brought me of Arno's death, other than that he had been found dead, recognized, and buried. No doubt the baby and I were his last thought and consolation, and with his last breath he had groaned, "I have done my duty, more than my duty."

"Yes, we are beaten," sadly repeated my father as he sank on to the bench.

"So the victims were a needless sacrifice," I sighed.

"Indeed they are to be envied, for they know nothing of the disgrace which has come upon us. But we shall gather ourselves together soon, though they say that peace must now be concluded."

"May God grant it!" I interrupted. "Though it is too late for my poor Arno, yet thousands of others will be spared."

"You seem to think only of your own sorrow—and that of private individuals. This is Austria's affair."

"But is not Austria made up of individuals?"

"But, my dear child, a state and empire has a longer and more important existence than an individual. Men disappear, from generation to generation, but the state goes on and on: it grows in power, fame, and greatness, or it crumbles, sinks, and is lost, if it allows itself to be surpassed or swallowed by other states. Therefore, it is the highest duty of every individual to sacrifice, suffer, and even die, that the existence, the power, and welfare of the state, be perpetuated and increased."

These impressive words remained in my thought, and I noted them in my diary. They were curiously like the sentences in my old school books, whose strong, clear convictions had been quite driven from my mind of late, especially since Arno's death, by the confusion, fear, and pity I had experienced. I once more hugged them to my heart, and found consolation and encouragement in the thought that my darling had been sacrificed in a great cause, and that, in giving up my husband, I had done my share in the service of my country.

Aunt Marie had a different source of consolation ready, however. "Stop your crying, my dear," she would say when she found me crushed anew with my grief. "Is it not selfish to mourn for him who is now so happy? From up among the saints he is even now looking down and blessing you. The years will pass quickly when you will join him there. For the heroes of battle heaven prepares a special place of rest. Happy are those who are called from this earth while performing a sacred duty. Next in glory to the Christian martyr comes the dying soldier."

"Then I am to rejoice that Arno—"

"No, not rejoice, that would be asking too much. You must bear your lot and resign yourself. Heaven sends this trial to purify and strengthen your faith."

"And in order that my heart be purified and my faith strengthened my poor Arno had to——"

"No, no, but how dare you question the hidden ways of Providence?"

The consolations which my aunt offered were rather confusing and distracting, but I allowed myself to accept the mystical tangle, and believe that my dear victim was now enjoying heaven as a reward for his agony of sacrifice, and that his memory would be glorified on earth with the halo of heroic martyrdom.

Just before our departure from Vienna the great mourning ceremony had been celebrated in the cathedral of St. Stefan, and I attended. The "De Profundis" was rung for all our warriors fallen and buried on foreign soil. A catafalque had been erected in the centre of the church, lighted with a hundred candles and hung with flags, arms, and military emblems. The grand pathetic requiem came from the choir and flooded the congregation mostly women clothed in black and weeping aloud. And not for her own alone, but for the same sad fate of all, each woman wept—for all these poor brave brothers who had given up their sweet young lives for us, for their country, the honor of their nation! And there in the background stood several regiments of living soldiers, listening to the ceremony—all waiting and ready to follow their fallen comrades without a murmur or fear. These clouds of incense, the swelling voice of the organ, the fervent petitions, the common woe poured out in tears and groans must surely have risen to a well-pleased heavenly ear, and the God of armies and battles must certainly shower down His blessing on those to whom this catafalque was raised.

These were the thoughts that came to me, and which I wrote in my journal when I described the mourning celebration.

Two weeks after the defeat of Solferino came the news of the peace of Villa Franca. My father gave himself no end of pains to explain to me how necessary for political reasons this peace had become. I assured him that it was very joyful news to me to know that there was an end to all this fighting and dying. But he continued at length to explain.

"You must not for one instant think," he said, "that even though in this peace we have made concessions, we have thereby sacrificed our dignity. We Austrians know perfectly what we are about. It is not the little check we got at Solferino which makes us give up the game. Far from it. We could easily have routed them with another army corps, and forced the enemy from Milan, but, dear Martha there are other things involved—great principles and objects. We do not cease to push the war further, lest these Sardinian robbers and their French hangman-ally should push into other portions of Italy—Modena and Tuscany—where dynasties are in power which are related to our imperial family; nay, they might advance even against Rome itself, and endanger the Holy Father—the Vandals! By giving up Lombardy we keep Venetia, and can assure the Holy See and the southern Italian states of our support. Thus, my dear, you see it is only for political reasons and for the sake of the balance of power in Europe——"

"Oh, yes, father, I see it," I broke in. "It is a pity that they could not have planned it all before Magenta!" I sighed bitterly, and, to change the subject, I pointed to a package of books which had just arrived from Vienna.

"See, father, the bookseller has sent us several things on approval. Among the rest is the English naturalist Darwin's 'The Origin of Species.' He recommends it as an epoch-making book in modern thought."

"He need not bother me with it," replied my father. "In such stirring times, who can be interested in such rubbish? How can a stupid book about plants and animals and their origin make an epoch of any importance to us men? The federation of the Italian States, the forming of the German Bund, and the consolidation of Austria—such matters make epochs in history and mark the great strides in human advancement. These things will live in history long after that stupid English book is forgotten. Mark my words."

I did mark them.

BOOK II.

TIME OF PEACE

• • •

CHAPTER I.

Four years passed quietly, and my sisters, now seventeen and eighteen years old, are to be presented at court. "Why should I not return to society?" I thought. Time had done its work and quieted my grief. Despair had mellowed into sorrow, sorrow into melancholy, then came listlessness, and finally I felt a renewing of my interest in life. I woke one fine morning with the realization that I was a woman to be envied—twenty-three, beautiful, nobly born, rich, the mother of a darling boy, and one of a devoted family. What had I still to ask to make life delightful?

Behind me like a sweet dream lay the short period of my married life. The shadowy past began to swallow up the memory of my desperate love, my handsome Huzzar, my married happiness, my terrible separation and grief. The duration of it had not been long enough to create a close sympathy. Our devotion had been too shortly cut off to have grown into the friendship and reverence which is often felt by those who have shared years of joy and sorrow. Could I have been indispensable to him when, for no cause, he rushed into the war and left his regiment, which was not called out? Yes, four years made me a different being. My mind had broadened, and knowledge and culture had come to me which, I felt, Arno would have had no sympathy with. If he could come back he would be a stranger to my present spiritual life.

How did it all come about?

One year of widowhood passed in despair, deep mourning, and heartbreaking. Of society I would not hear. Rudolf's education should be my one thought. The "baby" turned into "my son," and became the centre of my hope, my pride, and my existence. To be able some day to be his guide and intellectual companion, I buried myself in the treasures of the chateau library. History, in which my interest had cooled, became my passion again, as well as my consolation, for the account of battles and heroics seemed to relate me to the grand historical processes, for which I, too, had lived. Not that I ever got back the old enthusiasms of girlish days for the Maid of Orleans. Many of the overwrought accounts now sounded hollow and mocking, when I thought of the horrors of war.

Can the priceless gem life be paid for with the tinsel coin of posthumous fame?

But the history-shelf of my father's library was soon exhausted; I begged the bookseller to send me more. He wrote:—

"I send you Thomas Buckle's 'History of Civilization in England.' The work is unfinished, but these two volumes form a complete whole, and have attracted great attention, not only in England but over the world. They say that the author is introducing a new conception of history.

New, indeed! Reading and rereading it, I felt like a creature taken suddenly from the bottom of a narrow valley to the mountain tops and viewing the world for the first time out, beyond and beyond, to the boundless ocean. Not that I, a superficial mind of twenty, could grasp the book—but, to keep to my picture, I saw that lofty monumental things lay before my astonished vision. I was dazzled, overcome, my horizon moved out into the immensities of life. Though the full understanding only came to me later, yet that one vision I caught even then, that the history of mankind itself was not formulated by wars, kings, statesmen, treaties, greed, cunning, but by the gradual development of the intellect. Court chronicles gave no explanation to underlying causes, nor a picture of the civilization of the time. Buckle did not paint war and devastation with a glamor, but demonstrated that the respect for arms diminished as a people rose in culture and intelligence. The lower into barbarism you go, the more war and its romance will die out of our culture and cease to exist. Just as childhood's wrangling ceases, so must society outgrow its childishness.

How all this appealed to the convictions of my heart, which I had so often dismissed as unworthy and weak! I now felt that these growing ideals in me were an echo of the spirit of the age, and saw that thinkers were losing their idolatry for war, and doubting its necessity. The book gave me the opposite of what I sought, yet how it solaced me, enlightened, elevated, and pacified me. Once I tried to talk to my father about it, but he would have none of it; he refused to follow me to the mountain top, that is, he refused to read the book, so it was useless to discuss it.

During the second year of my sorrow I studied with renewed ardor, and as the mind expanded the old unhappiness disappeared. Buckle had unconsciously given me a taste for the larger world again, and I satisfied my craving to follow out his idea in other authors. The passion for life renewed itself, and the melancholy disappeared. Then the third change was wrought in me. Books alone would not satisfy me. I saw that with all this reading my longings were not being gratified—life's flowers were still for me to pluck if I only stretched out the hand. So in the winter of 18?? I entered the salons of Viennese society once more, to introduce my younger sisters there.

"Martha, Countess Dotzky, the rich young widow," thus spoken of, I took my part in the great comedy of the world again. The part suited me, and I was greeted, fêted, spoiled on all sides, much to my delight, after four years of social starving.

The entire family quietly presumed that I would remarry. My aunt no longer referred to my soldier saint above. The future promised meeting might not be so agreeable if a second husband stepped in. Every one except myself seemed to have forgotten his existence. My pain was gone, but his image could never be wiped out. Daily Rudolf's evening prayer closed with: "God keep me good and brave for love of my father, Arno."

Canadians Please The War Office

"They Do What They're Told When The're Told," Said Officer—That's the Kind We Want

LONDON, March 8.—To-day your correspondent learned from well-informed sources that the Canadians are giving entire satisfaction to the British War Office. The greatest fear was that the men after a long period of training, would find their curiosity greater than their fear of the Germans, and show themselves in the trenches.

But the men have been quick to grasp the realities of the situation.

A British regular officer said to me to-day:

"They do what they are told, when they are told, and without complaints. That is the kind of men we want."

"I HAD ECZEMA BUT"

Mrs. Elgin Cossett, Joggin Bridge, N.S., says:—"When my little daughter was five months old a rash broke out on her face and body. I called in a doctor, who stated that it was eczema, and treated her for it. His treatment, however, did not bring any relief, and the child got worse. I then tried a great many salves and so-called eczema cures, but nothing proved of any benefit. The sores continued to spread, and became one large mass. One day a friend advised me to try Zam-Buk.

"At that time the disease had defied all remedies for over a year. By the time I had used one box of Zam-Buk there was a marked improvement. I continued the Zam-Buk treatment and day by day the sores showed signs of improvement. Finally Zam-Buk banished every trace of the disease."

For the tender delicate skin of babies, nothing equals Zam-Buk. Unlike other ointments, it is purely herbal.

Use Zam-Buk for cuts, burns, bruises, eczema, piles, cold sores, chapped hands, and all skin diseases and injuries. At all druggists and stores, 50c. box. Name "Zam-Buk" is on every box; refuse substitutes.

SUDDEN DEATH

Mr. Albert Gerow, a well known horseman, died suddenly this morning at his residence on the corner of Church and Wharf streets. Deceased was about 65 years of age, and had resided in this city for many years. Mr. Gerow was favorably known, not only in the city but the surrounding country. A widow, three sons and one daughter survive. An acute attack of indigestion was the cause of death. Yesterday afternoon deceased was driving about the city apparently in his usual health.

Do you know that no grocer can be sure of getting the same quality of tea in bulk twice running? It is impossible for him to have the extensive machinery that makes it possible to blend the choicest teas in varying proportions to form an absolutely uniform tea like "SALADA." So true is this, that many grocers will neglect quality and only think of the greater profit that bulk tea affords them.

DETROIT UNITED ACCEPTS OFFER OF THE CITY

DETROIT, Mich., March 9—Special—Municipal ownership in Detroit is very close to becoming a reality as a result of the communication from the Board of Directors of the Detroit United Railway received by the Municipal Street Commission this afternoon.

The letter, which is signed by President J. C. Hutchins of the D. U. R. is a lengthy one. By its terms the company accepts the Commission's offer to take over the properties of the Street Railway Company within the one-fare zone (which means practically the entire city) by assuming the payment of the principal and the interest of its mortgage bonds amounting to $24,900,000.

The proposal is made subject to ratification by the stockholders, and a meeting for this purpose has been called by the D. U. R. directors for March 31.

The letter stipulates only that the transaction shall be concluded within reasonable time limits, and, of course, with the understanding that a workable and legal plan for the assumption of the mortgage debt shall be formulated and carried into effect.

HOW TO PREVENT ACID STOMACHS

AND FOOD FERMENTATION

By a Stomach Specialist

As a specialist who has spent many years in the study and treatment of stomach troubles, I have been forced to the conclusion that most people who complain of stomach trouble possess stomachs that are absolutely healthy and normal. The real trouble, that which causes all the pain and difficulty is excessive acid in the stomach, aggravated by food fermentation. Hyperacity irritates the delicate lining of the stomach and food fermentation causes wind which distends the stomach abnormally, causing that full bloated feeling. Thus both acid and fermentation interfere with and retard the process of digestion. The stomach is usually healthy and normal, but irritated almost past endurance by these foreign elements—acid and wind. In all such cases—and they comprise over 90 per cent. of all stomach difficulties—the first and only step necessary is to neutralize the acid and stop the fermentation by taking in a little warm or cold water immediately after eating, from one to two teaspoonfuls of bisurated magnesia, which is doubtless the best and only really effective antacid and food corrective known. The acid will be neutralized and the fermentation stopped almost instantly, and your stomach will at once proceed to digest the food in a healthy, normal manner. Be sure to ask your druggist for the bisurated magnesia, as I have found other forms utterly lacking in its peculiarly valuable properties—F. J. G.

DEATH ROLL.

ROBERT ELLIOTT

Robert Elliott, one of the best known and most highly respected residents of the 2nd concession of Tyendinaga, passed away early Tuesday morning, February 23rd, at his home, not far north of Shannonville. His death was not unexpected, as he had been in poor health for several years. He was sixty-six years of age, having been born in Hungerford, near Tweed. He spent the most of his life in the Township of Tyendinaga, where he was known as a prosperous farmer. He was a member of the Presbyterian church. His wife preceded him to the tomb about three years ago. Surviving are four sons and two daughters; William of Belleville, Mac. of Watertown, Samuel and Harry at home; Mrs. Earl Anderson, Melrose, and Miss Ida at home. He also leaves to mourn his loss, three brothers, Samuel of Tweed, Lindsay of Calgary; William of Roslin, and two sisters, Mrs. W. F. Graham of Tweed, and Mrs. C. Green of Belleville. The deceased was a most popular resident of Tyendinaga, and his death is deeply regretted by his wide circle of friends.

SPORTING NEWS

HOCKEY.

HARDWARE BEAT MIDGETS

The Belleville Hardware will this year hold the Y.M.C.A. cup, and the title of City Champions, as last night they again put the Midgets away, this time by the score of 8 to 1, and thus win the round by the score of 14 to 5.

The game last night, although the score was one-sided, was fast all through, the players, on account of a great rivalry, being after the puck all the time and providing interesting hockey to the number of fans, who were in attendance.

The Hardware were the first to score, carrying the puck down from the face off, and Hitchon batting it in. The Hardware secured one more in this period, while the Midgets were blanked.

The second period provided some more fast hockey, and in this period, the players started to rough it up, and Referee Allen, kept a steady stream going to the penalty box. The Hardware in this period countered two more, while their opponents were blanked again.

The last period started fast, but was stopped by an injury to H. Whalen, which necessitated his removal from the game. Shortly after Roy Hinchey of the Midgets was also forced to retire, the game proceeding with five men aside. This seemed to help the Midgets, and they started to bombard the Hardware goal. D. Whalen, soon scored, but this was all, and the Hardware secured four more, which ended the game.

The Hardware team played a good game last night, and deserved to win, every man playing his position, and no particular stars can be picked. For the Midgets, D. Whalen, and Roblin starred, Whalen in particular playing a very strong game. Smith, in goal must have had off night, as a few easy ones got by him. Following is the lineup:

Hardware—Goal, Phillips; defence, J. Goyer, Flagler; rover, Symons; centre, Hitchon; wings, T. Whalen and F. Goyer.

Midgets—Goal, Smith; defence, McKenna, Holoway; rover, D. Whalen; centre, H. Whalen; wings, R. Hinchey, W. Roblin.

Referee—B. Allen.

When German Blockade is No Blockade at All

LONDON, March 9.—Special—The Admiralty announces the following results of the German blockade:

"From January 21 to March 3 the arrivals at British ports numbered 4,519 vessels; the sailings during the same period, 4,115.

"British merchant vessels torpedoed, fifteen; lives lost, 29."

Out of a total of 1,513 ships arriving at and 1,342 leaving Great Britain during the period from Februray 18, when the German blockade was declared, to March 3 only seven were torpedoed by hostile submarines.

The Admiralty statement gives the names of 14 steamers which the German submarines have unsuccessfully attacked.

There is no mention of any steamers being torpedoed for the past week.

The list of vessels unsuccessfully attacked includes the Southwestern Railway steamer Lydia, which narrowly escaped being hit by a torpedo while voyaging from Jersey to Southampton. The torpedo missed the steamer by about forty feet when it passed astern.

This is the first news of the attempt to sink the Lydia, and is the second attack on these unarmed passenger-carrying Channel steamers.

BENGROVE TORPEDOED WITHOUT A WARNING

ILFRACOMBE, England, March 8.—The British steamer Bengrove, carrying coal, was seen in distress sounding her siren five miles off this shore at 1.30 o'clock Sunday afternoon. Forty minutes later the ship's bow rose from the water and she sank by the stern. Thousands of people stood on the shore and watched her go down.

Two steamers were in the vicinity, one of which, the Paignton, of Liverpool, rescued the crew of 33, and local lifeboats brought them ashore amid the cheers of the populace. The captain of the Bengrove made this statement:

"We had no warning. There was a loud explosion forward which threw everybody on board off their feet and covered them with debris and coal, but nobody was seriously hurt. We took to the boats quickly and orderly. We watch the ship sink, and then came ashore through the agency of the Paignton."

The Admiralty has issued an official statement confirming the loss of the Bengrove, and saying it is believed that she was torpedoed.

SYNOPSIS OF COAL MINING REGULATIONS.

Coal mining rights of the Dominion, in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, the Yukon Territory, the North-West Territories and in a portion of the Province of British Columbia, may be leased for a term of twenty-one years at an annual rental of $1 an acre. Not more than 2560 acres will be leased to one applicant.

For full information application should be made to the Secretary of the Department of the Interior, Ottawa, or to any Agent or Sub-Agent of Dominion Lands.

mishap to her was known in well-informed political, social, and commercial circles here as soon as it was known in America. Englishmen, however, have no desire to talk, against the wishes of those in charge of the Government, about such a mishap. I have not the remotest idea why no official announcement has been made about the mishap to the Audacious when there has been no trace of reticence about the Bulwark, Formidable, Aboukir, Hogue, Cressy, Good Hope, Monmouth, and several smaller vessels. The ordinary Englishman is in no better position than I am to explain the matter; but he knows that there is an explanation, and he is perfectly content to trust the man at the wheel. This is no time for asking questions or prying for information that the naval and military commanders and the Government do not think it opportune to give.

Audacious Saved and Repaired.

"With regard to the Audacious, it is generally known that she ran ashore in shallow water; that she was afterward salvaged and docked; and that she is now almost ready to be recommisioned—but you won't find any official announcement to that effect. It was announced in Parliament last week that the publication of the Na[illegible]s suspended. A few weeks ago, when my wife was visiting in Glasgow, another new dreadnought was launched on the Clyde; but, instead of the launch being made the occasion for general public rejoicing, it was known to comparatively few people and the greatest possible secrecy was maintained.

"After all, this war is not being waged for the sake of making newspaper paragraphs. Money and blood are not being poured out for the delectation of the journalist, club gossip, the man in the street—not even, if I may say so, for the delectation of friendly neutrals in this. No ordinary non-official or non-combatant citizen, in this or any other country, has any claim of right to any single piece of information which the authorities of his own country decide should not be published.

"In England, at any rate, this war is regarded as a rather grim business, and it is being conducted on strictly business lines. In every business there are plenty of things, both good and bad, that must not be talked about; and talk plays a particularly small part in a life-and-death business of this kind. Recognizing that, the people of this country are quite content with the policy of silence wrich Mr. Asquith, Lord Kitchener, Sir John French, Winston Churchill, and Lord Fisher consider necessary. The Englishman is not quite such a fool as to attempt to teach these men their jobs. It would be foolish even to criticise them at this stage. It will be time enough for criticism when the job is over and the public are put in possession of the thousand determining facts which are now unknown and undreamed of, either here or in America.

"If there is one thing that the Englishman has reason to be proud of, it is his constitutional history; and if there is one principle that if firmly established in constitutional law it is that not only must Englishmen not be taxed a penny apiece without the consent of their representatives, but also that not a penny apiece of the taxes must be spent without the definite authority of those representatives. In this war, however, the nation has given the Government a blank check for 350,000,000 sterling—and it is not asking for any accounts. When an Englishman trusts another man with his check book you may take it from me that he is perfectly willing to trust him with a few little business secrets.

Englishmen Not "Kicking."

"As the people of this country are paying the biggest part of the bill and doing their fair share of the fighting, nobody else has a better right to kick than they have if they are being kept in the dark about events. The Englishman is a chronic kicker, and if he does not kick on this occasion you may be pretty sure that it is because he has nothing to kick about. He has even stopped grumbling about the weather—and there he is losing the opportunity of a lifetime, because it has been the worst weather on record.

"One little advantage of the policy of silence is that no one in this country, apart from the authorities, can tell you within a million the number of men who are now under arms. When I was in Australia there was a multimillionaire old squatter named Peter Tyson who had sheep stations scattered all over the continent. There was a Government tax on sheep, and every pasturalist had to make a return, stating how many he had. Tyson used to send in his return for 1,000,000 or 2,000,000, as the case might be. When the officials protested that the number was grossly underestimated, Tyson's reply was always, 'You have asked me the number, and I have told you; if you don't believe me, go and count them.' It is much the same with Kitchener and his army. The only way the journalists or the German spies can find out how many there are is to go and count them. Neither the British public nor the German general staff knows whether our army is one of 1,000,000 or 4,000,000. As far as the British public is concerned, they don't want to know.

"If you were in England now you would be struck with nothing so much as the even temper of the nation. Yesterday morning the blockade of England by Germany began, but nobody seems to worry about it in the least. Our Channel boats, our big liners, and our tramp trading steamers are sailing as usual. We know that many vessels and hundreds of non-combatant lives will probably be lost; but that won't affect the situation a particle. No doubt many of our finest dreadnoughts and battle cruisers will go to the bottom before this war is over, but each loss will be taken as it comes without any grumbling, much less panic. In May and June, no doubt, thousands, if not hundreds of thousands of the bravest lives in England will be sacrificed; but however heavy the losses may be, the quiet, confident determination of the nation will remain unaltered. If you ask an Englishman how long the war is going to last you will get only one answer—that he does not know. If it goes on for five years this country is perfectly prepared to see it to a finish.

A Real, Not a Film War.

"As a newspaper man, you would probably be very much surprised at the small part our newspapers play in this war. No effort is made to work up the fighting spirit of the nation through the press, and no attempt is made to pander through the press to the public love of sensation. Every day I see pictures which would be of great interest to the public, but the vast majority of these pictures are never published. A fortnight ago a colleague showed me a snap-shot of the Blucher in the very act of turning turtle after the battle of the Dogger Bank. This marvellous photograph was published only yesterday morning, several weeks after the event. The censors are no more ready to pass a photograph of a German disaster than they are of a British disaster. This is a real war, not a film war.

"We all feel here that if the German submarines sink any American vessels, or even any big British vessel on which there are a number of American passengers, you will be drawn into this war. For your own sake I hope sincerely that this may not happen. The Alies would be devoutly grateful for the assistance of United States but surely it should not be necessary to drag your great nation into the vortex of this great war—the only assistance that you could give immediately would be your navy, and the British navy really needs no help against the Germans. As for helping the Allies on land, you would need all your regular army, in the event of war, to guard your property against German spies and sympathizers, and even if you declared war against Germany at once, the campaign for this year would probably be over before you could put a single man in the field. Under the conditions of modern warfare a soldier is worse than useless until he has had six or eight months' rigorous training.

'Yesterday morning I came down to the office on the top of a bus with a half dozen cheery Tommies, who were on their way back to the trenches. They had been on a four days' leave and were as happy as schoolboys. As you know, our men have been coming home on short leave all through the winter, and the quiet confidence of the nation as a whole is largely due to the reports and high spirits of these men. I have talked with scores of them, and I have never found in one the slightest doubt about the ultimate result."

Nothing excites me so little as the fear that precedent may be violated.

Touched Live Wire Falls to Ground

Uncertainty to Whether L. Norsworthy Died of Shock or Fall

TORONTO, March 9.—When his hand came into contact with a live wire at the top of a Hydro pole at Front and Esplanade streets, early this morning, F. Norsworthy, a foreigner living at 50 Taylor street, fell forty-five feet to the ground as a result of the shock and was instantly killed. It is not quite certain whether the live wire or the fall was responsible for death. The body is at the Morgue where an autopsy will be held to determine this. Norsworthy, in company with another workman, William Clayton, was removing installation from a wire at the top of the pole at the time. Clayton could not tell the police for certain whether his fellow employee had touched the copper wire or not. The gang was in charge of William Gibson.

Dr. J. H. Kidd and Sergeant Oxland of the Wilton avenue police station were called. When the former arrived he pronounced the man dead. His skull had been crushed in. Deceased appeared to be about 48 years old.

Boys Confessed

To Placing Dynamite on Canadian Pacific Railway Crossing

KINGSTON, March 9.—The dynamite mystery has been solved by the police, and as a result Kingstonians are breathing easier.

Constables James Bateson and Marshall Armstrong rounded up two fifteen-year-old lads on Monday afternoon, and they have confessed to the fact that on Sunday afternoon last they broke into McRow's powder house and stole seven sticks of dynamite, and that afterwards "just for fun", placed them under the planking at the Cataraqui street crossing of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Owing to the fact that the members of the 21st Battalion for overseas will be leaving shortly, the finding of the dynamite hidden at the crossing on Monday afternoon led many citizens to believe that it was part of a plot to blow up the train taking the soldiers out of the city. The police got on the case just as soon as it was reported and as a result of the good work of the constables the case was cleared up in quick order and the two boys were detained at police headquarters.

RELICS OF THE FIGHTING

Soldiers' Letters Picked Up on Field Make Pathetic Reading

LONDON, March 9—One of the first English speaking persons to visit the field of battle in southwest Belgium was Edward Page Gibson, an American business man, who has long been a resident of London. Mr. Gaston has just returned from Belgium, and brought with him many relics of the fighting, chiefly from Mons, and these he has in his offices in Salisbury Square

There are many kinds of soldier's pay books, copies of the soldier's small books written by Lord Wolseley for the guidance of the rank and file; letters from wives, sweethearts and friends at home. Letters written by soldiers and never posted, remains of uniforms, pipe cases, tobacco pouches and soforth.

On a sheet of cardboard are a few odds and ends that represent the belongings of a major in the British army. By the side of the cardboard is a large spoon, tied round with a silk handkerchief, inside the handkerchief is a photograph of a soldier and a woman. These were the property of an Irish lancer who met his death on the railroad from Mons.

Of all the relics Mr. Gaston brought back none has a more pathetic interest than the letters. Turning them over, one comes across such an expression as this: "I congratulate you on your promotion. It seems too good to be true. Good bye and God Bless you. God keep you in health and bring you safely back."

The soldier who got the letter did not return.

"If you don't come back, what shall I do?" is the cry that comes from another woman's heart, and he did not come back.

Mr. Gaston will get into communication with the War Office about the relics, and as far as possible, they will be sent to their rightful owners.

CANADIAN ARTILLERY A MATCH FOR GERMANS

In Several Duels With the Krupp Output Canadian Gunners do Brilliant Work in Supporting Infantry Against the Crack Bavarians

LONDON, March 10.—Special—Messages from France say that the Canadian artillery has proved exceedingly efficient in several duels with the Germans. The Canadian gunners did brilliant work in supporting the infantry in recent encounters, and the Canadians are more than holding the Kaiser's crack Bavarian and Prussian Corps.

Other reports say that in an action at the end of last week the Canadians inflicted heavy losses on the enemy, and that our casualties were generally light. Warm tributes are paid to the fighting qualities of the Canadian division by General French.

Private Hutchison of Caledon East, Ont., invalided to England, tells me the Ontario men are in high spirits and taking things easy.

At Shorncliffe wintry weather attends the second Canadian contingent, who had their first route march to-day. All are well and comfortably housed in permanent barracks, and will complete their training under ideal conditions

CANADIAN TRADE WITH RUSSIA AND CHINA

The weekly report of the Department of Trade and Commerce of Canada, published March 1st, contains an excellent article of eight pages furnished by our old Belleville fellow citizen, Dr. J. W. Ross, Canadian Trade Commissioner in China, pointing out the potentialities of Russian and Chinese trade in the present and immediate future if Canadian manufacturers choose to take advantage of them. Every business man should look at this week's report. The work of Mr. Gordon B. Johnson, Canadian Representative to Japan, is being done by officials of the British Embassy during his absence at the front with the Royal Engineers.

BLOCKHOUSE DEMOLISHED AND TRENCHES PUSHED FORWARD

(Canadian Press Special)

PARIS, March 10.—This afternoon's official report says: North of Arras in the region of Notre Dame de Lorette, the night was quiet and the situation unchanged.

The importance of our progress yesterday in the Champagne district is confirmed. A violent counter attack made on Ridge 196 was vigorously repulsed and we gained a little ground along the road from Perthes to Tahure. On a hill northeast of Mesnil our infantry, after having carried the German works mentioned in the last communication, reached the hill beyond.

In the Argonne, at Fontaine Madame, we demolished a blockhouse and pushed our trenches 80 metres forward. Between Four-de-Paris and Bollante the enemy, attacking at 4 p.m., took from us some trenches we had captured in the morning. However, a fresh attack gave us possession of them once more. The enemy then attacked again, and according to the latest information, the fighting continues.

Was Farmers Bank A Bank?

Shareholders Think Not—Seek to Evade Nearly $1,000,000 Liability

TORONTO, March 9.—Whether the Farmers' Bank ever was a bank, in spite of the fact that it did business with the public for some time, is a question to be argued shortly before Official Referee J. A. McAndrew, K. C. Those whose names appeared in Government blue books as shareholders take the ground that as the charter was irregularly issued, the bank was never properly organized, and as a result they cannot be held liable under the double liability which applies to bank shareholders.

The matter comes before Official Referee McAndrew on an application to settle the list of contributories.

The amount involved is in the neighborhood of $1,000,000.

2nd Contingent Gets Busy Early

LONDON, March 10.—(Special.)—Visiting Shorncliffe Camp today I found the new contingent of Canadians just arrived, busy settling into new quarters. Officers and men alike are delighted with their quarters. The accommodation provided the new contingent leaves nothing to be desired. An English fashionable watering place on the south coast, the camp has a magnificent situation overlooking the English Channel. Special instructions had been issued by the War Office that everything should be done to render the quarters as comfortable as possible for the new contingent. The work of the garrison staff in this direction was much appreciated by the Canadian officers and men. On all hands I heard satisfaction expressed at the arrangements that had been made. The troops are lodged in the camp, consisting of permanent brick buildings, with all the conveniences.

The new body of men have already created a favorable impression by their smart appearance and their keenness to work. They are in close proximity to several regiments of Kitchener's army.

Although they have been only two days in camp, they have already seriously engaged in their military duties. The contingent is made up of several batteries of artillery and battalions of the Second Canadian Expeditionary forces. They were conveyed in three transports. The crossing I was informed, was delightful, particularly for this time of year. The sea was smooth. Drill and sports were organized on the different boats. The boats kept together until Queenstown was reached. There they separated. Disembarkation was expeditiously carried out, and this portion of the contingent reached here last Saturday.

Cannot Seize Neutral Cargo

LONDON, March 9.—Special—No belligerent Government has a right to requisition a cargo belonging to a neutral Government, according to a decree given out by the Prize Court yesterday

The question at issue arose over 1,000 tons of copper sent from the United States to Gothenburg, Sweden, and destined for the use of contractors to the Swedish Government. This cargo was captured by a British warship and an ex parte order was made by the Registrar of the Prize Court releasing the copper to the British Government, which desired to requisition it for the making of guns at the Woolwich Arsenal. The Swedish owners of the copper asked the Prize Court to discharge the order of the Registrar, and in spite of the opposition of the Attorney-General on behalf of the Government, Sir Samuel T. Evans, President of the Admiralty Court, decided in favor of the Swedes. He said the copper could not be disposed of pending the prize proceeding still to come before the court.

Spring Assizes At Picton

PICTON, March 10.—Special—The spring session of the Supreme Court jury and non-jury, was opened at Picton yesterday afternoon before Mr. Justice Middleton. Mr. Eric Armour is Crown Prosecutor. There are two criminal matters on the list, both for an offence against a girl under fourteen years of age. The one civil action is a contest over a will, or wills, of an old lady over eighty years of age who left property consisting of a farm worth about $6,000 and more than $15,000 in cash.

QUEEN OF THE SEAS ENTERS DARDANELLES

British Battleship Employs Direct Fire on Turk Forts—Weather is Unfavorable—Bombardment of Fort Medjidieh is Interrupted

LONON, March 10.—Bad weather conditions are again retarding the progress of the allied fleet up the Dardanelles, according to a statement issued by the French Ministry of Marine last night.

Significant, however, of the firmness of the allies resolve to smash their way to Constantinople with the least delay possible in the French official statement that the British super-Dreadnought Queen Elizabeth, supported by four cruisers, has actually entered the strait and is attacking the powerful Kilid Bahr batteries by direct fire. This means that fewer shells, if possible, will be wasted by the battleship's monster guns than when firing them over the Gallipoli Peninsula.

It is reported that a second super-Dreadnought has joined the British fleet.

Unofficial despatches indicate further progress in the reduction of the Smyrna fortifications by the British East Indian fleet, under the command of Vice-Admiral Peirse.

Shell Medjidieh Fort.

The official communication telling of the operations of the allied fleet in the Dardanelles issued by the French Ministry of Marine last night said:

"During the day of March 8 the British super-Dreadnought, Queen Elizabeth, supported by four cruisers, entered the Dardanelles, and with her great 381-millimetre guns bombarded Fort Rumili Medjidieh Tabia, situated on Point Kilid Bahr.

"The bad weather has hindered operations."

Fort Maidos, which is several miles above the Narrows, in the Dardanelles Straits, has been partly destroyed by shell fire from the allied fleets directed over the peninsula from the Gulf of Saros.

GERMAN SUBMARINE GOES TO BOTTOM

(Canadian Press Special)

LONDON, March 10.—The German submarine U-20 has been sent to the bottom, according to a statement issued today by the Admiralty. She was built in 1913. She had a displacement of 840 tons, and a speed of 17 knots on the surface and 12 knots submerged. She carried three tubes.

LONDON, March 10.—The U-20 was rammed today by the British destroyer Ariel and went to the bottom. Her crew surrendered and were saved. This makes the seventh German submarine officially announced as sunk since the war began, the others being the U-15, U-18, U-8 and three unidentified. It is believed that the U-20 sunk the steamer Blackwood yesterday. Her crew will be held for trial.

GIVEN THREE MONTHS NEWSPAPER SUSPENDED

(Canadian Press Special)

LONDON, March 10. Herr Geither, Socialist member of the Saxe Coburg Diet, has been sentenced to three months' imprisonment and his paper, the Gotha Volksblatt, suspended for commenting sarcastically on Emperor William's statement that he no longer knows parties but only Germans.

ITALIAN WARSHIPS FOR THE DARDANELLES

(Canadian Press Special)

GENEVA, March 10.—It has been learned from Vienna that several Italian warships have put to sea, probably bound for the Dardanelles.

NO INTERFERENCE MADE BY GERMANY

(Canadian Press Special)

ROME, March 10.—The Idea-Nazionale of Rome discusses the report that Germany has agreed with Italy that if Austria refuses Italy's desired territorial concessions no objections would be offered by Germany to an attack by Italy upon Austria, provided Italy did not enter into an alliance with the Triple Entente powers. The paper considers such an agreement impossible and a betrayal of Italy.

A fight occurred at Lisbon yesterday between workers in the naval arsenal and the police, over an increase in the price of bread.

FRANK HARTLEY ON TRIAL FOR MURDER

SLOWLY BUT SURELY ALLIES CREEP TO CONSTANTINOPLE

(Canadian Press Special)

LONDON, March 10.—As England sees it, not since the war began has the situation on land and sea been more favorable to the Allies than today Confident opinions of this nature are finding constant expression in London. Slowly but surely the allied fleet is creeping toward Constantinople, thus opening another road to Berlin. The retirement of von Hindenburg's army from North Poland is said to be imminent by many British observers. In the west the Allies claim ascendancy all along the line, though no decisive engagements are being fought, while in the Balkans and in Italy, according to British interpretation of the political news from these countries, the majority are clamoring for intervention on the side of Great Britain, France and Russia. This is said to be notably true in Greece and Roumania in spite of the fact that the Governments of these countries still cling outwardly to a policy of neutrality.

676 Men Face Death in Ice

Four Sealing Steamers Caught in Pack; May be Wrecked

ST. JOHN, Nfld., March 9.—Four sealing steamers, the Terra Nova, Viking, Trik and Diana, which sailed yesterday for the Gulf of St. Lawrence, were caught in an ice pack not far from port to-day and were driven ashore in a threatening blizzard.

The four steamers have a total of 676 men on board. It is believed that if conditions grow worse the steamers will be abandoned and the crews will endeavor to come across the ice to the short.

The steamers, which were among the first of the fleet to sail, were attempting to reach a channel port near Cape Race, from which point they were to clear for the sealing grounds.

A year ago more than 200 sealers perished in an ice park off the east coast.

Will Now Stage Fight at Havana

Jess Willard Has Agreed to Terms to Meet Jack Johnson

HAVANA, March 9.—A fight for the world's heavyweight pugilistic championship will take place at Havana, Saturday, April 3, between Jack Johnson and Jesse Willard.

The last obstacle in the way of having the fight take place here was removed this afternoon when Jack Curley, who endeavored to have the men meet at Juarez, Mexico, March 6, received a cable from Willard saying that he would start immediately for Havana, arriving there from New Orleans March 15.

The terms for the fight are identical with those which would have prevailed had the encounter taken place at Juarez. Mr. Curley will act as the chief promoter and will be assisted by Richard Klegin, managing director. The site for the battle has not yet been selected, but several excellent places are available.

Johnson began training to-day. Willard will probably have training quarters at Marianao.

What is Transpiring Among the Soldier Boys at Belleville and Kingston.

All articles and notes under this head are passed by the commanding officer of the 39th Regiment and authentic in every particular.

The 39th Battalion, consisting of about 1200 men, will shortly be mobilized in Belleville, and orders have been issued that no N.C.O. or man will be permitted to enter any hotel or liquor store before 6 p.m.

It is earnestly hoped that hotel keepers will co-operate with the authorities in refusing to serve soldiers before this hour.

If this order is not strictly adhered to by the proprietors, the Commanding Officer will seriously consider the placing "out of bounds" for all troops the house that does not comply with this request.

The undermentioned men joined the 39th Battalion, C.E.F., and were taken on the strength on the 9th March, and posted to "D" Company. The officer commanding this company is Major F. D. Boggs, Cobourg; the second in command is Captain H. Sauva, Cobourg. The platoon commanders are: Lt. B. B. S. Campbell, Picton; Lt. A. G. Thompson, Cobourg; Lt. R. G. H. Travers, Napanee; Lt. E. E. Brandon, Belleville. Attached—Lt. C. O'Connor Fenton, Cobourg.

Captain L. B. Carron, A.M.C. joined the 39th Bn. C.E.F., as Medical Officer in charge on the 8th of March. Capt. Carron should be of the greatest value to this Battalion, as he has had a great deal of previous war service, having been through the whole of the Boer War and being in possession of two medals for that campaign.

Pte. D. J. Batchelor has been promoted to Acting Hospital Sergeant in the Battalion, from the 9th of March.

The following have been taken on the strength of the Regimental Headquarters Staff, from the 9th of March: No. 340, Pte. E. Greer; No. 339, Pte. L. J. Challis; No. 130, Pte. F. E. Wise.

Nine armorers of the 21st Battalion will go to Quebec on the 11th of March for the purpose of taking a special course.

Mrs. W. S. Hughes and a number of ladies went to the ranges at Barriefield and the Colonel said they all dined at noon on "Mulligan," and had a most enjoyable feast and a general good time.

An Easy Way to Get Fat and Be Strong

The trouble with most thin folks who wish to gain weight is that they insist on drugging their stomach or stuffing it with greasy foods; rubbing on useless "flesh creams," or following some foolish physical culture stunt, while the real cause of thinness goes untouched. You cannot get fat until your digestive tract assimilates the food you eat.

Thanks to a remarkable new scientific discovery, it is now possible to combine into simple form the very elements needed by the digesive organs to help them convert food into rich, fat-laden blood. This masterstroke of modern chemistry is called Sargol and has been termed the greatest of flesh-builders. Sargol aims through its re-generative, reconstructive powers to coax the stomach and intestines to literally soak up the fattening elements of your food and pass them into the blood, where they are carried to every starved, broken-down cell and tissue of your body. You can readily picture the result when this amazing transformation has taken place and you notice how your cheeks fill out, hollows about your neck, shoulders and bust disappear and you take on from 10 to 20 pounds of solid healthy flesh. Sargol is absolutely harmless, inexpensive, efficient. J. S. McKeown and other leading druggists of Belleville and vicinity have it and will refund your money if you are not satisfied, as per the guarantee found in every package.

Caution:—While Sargol has given excellent results in overcoming nervous dyspepsia and general stomach troubles it should not be taken by those who do not wish to gain ten pounds or more.

MRS. WISENEIGHBOUR SAYS:—

"I should have told you the other day when I was speaking of "EDDY'S" Washboards, that it is just as necessary to have an indurated Fibreware Tub to hold your clothes if you want to make a success of washday."

MRS. NEWLYWED says: "I've heard of Eddy's Indurated Fibreware. What's the difference between Fibreware and Woodenware?"

"Fibreware is made from compressed fibre, baked at extreme heat, all in one solid piece, it cannot warp or fall apart, no chance of splinters—wears much longer—looks much better—and is lighter to carry. The latter point you should always take into consideration," concludes Mrs. Wiseneighbour.

COUNTRY CORRESPONDENCE

MELVILLE.

Mr. Thomas Kinnear met with a serious accident last week, which miraculously did not prove fatal, while working in the upper part of the barn, the board on which he stood, broke and he was precipitated several feet to the floor below, striking heavily against a wagon in his descent. Archer favored the audience with several selections. A vocal duet by Mr. Adam and Rev. Archer, and another by the Misses Campbell won well-merited applause. Instrumental solos by the skilled pianist, Mr. Adam, called for insistent encores. The League topic "ideals" was most interestly dealt with in a paper by Miss M. Campbell, while an address by Mr. Anson Raynor, on the construction and work of the shrapnel shell was of great interest, Mr. Raynor being engaged in the manufacture of these shells, and knowing whereof he speaks. The humorous part of the programme was well-sustained by Miss Olive Shourds, in her excellent rendering of "The Ruggles Family." The church was filled to the doors. At the close the visitors were treated by the Melville League to refreshments of sandwitches, cake and coffee.

MERELY A FIGUREHEAD

"Is the Kaiser a potentate or a puppet?" asks the New York Times. If he is what the world has always taken him to be, the dominant figure in his empire, then, working against war like a man "filled with some great religious emotion," he could have found means to make his work effective. He could have bent his Ministers and his Generals to his imperial will. There would have been no war. If he is a mere puppet, mastered and overborne by the war party in Berlin, why, then, there is a case for another revaluation. The world has looked upon Wilhelm II. as a great Emperor, resolute and controlling. If his Chancellor's story is true, then he is too weak and infirm of purpose for his great responsibilities. The Kaiser's admirers must make their choice,—either he wanted war and egged Austria on to begin war, or he is an Emperor only in his gauds and trappings, who lets his real men of State lead him around by the nose.

All the German apologists put the blame on Russia or on England. The latest, and on the whole the ablest, examination of the evidence of the diplomatic correspondence from the German point of view which has come into prominence places the responsibility for the war on Russia because of her early mobilization. Austria felt that the order to mobilize meant war with her; Germany regarded it as a menace not to be disregarded. That is the view imputed to the Kaiser by von Bethmann-Hollweg. What the Germans forget is that Russian diplomacy is vastly abler and more efficient than their own. The world has not yet seen the vitally important documents in the case, the interchanges between Vienna and Berlin. But we may be very sure that from the very day the note was despatched to Servia, Russia knew what was in the wind. She could put no faith in Austria's plausible assurances—nobody could—and she knew that behind Austria stood Germany. It was the old Bosnia-Herzgovina game, and Russia was not to be duped or bullied a second time in a matter of such momentous importance to her. Russia would have behaved like a simpleton had she not made ready, and events instantly justified her. Yet while Germany was giving all aid and encouragement to Austria to start the conflagration, von Bethmann-Hollweg would have Americans believe that the Kaiser suffered mental agony and distress of soul over the choice of words in a message intended to dissuade the Czar from putting his fire apparatus in order. Decidedly, it is the most dislikable picture of the great Hohenzollern that has ever been put on exhibition.

PROHIBITION IN RUSSIA — ITS MILITARY EFFECTS

The Czar of Russia said last April in a public document relating to the State monopoly of the manufacture and sale of spirituous liquors: "It is not meet that the welfare of the Exchequer should be dependent upon the ruin of the spiritual and productive energies of numbers of my loyal subjects." That is one reason why vodka has disappeared from Russia. For many years peasant members of the Duma and many of the intellectuals have urged the curtailing of the sale of spirits. They were met by the argument that the treasury was dependent in large measure upon the liquor profits, but in spite of that fact the Duma passed a bill extending the right of local option to all local bodies.

The Council of the Empire, the Upper House, endorsed the principle of the bill, but amended it to read that local prohibition should not be for more than three years. The Ministers were on the horns of a dilemma. They and the Czar wanted to reduce the consumption of liquor, and at the same time to maintain the finances. This was the attitude of the Government until the outbreak of the war. Then the sale of vodka was prohibited during the mobilization. The efficiency of the men was so increased that for military reasons the prohibition was made permanent. All liquors were included in the Czar's proclamation, and at one moment a net revenue of $118,000,000 a year ceased. To meet this amount, almost all direct and indirect taxes were raised slightly, and apparently without any great pressure on any class the deficit has been covered. Already there has been a saving in the administration of justice. The prisons are not now so fully occupied. The laborers are more efficient and their work is more profitable to themselves and to their employers.

In the army the results of prohibition are apparent to any student of history. The Russians, who fought at Zorndorf against Frederick the Great seemed drink-sodden and stupid. When their attack failed and Frederick got the better of them, they stood huddled together without offering any resistance, and the cavalry of Seidlitz crashed through them again and again until the sword-arms of the troopers were weary. Contrast that with the capacity the Russians show to-day for renewing the offensive. Contrast it with the heroic stand of a portion of the Tenth Army when surrounded in East Prussia, and with the desperate fighting in the Carpathians. Friends of Russia say that the Empire is likely to be transformed by the destruction of the vodka plague.

THE JITNEYS

The jitney bus service is being established in every part of the United States and must soon spread into Canada. Traction companies all over America are objecting. It means close competition for trolley lines, and naturally the companies object to any innovation which will detract from their profits.

The jitneys are started so easily. All that is necessary is the ownership of a motor car. It may be a Ford or a more expensive car. Then the route is selected and the jitney plies up and down that route, carrying passengers at 5 cents each.

The ovement has spread up and down the Pacific coast. In San Francisco last month there were 300 jitneys; in the trans-bay cities 450; in Los Angeles 1,050, in Portland, Oregon, 75; in Seattle 500. In those five centres there were altogether 2,375; they were taking in $19,000 a day, and their number was increasing.

The origin of the word jitney seems to be somewhat uncertain. Some declare that it is from the Yiddish word indicating a small affair. Others say that it is a word applied by boys of the street in their vernacular as meaning a five-cent piece. The latter derivation is probably correct.

The jitney has an unusual start. Nothing seems to be able to stop it. The system works with so little organization that difficulty is found by the traction companies in striking any sort of a blow to exterminate it. It serves the public admirably; people grasp the opportunity to patronize the system and its success in any community of size is said to be assured.—Montreal Mail.

The writer of the above article does not seem to be aware of the fact that the jitney bus service has already spread to Canada. In Toronto the service has been established in certain districts, and there, as in other large centres, the jitney will be a competitor of the trolley lines.

No doubt this latest mode of cheap transportation will reach the smaller cities of Ontario and in many of these places will have the field to themselves. For instance, in Belleville the jitney would not come into competition with the traction companies, and there should be an excellent field here for this newest system of transportation.

The Intelligencer would like to see a company organized and a try-out made here.

CURRENT COMMENT

Montreal Mail: "If German spies have been putting poisonous matter in the food of the Canadian troops, they should be kept, when caught, until worse punishment than boiling in oil has been discovered."

Toronto News: "The teachings of the lowly Nazarene, said Mr. R. C. Smith, K.C., to the Canadian Club, will rule the world when the Kaiser and his Krupps and their gospel of force are lost in contemptible oblivion." Let us hope the words will come true.

Opinions differ of course in the States as to the value of the longest Congress yet which has just closed; but the people will have to pay $1,120,000,600 for it in hard cash. Was value received? asks the Kingston Standard. Not on the ship-purchasing discussions.

Buffalo Express: "The thousands of men who were laid off last fall when the western railroads suspended road and construction work for the winter are to be put to work at once. This indicates a better feeling in western railroad circles, at least. It is a hopeful sign for the entire country."

Kingston Standard: "Senator Elihu Root will now be known as ex-Senator Root. He will be greatly missed; but it is to be hoped that his wise, straightforward manly, and honorable counrelz will for many years more to come be at the service of his country, and it might truly be said of the world."

It is said that the United States government is now sending notes to Carranza so different in tone from these that have hitherto been sent as to denote a complete change in policy. It is high time. The administration has clung with a tenacity worthy of a better purpose to the delusions born of inexperience and misinformation.

German Leaflets Mailed in City

MONTREAL, March 9.—That German agents, probably in the pay of Count Bernstorff and his Germanic propaganda, are busy in Montreal, was shown yesterday by the general distribution throughout the city of a very badly printed leaflet containing a bitter attack on the British people, alleged to have been made by Lieut.-Col. E. Emerson, one time of the U. S. Army, in Berlin last December, and reported in the New York American. These leaflets were mailed in Montreal, and were carried by the Canadian mails without trouble, but there was trouble when they reached their destination, since they caused general indignation that such a use of the mails could be carried out. Copies of this fly sheet were sent to controllers, aldermen, to officials of the Board of Trade, and probably to thousands of other people here, both French and English-speaking, the obvious intention being to bring to their notice matter which had been prohibited from the mails in the ordinary way.

Several copies of this sheet were sent to The Montreal Gazette last night, by both English and French-speaking people, who expressed anger at having such stuff sent to them through this country's mails, and there was every evidence that this move would prove as severe a boomerang as many of the other press and publicity campaigns started by Count Bernstorff and his organization at Washington.

The press matter purported to be part of a speech delivered by Lieut.-Col. E. Emerson, of the United States, at Berlin, on December 11 of last year, at which the American Ambassador, the U.S. Consul-General, and many American citizens were said to have been present.

Some excerpts from this speech show why the pro-Germans are anxious to secure its circulation. In the course of the address Lieut.-Col. Emerson is reported to have said:

Made Bitter Attack

"As a war correspondent from a neutral country, I could observe more freely and draw more unbiased conclusions, than would have been possible had I occupied an official position.

This leads me to speak of neutrality. We have heard that word very often in the last few months. England is even said to have declared war against Germany only on account of the violation of Belgian neutrality, for England's self appointed mission has ever been the protection of smaller peoples! One cannot help wondering what the Boers, the Persians and the Greek inhabitants of the little Island of Cyprus, recently annexed by England, must think of this.

Speaking of neutrality, we Americans who know this history of our country, can't help recalling bitterly how England broke all principles of neutrality during the black days of our civil war when, with her help, there was built, armed and sent out against us such formidable corsairs as the 'Alabama', which succeeded in almost wiping out all our American shipping, thus fulfilling one of England's heart desires."

"Most of you probably remember the time when Dr. Jameson with several hundred armed Englishmen made his famous raid into the neutral Boer republic. The German Emperor in a friendly telegram to President Krueger intimated what he thought of this breach of neutrality. England got so aroused that she mo[illegible] naval demonstration against Germany. Dr. Jameson since then has been rewarded by knighthood and other official British honors.

"Do you call that a regard for neutrality?

"The truth is that England does not care a fig about any principles of neutrality when her own interests are concerned. After all, neutrality is a mere international convention. What did we Americans care about Mexico's neutrality, when we took Vera Cruz, or of Nicaragua, or of Colombia when we took the Panama Canal zone?

"Just so, Germany could not bother about the technical observance of neutrality in Belgium, when the fate of the German nation was at stake. If Germany acts in this way, the papers term it a breach of neutrality; if England does it it is called 'fair play.'

"As a military man I would say, if I were in war and a hostile civil population were to fire on my troops, I would proceed in the same way as the Germans did in Louvain. Our American soldiers did the same thing in the Philippines.

"Just as the English are now using Hindoos, and Mohammedans, Portuguese, Japanese, as cannon food in their war with Germany, so the English in their war with us used the poor Hessians, and the Indians of North America."

Lieut.-Col. Emerson evidently knew his Berlin audience and framed his address to please them, and other enemies of Great Britain. It is likely that an investigation will be made as to who took advantage of the mails here to circulate such stuff in Canada, more with the idea of apprehending the nation's enemies than bothering about literature so evidently prepared to bolster up the cause of German savagery.

Dog's Faithfulness Saves His Master

Summons Stretcher-Bearers When Soldier is Buried in Ruined Trench

TORONTO, March 9.—The Paris Figaro makes itself responsible for the following story of the adventures with the French army of a dog that rejoices in the name of Fend l'Air.

Fend l'Air, it explains, was born in Algeria of unknown parentage, a street arab, that fended for itself from puppyhood. Intelligent and affectionate he devoted himself passionately to the master that chance gave him. The war called his master to serve under the colors and the dog managed to get on board with him. From Marseilles he crossed France and went to Belgium, taking part in the grand retreat. He was in the victory of the Marne, shared the life of the regiment in the trenches, and one night the trench which his master was helping to guard was blown by a shell.

Fend l'Air's master was buried, wounded. The dog scented out the exact place where he lay and started digging, until at last he succeeded in summoning the stretcher bearers, who saved the wounded soldier from what seemed certain death. The man has been taken to the American hospital at Neuilly and is recovering while the hospital rules have been relaxed so as to avoid the separation of the two friends.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY

To the Panama Pacific Exposition via the Canadian Rockies.

At the present time a great many are planning their annual tour. Considerable numbers visit the popular California Resorts, while many prefer the unsurpassed Resorts, Palatial Hotels and magnificent scenery of the Canadian Rockies. This year why not combine the two by a visit to the Panama Pacific Expositions?

Numerous people in comfortable circumstances, well able to afford a trip have the mistaken idea that a journey of this nature is most expensive. This is not so, thanks to modern railway facilities, an extensive trip both interesting and educative, can be made with speed and comfort at a comparatively small cost. Why not investigate?

Those contemplating a trip of any nature will receive full information from any C. P. R. Agent; or write M. G. Murphy, District Passenger Agent, Toronto.

BRITAIN TAKES OVER 1,500 BRITISH SHIPS

WASHINGTON March 9—(Special.)—Some idea of the size of the auxiliary fleet Great Britain is using to move and sustain her armies in the field may be gained from a report on shipping conditions from American Consul Lathrop at Cardiff, Wales.

Fifteen hundred British vessels, he reports, aggregating more than 3,500,000 tons, have been taken over by the British Admiralty on time charters, the Government taking all responsibility and agreeing to return the vessels as received.

ONE COW; FOUR CALVES

(Renfrew Mercury)

Mr. John E. Dolan of Portage-du-Fort had a great surprise when he went to his stable the other morning to find that his valuable Durham cow had given birth to four calves, three of which are still living and are quite smart. The night being cold and the cow being tied in a single stall, the fourth calf got chilled and died later in the day. Had the calf got proper care it might have lived. The three heifer calves living are all the same size and look very much alike. Many people from the surrounding country have called to see the cow and her triplets.

A WIG IN WARTIME

By DONALD CHAMBERLIN

In the spring of 1914 I joined the European invasion of American tourists and made Germany my stamping ground. Before leaving home I sent to Washington for a passport, for, though at the time there was not much prospect of using one, I preferred to be provided. The document described me as Edward Boyer, aged thirty-one, five feet eight inches high, eyes, hair and complexion dark.

In Berlin I contracted typhoid fever, and when I recovered my hair fell out, leaving my skull as polished as a piece of ivory.

On the 28th of July the bomb of the European war exploded and I was admonished that if I wanted to get out of the war zone and back home I must bestir myself. I had not yet recovered my strength, but I was due in America on the 18th of August and resolved to start at once.

The first thing needed was a wig. I sallied forth to get one, having just an hour before the train on which I was to leave would start. This gave me about twenty minutes to procure a hair head covering. I found a place where such things were sold, but unfortunately the only wig they had that would fit my head was of an auburn hue. There was no other place to procure one within a dozen blocks. I looked at my watch and saw that I had just ten minutes to get the train. I paid for the auburn wig, clapped it on my head and started for the station.

I was on the last passenger train to leave Berlin. The war was brand new to me, but not to the Germans, who were prepared for it. Two things especially I had not considered, for I had not heard of them—the Germans' spy system and their methods of detecting their enemy's spies.

I was brought to my senses by seeing a German officer come through the train examining passports. I had mine in a hand bag, got it out and had it ready when the man reached me. He read the description, looked at me, and, noticing my red wig, his expression changed at once to one of fierceness. He said something to us in German that I did not understand and, calling some soldiers, turned me over to them for safe keeping, then went his way through the train.

An American gentleman who understood German announced to me the unpleasant information that I had been arrested as a French spy. He had heard the officer say that the passport I traveled on belonged to one having a French name and that it described a black headed man, while I was a red headed man. Never had there been a more barefaced attempt to carry information out of Germany for the use of an enemy.

Here was a pretty pass. In my hurry to get away I had forgotten my passport, or, rather, I had thus far not been required to show it, and it had not occurred to me that the document would be now required.

When we reached a city—I didn't know what city—I was taken from the train and conducted to the headquarters of an officer who, I judged by the respect paid him, was of high rank. He received me with a lowering brow, read the description in my passport and, looking at my wig, said what by his expression I judged to mean, "Take him out and shoot him."

The soldiers advanced to take me. In a fit of desperation I seized my red wig and, throwing it on the floor, trampled on it and cried out, "I am not a red headed man; I am an American citizen."

There must have been something ridiculous in the act, for the officer burst into a laugh. Then an interpreter was called, who translated my story. As soon as it was understood that I was an American and the passport belonged to me I was set at liberty, with an apology. Realizing that my train had gone on, I asked for a permit to travel on a troop train, and one was given me.

I could not endure to travel without my wig, so I retained it. During my journey through Belgium I fell in with a Frenchman with a red head. As soon as we passed into France he gave me his passport, which he no longer needed. Having had so much trouble with my own passport, I decided that possibly I might have use for the other, so I accepted it.

While working my way south toward Paris I was set upon by a party of French spy hunters. Thinking to get rid of them without their noticing the difference in my hair from that laid down in my passport, I used the one given me. Unfortunately a keen eyed fellow noticed how the hair of my wig fell on my neck and, grasping the wig, held it up amid shouts from the others, crying:

"A spy! A spy!"

Again I was taken before an officer—this time a Frenchman, who, on receiving the report of my captors, ordered me out to instant execution. I stood before him with folded arms and uncovered dome and cried in a stentorian voice:

"Je suis Americain!"

I suppose it was the absurdity this time as well as before that saved me. The officer laughed, consented to listen to me, and, since I spoke French tolerably, I told my story, producing my own passport.

And so my life for the second time was saved by mock heroics, and I reached Paris without further trouble.

The man with money is concerned mostly with the way his trousers hang in the leg. The man without money is more concerned with the way they wear in the seat.

Romance Versus Matter of Fact

By OSCAR COX

There is a little Indian girl up on Hudson bay who has never been out of her native woods. She speaks poetically, as all aborigines do. Her vocabulary is small, but she makes up for the deficiency of words in imagery. One summer Miss Susan Jones, a matter of fact young woman as ever trod the soil, took it into her head to spend her vacation in upper Canada. These two met in the Indian girl's home on the banks of the Little Whale river. Miss Jones said she had heard much of Indian legends and asked—I didn't get the girl's name; Miss Jones said it was Minne-Something-or-Other—to tell her one. Thereupon the Indian told the following story:

"Abasca was the daughter of a great chief, who lived long, long ago when the first white man came to this country. She had never seen any man except a"—

"Indian," suggested Miss Jones.

"She had only seen the dusky men of the forest like herself. The first man to come was tall as the young pine, straight as the arrow and his eye was that of the eagle. Abasca saw him, and her heart flew to him like the bird."

"A case of love at first sight, you mean?"

"Abasca was loved by Stormwind, the son of a chief. Stormwind was brave as the water that leaps from the rock, and his arrow could pierce the leaf that trembles at the top of the tree"—

"A regular William Tell," Miss Jones interrupted.

"He had not the heart to give way to another. He was not born to know that to love Abasca truly he should give her to the man she loved. The white man might do that, not the Indian. Stormwind learned that she had given her heart to the white man, and he resolved that the white man should die.

"Stormwind made this vow at the season when in this country the lamp never goes out at night."

"Did they use kerosene or oil?"

"For the winter had passed when the sun at midday is small and cold in the south. The white man was in the wood where he hunted the fox and the mink and the otter. Stormwind followed the trail and came to his enemy when the sun stood high above their heads.

"'Trapper,' said Stormwind."

"What a funny name! I like Stormwind much better."

"'The white man may come; the white man may hunt the fox and the mink and the otter; he may ride in his boat over the waves of the great bay, but he shall not take the maiden from the Indian.'

"When he said this Stormwind fitted an arrow to his bow. It may be he had never seen the white man's rifle; it may be he had never seen the white man raise the rifle quickly to his shoulder and the deer far away drop dead. Before he had fitted his arrow to his bow and pointed it at his enemy the white man's eye ran along the barrel of his weapon."

"Trapper had the drop on him, hadn't he? How thrilling! Go on!"

"'Stormwind,' he said, 'put back your arrow into your quiver before I send the lead into your heart. Abasca is yours. I do not wed here in the forest. The white man loves the white woman, not the Indian squaw.'

"From the woods came a piercing shriek. The white man lowered his rifle and the red man his bow. It was a woman's voice they heard. From a cliff near by it came again, fainter, but more despairing than before. It was the echo."

"For heaven's sake, what was it? A spook?"

"It was the wail of Abasca. She had seen Stormwind go away with the look of an angry Manitou on his brow, and she knew that he was going to fight the man she loved. Seizing a rifle from the tepee, she followed her dusky lover and saw him when he spoke to"—

"Trapper."

"She held her rifle to her shoulder ready when Stormwind was about to send his arrow to his rival's heart or when the white man raised his rifle to kill the man she did not love."

"She must have been awfully rattled."

"When she heard the white man say he did not love her she dropped her rifle, giving a cry that caused the white cloud sailing in the heavens above to tremble."

"I wonder she hadn't shot the brute."

"Then the white man and the Indian went in the direction from whence the sound came and saw on a high rock the form of Abasca. She was on the edge of a deep gulf beneath her, swaying here and there as the branch is moved by the wind. Then slowly her head bowed over the chasm, and as the bird folds its wings and drops her beautiful form descended to death."

"You wouldn't catch me doing that for the handsomest man that ever lived. What did the men do then?"

"The white man went back to the white man's country; the Indian went out on the bay, and the storm wind, for which he was named, arose and claimed him."

"I'll bet that man Trapper was paying alimony to some woman in the states. He was just mean enough to fool that poor Indian girl."

When the man to whom you are telling the story becomes restive that is no indication that it is a poor story. It merely is an indication that he wants to tell a story himself.

Agricultural News

CARDINAL FACTS

This is Canada's war.

What will the Harvest be?

Increase of knowledge means increase of production.

The first essential for the highest yield is good seed.

Not only grain growers, but breeders and all producers are making history at this juncture.

Value of the crop is increased if treated for smut prevention.

Failure to secure suitable varieties is a frequent cause of poor ensilage.

All grain intended for seed should be cleaned and graded, in order to retain only the strong kernels.

Farmers who have separate houses for their laborers have no difficulty in securing help.

Good labor is worth employment in winter as well as in spring, summer and autumn.

If labor is scarce now, it will not be more plentiful in another year, so it is wise to encourage present help.

A bureau of employment could find useful work in every town of size.

Austria has decreed that every acre must be utilized for production. Wasting land is the worst form of extravagance.

When manure is piled and allowed to heat, the vitality of most of the seeds is destroyed; but when drawn to the field from the stable, or not left long enough in the pile to become well rotted, manure is one of the most important means of seed dispersal.

Canada is many time larger in area than Belgium, but in population there is not a great deal of difference, that is, considering Belgium before the war. Britain is the protector of small states. The greater the area and variety of area, the more protection is needed when emergency arises.

TREATMENT OF SMUT

Commissioner Clark writing in the Agricultural War Book on "Treatment for Smut Prevention" says that in Eastern Canada there is considerable smut in the grain crops each year, but that it has not been sufficiently prevalent to make treatment for its prevention general. The losses, however, are much greater than is commonly realized, and the value of the crop could be considerably increased if treatment for smut prevention were more generally practiced. Over half the samples of fall wheat collected in Ontario contain smut, and it is also very common in the spring crops, especially oats. Reports on the samples treated indicate that formalin, one pound in forty gallons of water, is much more popular than bluestone as a preventive.

FOUGHT HARD TO KEEP HIS JOB

Indiana Man All Run Down—Had No Strength—No Energy Left—Blood Poor—How Vinol Helped Him.

Shelbyville, Ind.—"I was all run-down, had no energy, my blood was so poor I felt badly all the time and my face was covered with pimples. I am a clerk in the hotel and had to put up an awful fight to keep at work.

"I tried Beef, Iron and Wine, and other remedies without benefit. I learned of how Vinol had helped others and decided to try it. After taking the first bottle I noticed a great improvement in my condition. I continued taking it and now I am rid of all my troubles and cannot say anything too good for Vinol."—ROY F. BIRD, Shelbyville, Ind.

For all run-down, weak, devitalized conditions of men and women, nothing equals Vinol, our delicious cod liver and iron tonic without oil.

Vinol is a constitutional remedy. It creates an appetite, aids digestion, makes pure, healthy blood. In this natural manner it builds up strength and vitality.

Try a bottle with the understanding you can get your money back if Vinol does not help you.

"WAR"

• • •

Canadian rights controlled by British and Colonial Press, Limited, Toronto.

BARONESS VON SUTTNER the Authoress

We sisters enjoyed society in the extreme. It was really my first glimpse, too, for I had married so soon that I had missed the gaiety and attentions. My crowd of admirers, however, did not impress me much for between us there lay a chasm. Brilliant young beaux chatting of ballroom, court, and theatre, had not the faintest glimpse of the things which my life was beginning to depend upon. Though I had only begun to lisp the language of the higher things of soul and science, yet that was farther removed from these chatterers than Greek or even Patagonian. I had begun to think in the tongue with which men of science would some day debate, and finally solve the greatest riddles of the world.

It was quite certain that in such a circle I would scarcely find a congenial mate, and I carefully avoided all entangling rumors, devoted myself to my boy, plunged into study kept in touch with the intellectual world, read and relished keenly all the latest things. This barred me from many of the frivolities, and yet I keenly enjoyed the gaiety, the company, and dancing. I longed to open my salon to a few of the upper world of scholarship, but my social position made that impossible. I dared not hope to mix the classes in Vienna. Since that day the exclusive spirit has changed, and fashion to-day finds it acceptable to open its doors to brains of the rarer sort. But at that time it would have been quite impossible to receive except such as were presentable at court—counting at least sixteen ancestors. Our own social set would not have been able to converse with the thinking class, and the latter class would have found it intolerably dull to mingle with a drawing-room full of sportsmen, cloister-bred girls, old generals, and canonesses. All the talk was a vapid recital of where the last ball had been and the next one was to be—perhaps at Schwartzenberg's or Pallavincial's; who was the latest adorer of Baroness Pacher, and the latest rejected of the Countess Palffy; how many estates had Prince Croy; was Lady Amalay's title from her father's or mother's side? Could such drivel possibly have interested the intellectual set?

Occasionally an able statesman, diplomat, or man of genius cropped up among us, but they always assumed the frivolous conversation of the rest. A quiet after-dinner chat with some of our parliamentarians or men of mark would have been made impossible almost, for hardly would the conversation turn on some political or scientific subject when it would be interrupted with, "Ah, dearest Countess Dotzky, how charming you looked yesterday at the picnic! And are you going to the Russian embassy tomorrow?"

* * *

"Allow me, dear Martha," said my cousin Conrad Althaus, "to introduce Lieutenant-General Baron Tilling." I bowed and arose, thinking the introduction meant an invitation to dance.

"Pardon me, Countess," he said, with a slight smile, showing a perfect row of teeth, "I do not dance."

"So much the better, for I would like a moment's rest," I said, reseating myself.

"I was bold enough to ask for the introduction, for I had some information for you," he continued.

I looked up at him in surprise. He was no longer young, somewhat grey, and with a serious countenance, but withal a distinguished and sympathetic face.

"I will not intrude, Countess, but what I have to tell you is not suited to a ballroom chat. If you will fix the hour, I will come to you with it."

"I am at home on Saturdays between two and four."

"I would rather see you alone."

"Then come to-morrow at the same hour." The Baron bowed and left me. Later, Cousin Conrad passed; I called him to my side and questioned him concerning Tilling.

"Ah ha! Has he so impressed you that you are setting an investigation on foot? He is unmarried, but a distinguished princess of the reigning house has him entangled in her silken web, and therefore he does not wish to marry. His regiment has just been ordered here, but he is no friend of society. I meet him every day at the 'Noble' Club,' where he always seems absorbed in the papers or a game of chess. I was astonished to see him here, but the hostess is his cousin. After speaking with you he went away immediately."

Young Society Matron Lays Down Rules

In discussing the approaching social season, a young matron says that the success of every event, whether in home, church or Club, depends upon the foresight of the women months before.

The brilliancy, charm and success of a party is dependent upon the physical condition ow the hostess. She cannot be entertaining, witty or clever, if she is loaded down with all the complains a woman is heir to; and very few are free from the troubles which bring with them dizziness, backache, sick headache, sleeplessness and intense nervousness.

Thousands upon thousands of mothers, wives and daughters in every section of this great country, who have regained health, vigor and cheerful disposition after months of misery and even despair are the ones who truly appreciate the marvelous restorative power of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription.

Every woman who has reason to believe that backache, headache, unnatural pains, low spirits, sleepless nights is caused by a derangement of the womanly functions, owes it to herself and dear ones to speedily overcome the trouble before a general break down causes permanent prostration.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is a remedy that any ailing woman can safely take because it is prepared with pure glycerine from roots and herbs containing tonic properties of the most pronounced character and without alcohol.

Get Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription to-day, either in liquid or tablet form, at any dealer in medicines, if you want to better your physical condition surely and speedily. Every ingredient in Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is printed along with the directions.

Every ailing woman should write to day for confidential advice to a specialist who has had years of experience in treating diseases peculiar to women. His advice is given without charge, and writing places you under no obligation whatever. Simply address Dr. Pierce, Invalids' Hotel, Buffalo, N.Y.

Dr. Pierce's medicines are manufactured in Canada, at the World's Dispensary, Bridgeburg, Ont.

"And he was introduced to no other ladies?"

"No; but do not imagine that it was your beauty that brought him down at long range, and therefore asked to know you. He merely questioned: 'Could you tell me whether a certain Countess Dotzky, formerly an Althaus, probably a relative of yours, is here to-day? I want to speak to her.' I pointed to you. 'There she sits in the blue dress.' 'Oh,' said he, 'that is she? Will you introduce me?' And I brought him over with no idea that I would disturb your peace of mind."

"Such nonsense, Conrad, as though my peace were so easily ruffled! Tilling! What family is that? The name is new to me."

"So you are interested? Perhaps he is the lucky fellow. I who have tried for three months to interest you in me must step aside for this cold-hearted lieutenant-colonel. Let me warn you, he is without feeling. The Tilling family, I believe, is of Hanoverian origin, although his father was an Austrian officer and his mother a Prussian. Did you note his North German accent?"

"He speaks beautiful German."

"You find everything about him beautiful, no doubt." Conrad rose. "I have heard enough. Let me leave you to dream—I can find plenty of beautiful ladies who——"

"Who will think you charming Conrad. Indeed there are plenty."

I was uneasy and left the ball early. Surely not to be able to think uninterruptedly about the new friend although I found myself doing it! At midnight I enriched the red book with the conversation given above, and added my unpleasant doubts that he might even then be sitting at the feet of the princess. I ended my sentence by envying her—not Tilling, oh no!—for being beloved by some one. My waking thought was once more—Tilling. Naturally; had he not made an appointment for that day? For some time nothing had excited me like this visit.

At ten minutes past two the Baron von Tilling was announced.

"As you see, Countess, I am prompt," he said, kissing my hand.

"Luckily, for I am overwhelmed with curiosity to know your news."

"Then, without delay, I will tell you. It is this: I was in the battle of Magenta."

"And you saw Arno die?" I cried

"Yes. I can tell you of his last moments, and it will be a relief to you. Do not tremble, for if the truth had been shocking I would not tell you."

"You take a weight from my heart. Go on, go on!"

"The empty phrase, 'He died as a hero,' I will not use. But it will comfort you to know that he died instantly and without knowing it. We were often together, and he was so confident of his safety. He showed me the pictures of his wife and boy, and insisted that after the campaign I should be his guest. I chanced in the Magenta massacre to be at his side. I will not relate the terrible scenes. The intoxication of the warrior passion had quite seized Dotzky in the thick of the bullet-hail and powder fog. His eyes were blazing and he was fighting like mad. I, who was sober, saw it all. Suddenly a shell, and ten men—Dotzky among them—fell. He was instantly killed, but many of them shrieked in agony. All but he were shockingly mangled, but we had to leave them, for a charging column came upon us with a murderous hurrah, pell-mell over the dead and wounded. Lucky those who were dead! After the battle I found Dotzky, with the placid smile on his face, a painless look, and in the same spot and position. I have meant for several years to come and tell you, and relieve you of a painful uncertainty. But forgive me if I have recalled torturing memories."

The Baron rose to go, and I thanked him while drying my tears: "You cannot know what a relief it is to feel that he died without agony. But stay. A certain tone in your remarks has touched a like strain in my thought. Tell me frankly, you too hate war?"

His face darkened: "Forgive me if I cannot stop to discuss the subject. I am sorry, but I am expected elsewhere."

A cold expression passed over me and the unpleasant thought of the princess came into my mind. "Then I will not detain you, Colonel," I said coldly, and he left without asking if he might be allowed to come again.

CHAPTER II.

The carnival over—Rosa and Lilli were still fancy free, and I was feeling that the dancing was growing monotonous. I find all my impressions noted in the red book. Society was not dropped, for Lent brought it rounds as well; sermons and church were quite as popular a meeting place for the friends as were the opera and ballroom earlier in the season. I was not quite pious enough to suit Aunt Marie, who dragged the girls off to hear all the famous preachers. I spent my evenings by the fire with books, and I devoted myself afresh to my boy. I repeated Tilling's story to my father, but he considered it of no importance that Arno died without pain. How differently Tilling had regarded the matter, and I did not repeat his words to my father, for he would only instinctively have despised him for his unsoldierly sentiments. How gladly I would further have discussed the question of war with Tilling, but alas! he never called, and I only casually met him in public occasionally. But even those meetings and greetings lingered in my thought.

One morning at breakfast my father handed me a parcel: "My dear, here is a parcel for you, and I have a favor to ask."

"A present and a request," I laughed; "that's bribery."

"Yes. I must have three old generals and their wives to dinner, a stiff, tedious affair, and I want you to come to my house and do the honors."

"And you evidently wish to sacrifice your daughter, as the ancient father Agamemnon sacrificed Iphigenia."

"I added a younger element for your sake—Dr. Bresser, for one; he treated me in my last illness, and I wish to show my appreciation. I also invited Lieutenant-Colonel Tilling. Ah, you blush; what is the matter with you?"

"Me?" I said, hiding my confusion by hastily breaking open the parcel.

"It is nothing for you, only a box of lead soldiers for Rudolf."

"But, father, a child of four——"

"Nonsense; I played at soldiers when I was three. My earliest memory is of drums, swords, words of command and marching. That is the way to start the boys to love the profession."

"But my son shall never be a soldier," I interrupted.

"Martha, you know it would be his father's wish."

"The boy belongs to me now, and I object."

"His life shall not be risked in war, he is my only son."

"As an only son I became a soldier; Arno and your brother also. The traditions of both families require it that the offspring of a Dotzky and an Althaus shall devote his service to his fatherland."

"His country needs him less than I, and there are other ways of serving one's country."

"If all mothers were like you——"

"There would then be fewer parades and reviews, fewer men to slay as food for bullets. That would hardly be a misfortune."

Much provoked, my father said: "Oh you women! Luckily the young do not ask your permission, when soldier's blood flows in their veins. But Rudolf will not remain your only son, you will marry again. By the way, what has become of all your admirers? There is Captain Olensky seriously in love with you. Just lately he poured it all out to me, and I should like him as a son-in-law."

"I do not care for him for a husband."

"How about Major Millersdorf?"

"You may call the whole army roll, [illegible]" And I turned the subject: "When is the dinner?"

"At five. Come down earlier. Adieu, I must go. Kiss Rudi for me—the future Field-Marshal of the Imperial Army."

Could the dinner be a "stiff, tiresome affair," when the presence of Baron Tilling moved me in such a singular way? We had no occasion to speak at the table, being separated, and even after the dinner, while serving the coffee in the drawing-room, the two old generals remained my faithful attendants. I longed to speak to Tilling again about the battle-scene, and hear his sympathetic voice. But the circle left no opportunity for me to talk with him. The conversation ran on the usual topic.

"It will soon break out again," suggested one old general.

"Hum," said the other, "next time it will be with Russia."

"Must there always be a next time,' I interrupted, but no one took notice.

"Italy first," persisted my father. "We must get back Lombardy. We should march into Milan as we did with Father Radetzky in '49.' I remember, it was a bright sunny morn——"

"Oh!" I exclaimed in a panic, "we all know the story of the entry into Milan."

"And the story of the brave Hupfauf, also?" asked my father.

"Yes, and it is most revolting."

One of the group broke in diplomatically: "Let us hear it, Althaus."

My father needed no encouragement.

"Hupfauf was a Tyrolese Jager, and the best shot imaginable. He proposed to take four comrades to the roof of the cathedral and shoot down on the rebels. The four did nothing but load, and he shot, hitting the mark every time and killing ninety Italians."

"Horrible!" I exclaimed. "Each one shot had a mother or sweetheart at home, and had a right to his young life."

"My dear, they were all enemies, and that alters the point of view."

"Ah, true," said Dr. Bresser, "the whole world is turned upside down so long as there is racial enmity, and the laws of humanity will receive but slight recognition."

"What do you say, Baron Tilling?" I asked.

"I would have decorated the gallant breast of the man, from the point of view of war ethics, and then put a bullet into his stony heart. He deserved both."

I gave the speaker a grateful look, and, except the doctor, all the guests seemed unpleasantly affected, and a short pause ensued in the talk.

The doctor then turned to my father, asking, "Have you read the new work by the English naturalist, Darwin?"

"I know nothing of it."

"Why, papa," I exclaimed, "that is the book you told me would soon be forgotten by the world."

"And, so far as I am concerned, it is forgotten."

"But," continued the doctor, "it has quite turned the world upside down with its new theory of the origin of species."

"You mean the ape theory?" asked the general at the right. "The idea that we are descended from the ourang-outang?"

"Upon the whole," the cabinet minister began, nodding (and when he began thus we all trembled, for he was getting ready for a long discourse) "the thing seems absurd, but we dare not take it as a joke. The theory is powerfully built up on collected facts, and ingeniously worked out. Like all such rash conceptions it will find its followers and produce a certain effect on modern thought. It is a great pity it has been given so much consideration. Of course, the clergy will array itself against the degrading theory that man is derived from the brute, rather than from God's image. No wonder they are shocked and denounce it. But church condemnation cannot prevent the spread of ideas that come in the garb of science. Until men of science themselves reduce it to an absurdity——"

"What folly!" broke in my father, fearing that his guests might be bored. "One needs only a bit of common-sense to reject the absurd notion that man has descended from apes."

Swollen, Aching Veins

A COMMON CAUSE OF DISCOMFORT.

The army of people troubled with swollen veins is a large one and was steadily on the increase until the discovery a few years ago that a germicide-liniment of marked value for other ailments gave prompt relief from this aggravating trouble.

Since this accidental discovery hundreds of sufferers have proven its efficiency—it has made good even in cases of long standing.

Mr. R. C. Kellogg, Becket, Mass., before using this remedy, suffered intensely with painful and inflamed veins; they were swollen, knotted, and hard. He writes: "After using one and one-half bottles of Absorbine, Jr., the veins were reduced, inflammation and pain gone, and I have had no recurrence of the trouble during the past six years."

This germicide-liniment—Absorbine, Jr. is made of herbs and safe and harmless to use, which in itself makes it distinctive. Most druggists have it or send $1.00 to the manufacturer, W. F. Young, P. D. F., 457 Lymans Bldg., Montreal Can., and a bottle will be mailed to you promptly. Safe delivery guaranteed.

Procuring a small sum of money by false pretences, not only landed Jas. Crysdale in jail for the present, but he may receive a heavy sentence, as this is by no means his first offence. The soldiers' marching song, "It's a Long Way to Tipperary", was rendered in a most enthusiastic manner. At the close the National Anthem was rendered. A number present were from Avondale, Front of Sidney.

The Turk Liar Turns To Persia

AMSTERDAM, March, 9.—An official statement from the Turkish war ministry, as received here to-day from Constantinople, says that the British lost 400 men in the recent battle at the head of the Persian gulf.

The statement follows: "Three battalions of British infantry, with two quick-firing field guns, two mountain guns, one machine gun section and one squadron of cavalry, attempted on March 3 to attack our positions in the region of Ahwaz (in Khuzistan).

"After a counter-attack by our troops the British fled in disorder to their ships, leaving 400 dead or wounded. Among the dead were one British major and four other officers.

"We captured three guns, 500 rifles, 200 horses and a great quantity of Red Cross material. Our losses were insignificant."

MOTOR PRESENTED BY CANADIAN AUTOMOBILE CO.

The McLaughlin Carriage Co. of Oshawa have established a precedent in their generous and valuable gift of a 3 Horse Power Motor Ambulance for service at the front.

Their lead, however, has been quickly followed. Last week the Lincoln County Council inspected the McLaughlin Ambulance in the Company's showrooms and unanimously decided to order a similar one and donate it to the Canadian Red Cross Society, on behalf of their country.

In appearance it expresses efficiency and practicability. It is grey green in color, with top and sides of specially proofed waterproof duck. The sides can be rolled up to give air when required, or left down for perfect protection. It is so arranged inside, that the seat may be turned into beds for stretchers.

It is understood that several other organizations, such as Municipalities, Sabbath Schools, etc., are contemplating similar donations and in connection with this fact, it is interesting to note that the McLaughlin Company have made special arrangements, by which these ambulances will be turned over to such organizations, for presentation to the Red Cross, at manufacturers' prices.

The Red Cross Society has announced that there is no limit at the present time to the number of such machines actually needed for service at the front.

In mixing flattery for the women, use one part fact and three parts fiction. In mixing flattery for the men, leave out the fact.

Atlantic Rate War Coming

Canadian Lines Will Meet Cut Announced by Cunard Company

MONTREAL, March 9.—Considerable surprise was caused in shipping circles yesterday by cables from England announcing that the Cunard line had inaugurated a cut in trans-Atlantic rates, making a flat rate of $50 on all vessels for second-class passengers. This includes their best boats, such as the Lusitania, and it was stated that the cut meant a reduction of from $5 to $10 per ticket, according to the vessel. Coming at this time, when trans-Atlantic travel is probably smaller than during the past quarter of a century, with fewer ships than have been known in the service for many years, the steamship men frankly admitted that they could not quite understand what it meant.

One thing however they were positive about, and that was that if the Cunard people started reducing rates they would meet the cuts. Whether it will mean the commencement of a rate war or not it is too early to surmise, but once the rate cutting starts it is not easy to figure where it will end, since opposing companies may not be content with meeting the reduced rates.

So far the new rate proposed by the Cunard line only affects second class passages, the prices for first-class and third being left untouched. While the Cunard line at present have no boats on the Canadian route, owing to the exigencies of the war, it was stated that their cut in rates would affect vessels sailing from Portland and Halifax, and St. John as much as those from New York.

At the offices of the White Star-Dominion and Allan lines it was stated that the position was not yet clear, in fact the officials could not understand why anyone at such a time should start a rate war. They had only received notifications of the Cunard line's reduction in rates a few hours before by cable, and could not make any statement, save that if it came to a question of cutting prices they would meet any reductions without delay. It is likely that similar steps would be taken by the Canadian Pacific. So far as the Canadian Northern and Cunard lines are concerned on the Canadian route they are not interested, since all their vessels have been commandeered for the British Government war service.

PIRATES MAY BE TREATED AS COMMON MURDERERS

British Admiralty Does Not Feel Like Extending Honorable Treatment to 29 Officers and Men of German Submarine U-8 Sunk Last Week

LONDON, March 9.—(Special.)—"The Board of the Admiralty does not feel justified in extending honorable treatment to the twenty-nine officers and men of the sunken German submarine U.-8, on the ground that they were guilty of attacking and sinking unarmed merchantmen."

The significant statement was issued last night by the Official Press Bureau.

The statement fails to make clear exactly what treatment will be extended to the captured Germans. There has been a persistent demand throughout England that they be handled as pirates. Lord Charles Beresford recently asked the Prime Minister in the House of Commons whether the crews of German submarines which sank unarmed merchant ships without warning would be treated as pirates and tried for murder. Mr. Asquith replied that the Government had the matter under advisement, and was not then prepared to announce its policy.

The statement refers to the generous treatment accorded German officers and men saved by the British, numbering upward of one thousand, and then says with reference to the U-8:

"This vessel has been operating in the Straits of Dover and in the English Channel, and there is a strong probability that she had been guilty of attacking and sinking unarmed merchantmen and firing torpedoes at ships carrying non-combatants, neutrals and women. In particular, the steamer Oriole is missing, and there is grave reason to fear that she has been sunk with all hands—twenty.

"There is, of course, great difficulty in bringing home particular crimes to any individual German submarine, and it may be that the evidence necessary to establish conviction will not be obtained until after the conclusion of peace. Meantime, persons against whom such charges are pending must be subject to a special restriction, and cannot be accorded the distinction of their rank or be allowed to mingle with other prisoners of war."

A report received from Rear-Admiral the Hon. Horace Hood on the sinking of the U-8, as made public by the Admiralty, shows that the submarine was finally destroyed by the torpedo-boat destroyers Gurkha and Maori. The other destroyers which took part in the hunt were the Viking, Nubian, Mohawk, Falcon, Kangaroo, Cossack, Levene, Fawn and Ure. The operations were directed by the officer commanding the flotilla, Captain C. D. Johnson, and were marked by skill and promptitude, according to the report.

Survivor Tells of Submarine's Work

Piece of Wreckage Saved One Man —No Vessels Had Warning

WEST HARTLEPOOL, March 10.—The crew of 38 men of the British steamer Tangistan, torpedoed yesterday by a German submarine, all were drowned except one man, according to the statement made by the sole survivor of the vessel, who has been landed here by the steamer Woodville He is James O'Toole.

"The Tangistar", said this man, "was torpedoed off Scarborough. She was struck amidships and went down almost immediately. All the members of the crew were in the lifeboats, but they were unable to disconnect the lowering tackle before the ship sank and dragged down the boats with her. I caught hold of a piece of wreckage and clung to it for nearly three hours in the icy water until I was rescued."

BLUNDER OF GERMAN PREVENTED EXPLOSION

Cut Wrong Piece of Fuse in Attempting to Explode 129 Cases of Dynamite in Nipissing Powder Magazine, Plot is Charged, Inspector Duncan on Case

COBALT, Ont., March 10.—A piece of fuse about two inches long, to which was attached a cap for exploding, and which was cut off in the dark by a German Pole conspirator in error, has saved Cobalt from a terrific dynamite explosion which would have carried with it death and great destruction to property.

This has been revealed through the efforts of Provincial Police Inspector Rowell and Officers Lefebvre and Wilson, who followed up information laid by the Nipissing Mining Company that their powder magazine had been broken into some time during the last week in February and an attempt made to blow it up by a stick of powder, fuse and cap.

Thomas Szyszkoe was arrested a week ago and his story was that at the instigation, and after much pressure on the part of two other men, John Szyszkoe, no relation, and Alec Hensbel, he broke into the powder house, laid a stick of powder on one of the one hundred and twenty-nine cases of dynamite and lit a fuse.

In the dark he had cut off two inches of the fuse, but did not apparently know that it included the cap, with the result that the explosion did not occur. Had this happened at the time the fuse was lit, 8.30 in the evening, all the mills at the south end of Cobalt would have been put out of commission, the street railway destroyed, and much loss of life resulted, as the powder house is on solid rock, and three tons would have exploded.

All three men named are German Poles. The first man, Tom, has been in Canada 13 years, but has visited the Fatherland three times. The other two are each only nineteen years of age, and have been here less than a year. They were arrested late yesterday by Officer Wilson, who was accompanied by Inspector Duncan of Toronto, commissioned by the Nipissing company to investigate the matter. Examined by Mr. Duncan, the man who attempted the deed stated that the other two kept after him two days to carry out the work, but as he was sober, he would not comply. One night, about February 21st, he was drinking, and the two men gave him a parcel with the dynamite all prepared, urging him to blow up the powder house.

"Why did you do it?" he was asked.

"Oh, just for fun, I suppose," was the reply.

On returning to his boarding house the other men laughed at him for making a bad job of it. John Szyszkoe and Hensbel made an absolute denial as to suggesting the deed to Tom, although admitting supplying him with the powder, fuse and cap. At a late hour last night admissions were made by both prisoners which the police deem very important, and active operations in the district will result, as a possible motive may be involved.

Tremendous excitement reigns throughout the town at the narrow escape, especially among experienced mining men, who know what would have happened. The two men will come before the Magistrate today. Both are smart, well set up, and soldierly. They were farmers in their own country. All three had been employees of the Nipissing Mining Company, but were laid off recently.

Official Summary Of Recent Events

(Canadian Press Special)

PARIS, March 11.—An official summary of recent events in the Champagne district says the very strong pressure exercised upon the enemy's lines compelled the Germans to bring to this point very numerous forces taken from reserves in other sections and to make a heavy expenditure of ammunition, at the same time they were prevented from withdrawing either men or munitions for use in the eastern campaign. The report intimates that the French losses were not excessive when results are considered.

Major Geo. M. Higinbotham Dead

TORONTO, March 11.—Private cables received here from Dr. Armour at Shorncliffe Hospital announce the death there from appendicitis this morning of Major George H. Higginbotham of the First Canadian Expeditionary Force.

COUNTESS DE LESSEPS HAS BABY DAUGHTER

LONDON, March 11.—Special—News was received by their friends here to-day that a daughter had been born in Paris to Count and Countess Jacques De Lesseps. The countess was formerly Miss Grace Mackenzie, daughter of Sir William and Lady Mackenzie, Toronto. There are two other children, both boys. Count De Lesseps is serving with the French Aviation Corps.

Methodist Church at North Bay Crowded When Session Opened —Bilingual Question

NORTH BAY, Ont., March 11.—The Methodist Church was filled yesterday when Grand Master Dr. J. J. Williams of Listowel called the 56th session of the Grand Orange Lodge of Ontario West to order for business. The master gave a stirring address, which covered the year's work and the bilingual school question.

"We accept the charge", he said, "that we are openly opposed to bilingual schools and we intend to continue our opposition with renewed determination, believing, as we do, that bilingual schools are not for the best interests of a united province, nor yet in the best interests of the children of French-Canadian parentage. The battle is on; the fight is now in progress and the members of this grand lodge must take their stand, collectively and individually, in the great struggle of keeping this province English. This can only be done by having the English language, and it alone, taught in the public and separate schools of the province."

MARCH 18TH FOR OFFENSIVE MOVEMENT

(Canadian Press Special)

LONDON, March 11.—The Daily Express has received a despatch from Bruges saying March 18th has been selected by the Germans as the date for the next great offensive movement in Flanders. Troop movements continue on a large scale.

SEVERAL GERMAN ATTACKS CHECKED BY CANADIANS

LONDON, March 11.—(Special)—The ——— regiment has just completed four days' duty in the trenches, fighting as a unit for the first time since landing in France. A report reaching here to-day says that the officers are delighted with the conduct of the men, who were as steady as regulars, and repulsed several attacks, as well as dealing a death blow to a German patrol party which came to examine the wire entanglements. The regiment is practically intact, none being reported killed so far. Col. ——— is solicitous for the welfare of his men, who have comfortable billets just behind the trenches. The commissariat is excellent.

The Canadian artillery, firing heavily, destroyed some buildings and caused a flurry in the enemy's rest camp.

Feeling Effects of Food Scarcity

Kaiser Makes It His Personal Business to See New Regime Carried Out—Empress Leaves Palace

PARIS, March 10.—A diplomat of a neutral power, who has just arrived from Berlin, discusses the rigid severity of life that prevails at the court of Prussia. There are no more receptions, no chatty "five o'clocks" in the afternoon, and the number of domestic servants has been reduced to a minimum. The effect of the general scarcity is beginning to be felt in the royal household as elsewhere.

The Empress has left the Royal Palace with its vast and deserted apartments which gave her profound depression. She has betaken herself to Mon Bijou, which is a conglomeration of several pavilions in old Berlin. She has in her entourage only two ladies of honor and two chamberlains. From time to time the Kaiser makes a brief appearance at the court. On such occasions he makes it his business to see that the necessities of the food regime are being strictly followed, and, in consequence, the mode of life at the court has undergone a radical change.

Meals are modest to a degree. The Empress Augusetus Victoria's breakfast consists of a cup of tea and one plain boiled egg. Lunch at midday consists of soup, a single serving of meat, and some fruit. For dinner she has soup, a single dish, and a plate of vermicelli or macaroni. Potatoes are served in their jackets, as peeling them in their raw state is regarded as a waste of good edible material. The Kaiser never tires of recommending the virtue of war bread, and he forces the members of his suite to nibble it in public.

GERMAN BOMBARDMENTS

Some Which Have No Military Justifications

NORTH OF FRANCE, March 10.—An apparent sign of the mental state of the Germans is the manner in which they start bombardments for which there is no justification from a military point of view.

For a week they have been trying to destroy as many works and factories between La Basse and Bethune as they could find within range of their guns. They now realize that they will never be able to force the Anglo-French barrier that is drawn across their path between these two towns, and as they can never hope to make use of these industrial concerns they are apparently doing their best to make them of no use to anyone else. The same motive explains their course at Lille, Roubaix and other industrial centres. Their fire for the last week had been principally directed upon the coal mines of Noeux les Mines, four miles south of Bethune. Fortunately some pits are well out of range of the German guns.

DOG WALKED BACK TO HEADQUARTERS

KINGSTON Ont., March 10—Weary, footsore and so crippled that he could scarcely walk, the little dog, which attached itself to the 21st Battalion soon after mobilization crawled into the dormitories at the Artillery Park. He had been absent since the sixteenth of February, and without leave. The little fellow was taken out of the city by the men of the 22nd battery on the night they left for Halifax.

At Montreal he left the train to look over the city in the vicinity of the railroad station, and while away the train moved on, and the dog was alone in a strange city. He no doubt tramped all the way back from Montreal, begging his bread until he reached Kingston.

BANNERS TORN DOWN DURING THE NIGHT

NORT BAY, Ont., March 10.—The police are trying to locate the parties who were responsible for taking down the patriotic banners welcoming the Orange delgates to the Grand Lodge of Ontario West. The opinion of a prominent local Orangeman is that the act was committed at the instigation of certain persons who were refused admittance to the Orange Order.

The decorations were torn down in the early hour of the morning, but by nine o'colck the banners were found uninjured and replaced. Naturally the incident caused some commotion, but the consensus of opinion is that no blame can be attached to Catholic citizens.

A Close Call From Drowning

Two Prince Edward County Ladies Stop Just in Time to Avoid Plunge in Water

Intuitive caution saved two Prince Edward County ladies from taking a cold-water bath, if not the loss of life, on Tuesday evening, when on their way home over the ice from Belleville, and as it was one of the ladies had the chilling experience of hovering between the two worlds.

From reliable accounts, the companions, with horse and wagon, had taken the shortest way across, and when nearing the Prince Edward shore became fearful of an opening in the ice, with the result that one of the ladies disembarked and walked ahead with a view to ascertaining the safety of their route. Presently there was a splash, a cry, and the lady in the carriage, stopping the horse, hastened to the rescue, succeeding, by lying flatly upon the ice, in grasping her companion by the arm and holding her partly above water until nearby help arrived. The horse, when halted, was within a few feet of the water.

While thoroughly drenched and chilled, the lady who took the plunge has suffered no ill results, and both are thankful for the escape from death.

Engineer Found Dead by Track

Mr. J. C. Rothrey's Body Was Frozen and Embedded in Ice

TORONTO, March 10.—The dead body of Mr. J. C. Rothrey, electrical engineer for the east end branch of the Canadian Northern Railway, was found lying by the side of the railway tracks near the bridge over Black Creek at Weston this morning. The body was identified later by a number of Weston residents, who knew Mr. Rothrey well. There was no mark of violence, and it is thought that Mr. Rothrey may have fallen from a train while it was in motion. The body was badly frozen, and partly imbedded in the ice and snow. Dr. Charlton, coroner at Weston, stated to a newspaper representative that he could not state the exact cause of the injuries that caused the death further than to say that there were no marks of violence on the body. A post-mortem will be held in the town hall at Weston to-night, and the coroner's jury will view the remains, after which the inquest will be adjourned for one week.

Mr. Rothrey came to Weston from Niagara Falls, Ont., about a year ago. He was widely known, and held a high position in the community. He was about 50 years of age and leaves a wife and large family.

Business Stopped in Constantinople

Presence of Allied Warships in Dardanelles Paralyzes Trade

(Canadian Press Special)

PARIS, March 11.—Travellers arriving in Geneva from Constantinople say the first guns fired by the Allied Fleet in the Dardanelles stopped all business in the Turkish capital and were the signal for a general panic. Many wealthy families are leaving for abroad.

The Matin says the bombardment of the Dardanelles fortifications was renewed Wednesday principally by the French ships. A heavy fog prevented the aviators from learning the results, but replies from some of the Turkish batteries slackened perceptibly.

Vessels at N. Y. Put to Sea

Washington Discredits Rumors but Reveals Concern by Ordering Search—Bunkers Full of Coal

WASHINGTON, March 10—Reports which have reached Washington that German merchant ships at New York are preparing to leave that port were discredited by the Government officials to-night, but information comes to The Gazette from a well-informed source that President Wilson and Secretary McAdoo were so much concerned over them that orders were issued by the Treasury Department last Thursday to Dudley F. Malone, collector of customs for the port of New York, to have a thorough search made of German vessels to ascertain whether they carried arms and ammunition. This search, it was said had not shown that the ships were equipped for war purposes, but their bunkers, according to the information given to-night, were full of coal.

There is no objection on the part of this Government to the departure of these vessels if they are not equipped for making war on the commerce of an enemy and Secretary McAdoo has so informed Collector Malone. The only requirements for their departure is that they must be provided with proper clearance papers.

Apparently officials here are nervous over the reports, as they realize that if German merchant ships should sail away from the United States to prey on the commerce of Great Britain and France this government would be confronted by another "Alabama" case, with the United States in the role of defendant instead of complainant.

Government officials admitted to-night that belligerent ships at New York and other ports were being watched to prevent a repetition of the Alabama incident. What is known of the matter indicates that while the Government discountenances information that any German merchant vessels are preparing to engage in commerce or take to the high seas for the purpose of making war on the commerce of their enemies, officials concerned are taking extraordinary precautions to prevent any such happening.

Ice Breakers Clearing River

MONTREAL, March 10.—Two Government ice breakers, the "Lady Grey" and the "Montcalm," are smashing away at the ice of the upper St. Lawrence river now. Today they passed Batiscan and, if all goes as is expected, they will be in Three Rivers by Sunday. That will give a clear channel for navigation from Three Rivers to the sea. Below Flat Point the river is filled with a closely packed ice field now, but this moves around with every current and wind.

In the port there is a wide strip of clear water now. It extends from Hochelaga to Victoria Bridge. The rest of the ice is solid, but it is not so hard and thick as in most seasons. The ice conditions from Quebec to Montreal indicate an early opening of navigation.

Death was due to heart failure. The late doctor graduated from Toronto University in 1895, and after receiving his certificate from the College of Medicine went to the Peace River district to practice. He was a brother of Mr. J. D. Montgomery, of the legal firm of McMaster, Montgomery, Fleury and Co., and also of Mr. R. Montgomery.

IMPORTANT VICTORY WON BY THE BRITISH ARMY

Capture Village of Neuve Chapelle and One Thousand Prisoners —Very Heavy Losses are Inflicted on Kaiser's Troops

LONDON, March 11—Special—Once more the British and German troops have clashed in northern France, and once more the Kaiser's soldiers have been soundly beaten. In a great offensive move between the Lys and the La Basse Canal British infantry, supported by heavy guns, captured the village of Neuve Chapelle, and advanced beyond it in a northeasterly direction toward Aubers and in a southeasterly direction toward the Riez Woods. One thousand German prisoners were taken by the British, also several mitrailleuses. Heavy losses were inflicted upon the enemy.

The Birtish Success.

PARIS, March 10.—The following official statement was issued by the French War Office to-night:

"In Belgium the town of Nieuport has been very violently bombarded with 42-centimetre guns.

"Between the Lys and the Canal of La Bassee the British army, supported by French heavy artillery, has achieved an important success. It has carried the village of Neuve Chapelle, to the east of the road from Estaires to La Bassee, and has progressed to the northeast of this village in the direction of Aubers, and to the southeast in the direction of the Bois de Riez.

"It has taken a thousand prisoners, among whom are several officers, and has captured also some machine-guns. The German losses were very heavy.

LIGHTWEIGHT TANGLE TO BE FOUGHT OUT

MONTREAL, March 11.—The lightweight boxing tangle will be partially straightened out tonight when champion Freddie Welsh meets Willie Ritchie, the former title-holder, over the ten-round route at New York. The prospective encounter is attracting nation-wide interest for the reason that Ritchie today is looked upon as the most dangerous rival that Welsh has for the championship. Partisans of Johnny Griffith, Joe Shugrue, Jimmy Duffy, Joe Mandot, Charlie White may take issue with this statement, but but their claim to a recognition for a title match will have to wait the outcome of the Welsh-Ritchie struggle.

If Ritchie is beaten decisively by Welsh this week the Californian will be eliminated from further consideration, but if Willie should earn the newspaper verdict then he naturally will be in line for the first crack at Welsh later on.

ALIEN ENEMIES ARE COMING FROM COBALT

TORONTO, March 10.—Preparations are being made at the military detention camp at Stanley Barracks for the reception of about thirty Austrians and Galicians, who were rounded up in the Cobalt mining district. They neglected to register as required of alien enemies, and it is claimed that they were found in the act of drilling.

The Divisional Headquarters at the Exhibition grounds have received notification that the prisoners are being sent to Toronto under military escort. It is possible that they may not be held here after their arrival, but may be transferred to a larger camp outside.

BRITISH CAPTURE OVER ONE MILE OF GERMAN TRENCHES

(Canadian Press Special)

PARIS, March 11.—An official report this afternoon says a British attack yesterday resulted in the capture of nearly 1½ miles of trenches before Neuve Chapelle (Flanders) and of the village itself. It progressed in the direction of Aubers as far as Pietre Mill and in a southeasterly direction as far as the northern border of Bois-du-Debiez, that is to say, a distance of about two kilometres beyond Neuve Chapelle. The German artillery fired only a few shots. As regards the rest of the front there is nothing to add to yesterday evening's communication.

FEWER COWS—MORE MILK

The Breeders' Gazette tells of a dairyman with thirty cows who sold five of the least productive and gave their feed as an addition to the remaining twenty-five. The result was a decided gain in total amount of milk. The results were so encouraging that the man went further, selling five more cows and giving to the remaining twenty the same feed that had gone to thirty. Again his total milk yield increased.

We believe it was Mr. J. H. Grisdale Superintendent of Dominion Experimental Farms who claimed recently that the average milk production of the country could be doubled by better feeding. To prove his contention, Mr. Grisdale had herds of ordinary breeding bought for some of the Experimental Farms, where, under liberal feeding, they more than doubled their production.

A cream separator agent was trying to place a hand separator with a dairyman who milked ten cows. Ready money was not available, but the farmer was persuaded to sell one of the cows to secure the cash necessary and give the feed that he had originally fed to ten to the remaining nine. He found that he was getting as much milk from the nine as he had got from the ten, and he had a cream separator as well.

Some err on the side of over-feeding. But for every one who in feeding matters commits the sin of commission, there are at least one hundred dairymen whose failing lies along the line of omission. We wonder how many there are even among Our Folks who might profit by reducing their herds in numbers, and feeding more liberally to those remaining.

The public never forgets a scandal. Lately attention has again been directed to the fact that Adam and Eve never were married.

Spring Styles in Gorgeous Array at Popular Belleville Stores

McCRODAN & SILLS.

Long before other Spring attire is worn the Spring hat, the harbinger of Springtime, is making its debut. This season one seems especially anxious to change from Winter to Spring millinery, for the black hat—becoming and smart as it may have been, has grown to be somewhat monotonous, so generally have they been worn ever since the end of last Summer. The first representatives of early Spring are easily recognized, looking so bright and cheerful against the multitude of dark hats still extant. Sand, putty and twine shades, the immediate successors to the omnipresent black hat of the Fall and Winter season, are decided favorites of Fashion. The Rococo, the Directoire and the First Empire periods are once more offering a wealth of inspiration to the designer. The martial note is strongly accentuated in the outline of the shapes—French, Belgian, English, Russian—but the trimmings are less severe than formerly. The hat made of faille or taffeta silk, with facing of straw or other braid is conspicuous, appearing in countless different styles, from an elaborate picture hat down to a severely simple sailor, or a military helmet or cap style, whose chief asset is the jauntiness of its contour.

Violets are used in great clusters, also in single blossoms for edging brim or crown; small, dainty flowers, long-stemmed roses of the La France, Tea and American Beauty varieties; Marguerites are flatly applied to crowns and brims, producing fascinating hat garnitures; raisins in conjunction with flowers, berries or fruits in long clusters and trailing garland effects are used on the best models.

MISS M. CAMPBELL

Dame Fashion had full sway at Miss Campbell's Hat Shop today, and seldom has a season brought forth such a beautiful range of colors to choose from—Belgian Blue, British or King George Red, Battleship Grey, White and Black, Sand and Putty leading, with our Irish Paddy holding its own. There are numerous shapes offered for early spring, such as the Torpedo, a small brimless oblong shape; the Tom-Tom is round, flat and brimless; the Sailor of 1870 is very flat; the Louis Phillipe Poke is always a favorite.

As the summer advances the large hats, the drooping picturesque type, also the Shepherdess, and Georgette shapes will lead.

The window was very artistically arranged in Belgian Blue, with pussy willows, introducing the Battleship Grey color scheme, carried out with American beauties, which were placed in the centre of the window.

A Kurzman model in blue with taffeta top tagel braid facing, pleating of the silk around crown and caught with pink rose in front and under brim at back. A neckpiece of pleated silk with rose and ends worn to the left side, complete the set. A small flat sailor of blue faille edged with barnyard straw has daisies in blue and pink appliqued around crown, small perky bow of blue ribbon in front and ends down back.

KINGSTON

In future walking sticks or crops will not be carried by officers of the 21st battalion on commanding officers' parades.

Advance militia orders gazette S. M Waldron as Lieutenant (supernumerary) of the Fifth Field battery. Lieut Smith to be captain and remain seconded. Lieut. George Richardson is gazetted Captain of the 14th and to remain seconded.

The Daughters of the Empire have secured the services of Lieut. Black to sing and permission to have the Pipers' Band of the 21st Battalion to play at the concert in Grand Hall on Friday night. The proceeds will be used to buy socks for the 21st battalion.

According to the Ottawa Free Press it is the intention of the military authorities to place the 38th and 39th battalions of this division in the big camp at Petawawa as soon as the weather permits. It is also said that the Mounted Rifles will be trained in the same place.

In future all officers and non-commissioned officers of the 21st battalion will be compelled to attend the commanding officers parade, except four men per double company as cooks and assistants, two men for Depot company and the fire picket at the general works.

Fifteen recruits for the 8th Mounted Rifles left the city today at 2.45 via the C.N.R. for Ottawa. This is the balance of the recruits secured in Kingston and Frontenac for this mounted corps. The 8th are over strength, but all recruits will be mobilized at the capital and kept long enough for the commanding officer of the corps to select the most likely among them for cavalry work.

It is published in the orders of the 14th guard that all men who have enlisted for overseas service, and who ask for their discharge, or the same is claimed by a wife, that recruits shall pay to the government the sum of $15 if discharge is asked for within three months. After three months, the recruit shall pay $2 for every month under one year. This is done to prevent men enlisting merely for the period of training and securing pay, rations, and in many cases separation allowance without any honest intention of being a part of the expeditionary force. This applies to the 21st Battalion and all overseas recruits.

It is only after a man becomes rich and famous that you recall the fact that you and he were schoolmates.

Auto Truck Stalled

Last night a large auto truck, the property of a fruit vender of this city, was being guided down a gangway on Front street, when it suddenly stopped on the walk and all effort to move it forward or backwards proved futile, the wheels apparently slipping around. A thoughtful bystander procured a board and placed it under the wheels, when off the truck moved. The incident caused a number to congregate about the place.

PICTURE OF THE CAVALRY SCHOOL

A card containing a picture of the Cavalry School at Netheravon, Wiltshire, was received by Mrs. Bowell last week. This school has been converted into a hospital and Miss Geen was stationed there. Miss Geen said: "We are packed for another move. When you are packing the boxes, a football is greatly appreciated and some of the sick ones wish for a mouth organ."

A small box of comforts was sent to Mr. Horace Yeomans and his brother, consisting of two fine sleeping helmets and a belt from Mrs. C. E. Thompson and daughter, a pair of wristlets and a cholera belt from Mrs. John McKeown, two pairs of hand-knit socks; 2 pairs of store socks from Mrs. Earle; three mufflers and a football, a mouth organ, figuret and matches; also home made candy.

A few more droppings from the shower received later: Mrs. Thos. Moore, one box antiphlogistine; Miss Corlett, 2 large boxes gauze bandages. This box was sent last week by Mrs. Bowell.

List of Canadian Casualties

LONDON, March 11.—(Special.)—It was reported here today that a Canadian battalion has just had its baptism of fire and has made an excellent showing. The trench in which it was posted was attacked several times, but the enemy was driven back with considerable loss. The battalion was supported by strong batteries of Canadian artillery, which did some effective work.

The long list of casualties issued at Ottawa early this morning indicates that an engagement in which the Princess Patricias figured during the three days from Feb. 27 to March 1, was of a severe character. The official list shows that ten met death in action, six of them on Feb. 28, while two later died from wounds and the list of wounded includes a number whose wounds are termed serious. The 5th, 10th and 32nd Battalions were also in the fighting.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

For your own sake, prove the right way. Millions of people have found it. Half the corns that grow are ended by this wondrous Blue-jay plaster.

The corn pain ceases the moment you apply it. Then the B & B wax—a famous chemist's invention—gently undermines the corn. In 48 hours the whole corn comes out, without any pain or soreness.

WORK OF THE SUBMARINE

According to a statement by the British Admiralty, the number of British merchant ships torpedoed by German submarines between February 18th and March 3rd was seven. One has since been torpedoed, making a total score of eight since the submarine campaign officially began, if the British authorities are telling the whole truth. Two or three French ships have also been sunk, and at least one Norwegian vessel is alleged to have been torpedoed, while several neutral ships, including two Americans, have been sunk by mines.

As a matter of fact, the German submarine campaign against merchant shipping of the Allies began some time before February 18th. That date was apparently fixed by the German Government as the time when it purposed to begin to torpedo neutral as well as enemy ships. The report of the British Admiralty shows that more British ships were lost before the official opening of the campaign than have been lost since. It puts the total since January 21st at fifteen and the lives lost as 29. The Admiralty says that 25 British ships have been attacked by submarines during this period and have escaped.

It is certain that the Germans have lost one submarine during this time, for it crew are prisoners. The Allies believe that five have been lost, besides two that were disposed of earlier in the war. The Germans have denied that the submarine rammed by the British merchant steamer Thordis, for which the captain received $5,800 in reward, was destroyed, though they admit the ramming.

On Tuesday the Germans scored again heavily, sinking three British merchantmen, with a loss of 37 lives. One of those was torpedoed off Scarborough, one off Hastings in the Channel and one off Liverpool, indicating that three different boats, at least, must be at work. The Germans say a single boat, the U-16, sank five of the ships that were torpedoed in February. Apparently a new effort has been made by the Germans to give effect to the submarine blockade which had begun to look like a decided failure. Even now, however, if the Allies are correct in their belief that five German submarines have been destroyed, the balance of loss is against the Germans. Sinking a merchant ship does not weaken the fighting power of a nation. The loss of a submarine and its crew is a sacrifice of both material and men that are an important part of the fighting forces.

A DISHONEST CRY

According to the Toronto News, Mr. White, the Minister of Finance, has been accused of disloyalty for increasing the British preference. And by whom? By a party which, when in office, sent Canadian troops to South Africa reluctantly and only under the pressure of public opinion, and even then sent them C.O.D. The Mother Country met the whole expenditure of keeping the contingents at the front. Not only that! Five times as much money came from Great Britain into the hands of the Liberal Government to purchase supplies for the war as the Liberal Government expended in sending the troops to Cape Town. How differently has the present Administration met the Imperial call! Already Canada has a great deal larger army than Wellington had at Waterloo, we are ready to despatch an equally large force, and we are defraying every cent of the cost ourselves. The destruction of Canadian industries by tariff insanity would not help the Empire. It would only hurt Canada and render us helpless to assist at the front.

CURRENT COMMENT

The retreat of the German right wing, which is now within eight miles of the frontier, is regarded as especially damaging to the Germans.

Hamilton Herald: "With the breaking down of the Dardanelles defences the Balkan states are beginning to think of breaking into the war. Naturally, they want to be on hand when the Turkey is carved."

If President Wilson continues to cherish ambitions in the direction of mediatorship he is sure to find that the way of the mediator is hard—and dangerous. He would do better to guard and cherish the neutrality of which he appears to be so proud.

The report of a ministerial crisis in Bulgaria is decidedly interesting, if true. Bulgaria is so completely isolated that she has no hope of help from Austria and Germany if she should side with them, and apparently she is now leaning toward the Allies.

Toronto News: "Through four columns of editorial writing, most of which is devoted to angry and partisan attack upon the Hearst Government at Toronto and the Borden Government at Ottawa, the Globe demands a "truce" and protests against a general election."

There will be general satisfaction over the announcement that captured crews of German submarines, who have sunk unarmed merchant ships without due warning, will be tried as murderers. That's just what they are and they should be given a short shift accordingly.

Journal of Commerce: "Wonder if this is to be another of those April fool jokes that the Germans have been spreading so profusely over the past seven months? An official celebration of the 100th anniversary of the birth of the late Prince von Bismarck is to be held in that country on April 1st."

Montreal Star: "If H. H. Stevens, M.P. for Vancouver, succeeds in a scheme he has laid before Parliament, there will be no attempts in future to go after long-distance oratorical records in the House of Commons, and Hansard will be much leaner than heretofore."

Montreal Star: "They talk of proroguing Parliament at Easter. If they prorogue Parliament without giving the ballot to the soldiers at the front, they will have been guilty of an act of public ingratitude and flagrant injustice from which the name of this Parliament will never recover."

Count von Bernstorff announces that his Government is "sorry to admit that the British hospital ship Asturias was attacked" by a German submarine on February 1. Need it be said that the ship managed to manoeuvre out of the way of the torpedo this submarine fired, and thus cheated Germany out of an example of "frightfulness"?

Montreal Herald-Telegraph: "Seeing that the Opposition at Ottawa has declared its intention to give the Government all the money that it wanted for the war, and is taking all steps necessary to that end, it is rather less than fair for partisans on the Government side of the House to charge Liberals who have ventured to criticize the budget with disloyalty." They could not consistently do otherwise than acquiesce in the Government's methods of standing by Britain; but like the cow, after giving a pailful of milk the Opposition proceeds to kick over the pail as a matter of principle.

The reason a married man hates to wear his good clothes is because he hasn't any.

The fact that the fool-killer neglects his business contributes much to the safety of most of us.

Stomach Troubles Due to Acidity

SO SAYS EMINENT SPECIALIST

So-called stomach troubles, such as indigestion, wind, and stomach-ache are in probably nine cases out of ten simply evidence that fermentation is taking place in the food contents of the stomach, causing the formation of gas and acids. Wind distends the stomach, and causes that full, oppressive feeling sometimes known as heartburn, while the acid irritates and inflames the delicate lining of the stomach. The trouble lies entirely in the fermenting food. Such fermentation is unnatural, and acid formation is not only unnatural, but may involve most serious consequences if not corrected. To stop or prevent fermentation of the food contents of the stomach and to neutralize the acid, and render it bland and harmless, a teaspoonful of bisurated magnesia, probably the best and most effective corrector of acid stomach known and it should be taken in a quarter of a glass of hot or cold water immediately after eating, or whenever wind or acidity is felt. This stops the fermentation and neutralizes the acidity in a few moments. Fermentation, wind and acidity are dangerous and unnecessary. Stop or prevent them by the use of a proper antacid, such as bisurated magnesia, which can be obtained from any druggist and thus enable the stomach to do its work properly without being hindered by poisonous gas and dangerous acids.—M. CANADIAN PATRIOTISM IS NOT A SHAM

Face to Face with a Crisis, the most grave and portentous that has yet threatened the Empire, Canadians are responding cheerfully to every call. Our peoples only want to know what is expected of them, what their duties and responsibilities may be. In this our reply blends at old Westminster with those other voices all the way from India, the Isles of the sea, and the far-off Oceanic continents of the antipodes.

In the battle front are to be found our own Canadian boys, and their deportment has called forth the unqualified admiration of life-hardened fighters. Shoulder to shoulder, they live and fight, rank by rank with hundreds of thousands of others, equally patriotic, equally brave, equally ready to endure and to die if only the old British flag will still wave above an Empire protected in its exercise of British fair play and British liberty, and that these may never be ground beneath the heel of military despotism.

Without flinching, without question, each man must play his own part. The whole must act as a unit. It is a grand and glorious spectacle, and the example is not being lost, for it has thrilled throughout our nation's breadth. Never before was the feeling for common rights so ubiquitous or so freely admitted. Guided by discretion and care on the part of our leaders, it might well be the foundation for the readjustment of many matters of national and civil import upon a broader plan, affairs that are important enough in times of peace, but which fade into comparative insignificance before the great question of today. Referring editorially to this great need, the Canadian Countryman says:

"Actuated by this feeling, our statesmen and political parties have buried the hatchet. Matters of import are discussed and deliberated upon, but not upon party lines. In this our most influential political organs themselves have acquiesced. Leaders of thought, those worthy of the name, have followed suit. To form any exception to this rule, it remains for only a few, a very few exceptions to be made. These have taken it upon themselves to criticize the two latest moves of the Dominion Government, to meet the present situation. Our Department of Agriculture at Ottawa initiated the campaign known under the name of "Patriotism and Production." Our Imperial Government has made the suggestion that Canada could do no better thing than to strain every nerve to produce as much food supplies as possible, as this would be the way in which she could best serve the Empire. The response was the campaign to induce farmers to produce for the coming year as much food as they could. Under the management of Dr. C. C. James the work is being carried out. From coast to coast it has met with an enthusiastic reception, including the approval of our politicians and statesmen, and our Department of Agriculture, no matter what their politics may be. That the loyalty of the Grain Growers of Western Canada is no mean or paltry thing dependent upon mercenary considerations, received convincing proof, when, at their meetings the suggestion that every member set aside one acre for the Empire's need, was met with a deafening endorsation. Germans in Western Canada, understanding as they do what British liberty means, have asked to be permitted to do the same thing.

Everywhere there is a wave of enthusiasm sweeping over the land. Farmers in Old Ontario are preparing to break up many acres of ground that for years has lain in pasture, and to sow it with grain. This is practical, for our best agricultural authorities are now declaring that feed gotten in the pasture field is not the cheapest food, but is, on the other hand, the deatest. They are amending their crop rotations to sow more cereal crops. They are planning to sow more soiling crops, to grow more hogs, to produce more milk, and at the same time to sell more wheat. They may not intend any such policy for a permanent one, but for one year it will be seen that the increased production will be big. It is easy to foretell that the policy of the Ontario farmers, which last fall found expxression in the seeding of some quarter million more acres to winter wheat than for the previous year, will culminate in a big year in almost all lines of food products.

THE AERIAL BATTLESHIPS OF THE FUTURE

The difficulty of properly arming and protecting aircraft lies in the fact that we cannot yet obtain sufficiently powerful engines—even though, in the course of a few years, the engines have increased in horse power from about fifty to two hundred. But when we look ahead, and estimate what may be possible with a power plant, not of hundreds of horse power but of thousands, then we can imagine a perfect war machine of the future—a huge armored craft, that carries a crew of hundreds of men, and that is equipped with formidable guns and aerial torpedo and bomb-dropping tubes. Such a vessel will be able to reef its wing surface when traveling at high speed, and will rush through the air at a speed of several hundred miles an hour.

But even against such metal-built monsters of the air, flying at their amazing speeds, man will pit his ingenuity. It is clear that he cannot fight them from the earth; he must fight them high in their own element. So in the future, if wars continue, we may have fearful struggles of the air—not small and isolated combats, such as this campaign has shown us, but battles desperately waged, with death and destruction raining from the clouds. There are those, however, who argue that such a form of war, when pushed to its ruthless limit, will prove so ghastly that humanity will revolt, and that the science that revolutionizes war will also end it.—Claud Grahame-White, on "Aircraft in War", in The Youth's Companion.

SUBMARINE DAMAGED 13 SOLDIERS KILLED

LONON, March 10—The Press Bureau issues a statement regarding the British air raid. Besides thirteen soldiers killed and thirty-five wounded, a submarine was badly damaged [illegible].

Several batteries on the coast suffered greatly, and many guns were destroyed. At Knocke an officer was killed and many artillerymen wounded.

The bombs did not kill a civilian or touch a house.

Father of Chinese Revolution Offered High Position

ORANGEMEN TROOP TOWARD NORTH BAY

TORONTO, March 10.—What assumed the proportions of an exodus of Orangemen from the city took place yesterday. The annual meeting of the Provincial Grand Orange Lodge of Ontario West convened today at North Bay, and between 500 and 600 members are present. Of these about 200 are from Toronto, which accounts for the large number who went on northern trains. A score or more left yesterday, most of them members of the Black Chapter, which is in session today.

The North Bay meeting is the most important, as far as members of the organization is concerned, until the Grand Lodge of British America convenes in Winnipeg in July next.

Avoid Harsh Pills! Doctors Condemn Them

Most Pills unfortunately are harsh and drastic; they cause inflammation and great discomfort. Rather like nature is the way a pill should act; mildly but effectively. Science has established nothing more satisfactory as a family pill than the old reliable pills of Dr. Hamilton's, which for forty years have had a premier place in America. Dr. Hamilton's Pills are very mild and can be effectively used by the aged, by children, and indeed by men and women of all ages. No stomach or bowel medicine is more reliable. No remedy for indigestion, headache or biliousness is so effective, so mild, so certain to quickly cure as a 25c. box of Dr. Hamilton's Pills.

Association Work the World Over

It has been my own good fortune to have seen a good deal of the work of the Young Men's Christian Association. It is true my experience has been mostly connected with the troops. As you know, I have held a number of commands in the army, in India, in the Mediterranean, in Egypt and in different portions of the United Kingdom, and my experience has been that excellent work, warm sympathy and a kindly Christian spirit have always guided the Association on every occasion in tact with it; and the same experience is true of every other general officer I ever came across.

The Association has always done all it could to make the life of the soldier easier, pleasanter and safer; it has always given him good facilities; it has always set a good example. If that has been experience as a soldier, how much greater has been the experience of men in civic life? We have a large population in Canada, many of whom have come from different parts of the Old Country men new to their surroundings, new to the climate; and the Y.M.C.A. has come forward and extended the right hand of friendship and fellowship, have opened their doors to them, and have done try, men new to the to their surwhat they could to help them in every way.

You are con-sectarian; you hold the Christian religion above everything, but you are thoroughly human in the way in which you deal with those who come into your fine buildings and who use them with gratitude. Throughout Canada and the States there is no Association that occupies a higher position in the sympathy and respect of their fellow-countrymen. I feel that any appeal to the Capital of our Dominion will not fall on deaf ears; that they will sympathize with your object; they know the results of its good work. I wish particularly to say that we ought never to forget the triangle emblem which shows the three-fold object of the Association, viz: 'Spirit, Mind and Body'.

I am well aware of the many classes that have been held in every city in Canada by the Young Men's Christian Association, especially the classes for boys and those who are beginning their struggles in life; and I notice with heart pleasure that you are doing your utmost to train these boys for commercial, industrial, and for professional careers.

Your Association has done most excellent work in connection with the immigrants, giving the newcomers to Canada, information, advice, and a helping hand generally. In the Toronto Association alone, this winter 1,500 foreigners are learning to speak and write English, and are also being made acquainted with the principles of Canadian citizenship.

In connection with the war, the Association has done, and is doing most valuable work. I know the generous manner in which you have thrown open the doors of the Ottawa Association to all those who wear His Majesty's uniform. Besides that, you have given them instruction in Colloquial French, so as to enable the officers and men to prepare themselves for their campaign in France. Everyone knows what the Young Men's Christian Association did at Valcartier. They were of the greatest help; indeed, I do not know how the men would have got on with any comfort or decency if it had not been for your tents and buildings. In Englands its workers are serving at the present moment in 600 separate camps and barracks and in France, with the consent of the French Government, its work is being carried on as near the front as possible. Seven of your experienced workers have been allowed to accompany the Canadian Contingent, and have been recognized as officers of that contingent. I most strongly recommend the Y.M.C.A. to the public. I hope they will support it in the way it deserves; and I can testify in the strongest way my appreciation and my recognition of the splendid spirit in which from its inception, the Association [illegible] for the good of all.

Two Kinds of Rough Diamond

By F. A. MITCHEL

The author sat in his study dancing the characters of his imagination, as a Punch and Judy showman sits under his mimic stage working his puppets, when a card was sent up to him bearing the name John Remington.

Now, John Remington was the name the author had used in his last novel. He knew no real person of that name, for he had found the name in a telephone directory. Why had this person called to see him? He was curious to learn. He directed that he be shown into his study.

The imaginary John Remington, hero of "An Uncut Diamond," was a bluff but honest countryman who had married the daughter of a farmer. They had quarreled soon after the wedding, and the wife had left her husband to go to the city to make her own living. When the real John Remington entered he appeared to the novelist to be of that class from which the character had been taken.

"I'm not goin' to take up your time, sir," said the man, "or beat about the bush. It's no concern of mine how you got hold of my story or what influenced you as to the version you gave of it in your novel. You made me out a brute, and I suppose I am one. It's my misfortune to have been made that way. What I want to know is where I can find my wife."

The novelist gathered that to a coincidence in name and another in having hit on an actual story (or something like it) for the subject matter of his novel this man's call was due.

"You say that I have pictured you as a brute. Wherein, may I ask, have I made you brutal?"

"Well, first off, I should have give in as soon as I got married. There's no use of a husband tryin' to have his way with his wife. It's not in reason."

"Why so?"

"'Cause there's no reason in a woman. She ain't made that way."

"How is she made?"

"Why, jest as you made Peggy. Only since you didn't get the whole story there's lots o' things you left out."

"Name some of them."

"Well, Peg never could learn that if a little thing annoyed me she'd better let it alone. She'd keep on doin' it jest the same as if I hadn't shown her a dozen times that it annoyed me. Then she'd give up to me in a heap o' small things that I didn't set store by, then come down on me for one big thing that was mighty important. When I balked she would throw up at me all the 'sacrifices' she had made for me, mentionin' things I hadn't wanted."

"Why, then, do you consider yourself brutal in having objected to this course?"

"Why, because Peg was made that way. All women are."

"And weren't you made your way?"

"You mean a brute? Of course I was. What does a brute need but a tamer? What does a ship need but a rudder? Don't you suppose that if a ship had life in it it would object to bein' turned this way and that way by that contemptible little thing at its stern? But where would the ship go without the rudder? On the rocks, of course. That's where I've gone."

"How have you gone on the rocks?"

"Why, I've got so confounded much of my way that I don't know what to do with it."

"And you wish to find your wife to ask her to come back and tyrannize over you some more?"

"That's my job."

"And you propose to knuckle down and give her her own way in everything?"

"You bet."

The novelist paused in his questions and was very thoughtful. He had written a novel of 400,000 words to show what a fine fellow his imaginary rough diamond was, and the real rough diamond had knocked the statue he had built up off its pedestal in a few minutes.

"Reckon you ain't got a wife?" continued Mr. Remington.

"No; I haven't."

"I reckon you hadn't."

"Why so?"

"Waal, Peg did a lot o' things in your book that she never did to home, and didn't do a lot o' things that she did do to home, and with a vengeance."

"Mr. Remington," said the author after another pause, "I owe you an apology for having told your story wrong."

"Just so."

"And I owe myself an apology for having spent a year and a half telling it and the public an apology for having taken up its time reading a lot of rot. I don't know where your wife is, but if you'll give me what clew you have, if any, I'll help you find her."

"That's fair enough. I always like to see a man own up when he's in the wrong."

Mr. Remington had a clew which he gave to the novelist, who eventually found the rough diamond's wife. There was another dialogue in the former's study in which he essayed to prove to her that her husband would be an easy man thereafter to live with, and she returned to him.

Later Mr. Remington made the author another call.

"I came to tell you I got my own way, after all," he said.

"How did you do it?"

"My wife's so confounded contrary that when I offered to give in to her she wouldn't have it."

A Story of the Great Blizzard

By GEORGE V. EDSON

It was the night that the great blizzard of 1888 came whirling down from the clouds. I, a medical man, was out on the road driving home in my buggy (that was before the day of automobiles) about 1 o'clock in the morning. The snow grew deeper and deeper, and I began to get uneasy. My horse now and again would stop and look about him, apparently as uneasy as I. Dumb animals, though they are more easily frightened than men, sometimes manifest a strong sense of danger under what may appear ordinary circumstances.

There was a large, square brick house beside the road a few hundred feet ahead of me. I could distinguish its dark bulk, there being no lights within.

Meanwhile I was becoming benumbed and drowsy. I remember reaching a point directly before the house, getting out of the buggy and floundering to the door. I hoped to secure assistance to get my horse under cover. This is the last I have ever been able to recall of being out in that terrible blizzard.

The next thing before me was the door opening and a man, very pale and excited, saying: "Come in, doctor. We were fearful that you would not get here."

The house was lighted and servants were moving about hurriedly, just as I had often seen them doing in houses where some one was very ill. The man who admitted me led me upstairs and into a room where a girl apparently about eighteen years old lay on a bed. My conductor turned down the bedclothing, spotted with blood, and revealed towels that were used to stop hemorrhage. I cautiously removed them, but, seeing the red fluid pour out, I quickly replaced them.

While thinking what to do I glanced about the apartment. The furniture was such as was used during the early part of the nineteenth century, the bed on which the girl was lying having a canopy supported by four high posts. There were heavy curtains to the windows. Near a fireplace stood two persons, an old woman and a young man, who were looking at me appealingly, and I knew they were begging me to save the girl's life. I noticed that their dress was old fashioned. They resembled each other, and I guessed they were mother and son. The mother's arms were about her boy.

Casting a glance at the man standing beside me, I saw that he was about the age of the woman with her son and judged that he was the husband and father. On a lounge lay a sword, and there was blood on the blade. I formed a conclusion, largely from the young man's agonized appearance, that he had stabbed the girl.

I had no instruments with me, but I needed none, for I saw that the girl was dying. To stanch that flow of blood was beyond my skill. I replaced the bedclothing and stood over the invalid, avoiding the appealing gaze of the others until it was plain that all was over, then turned away. After leaving the room it seems to me now that I walked into oblivion, for I was not conscious of anything till I felt something hot passing down my throat. I opened my eyes and saw a man holding me, while another man was holding a flask.

I don't suppose that my vision, dream or whatever it was could have lasted over two or three minutes. The men saw me drive by the house they were in, a few hundred yards below, and, realizing that I was in danger, started after me. I had left my buggy and, bewildered by one of the whirlwinds that came without intermission, had fallen in the snow.

They put me back into my buggy and managed to get the team and me to their house, where a cheerful fire was blazing, and after another hot dose I was put to bed, where I slept soundly till morning. All that day the snow came down, whirling as it fell, and the next day also. It was seventy hours before the road became passable and I got away.

Before leaving I expressed a desire to go into the house before which I had been rescued. The persons with whom I had been lodged told me that it was vacant and the key in possession of a man and his wife living a short distance up the road. I begged them to borrow it for me, which they did, and I went to the house and entered it.

Now comes the singular part of my story. I had certainly not been in that house before, and yet I saw it just as I had seen it when admitted by the man who had led me to the bed of the stricken girl. The passageway was the same, the room was the same, and there stood the great four poster bedstead. But the bed was made up, and there was no one except myself present.

I inquired if any murder had been committed there, but no one remembered any such occurrence. At the same time I was told that the house was very old—more than a hundred years—and much might have taken place there that would not be known to succeeding generations.

What is my theory? Well, I am a medical man and in my old age am beginning to realize that there are many things in the universe beyond our ken. I have no theory, but I do not believe my vision was a mere dream.

A boy's idea of unnecessary trouble is to wash his hands. A boy's idea of submitting to an indignity is to wash his neck.

Self Accused

By M. QUAD

Copyright, 1914, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

I had been practicing law in the town of Lancaster for about four years when James Higgins, merchant, was murdered. According to the testimony of his wife, they were aroused at midnight by a noise downstairs, and he went down to investigate. She heard angry words, followed by a shot, and, giving the alarm, it was found that the husband had beed shot through the heart.

The first suspect arrested was the hostler at the barns of one of the hotels. He had been seen on the streets at midnight; he was known to have a pistol; he betrayed many signs of guilt when arrested. I was employed in his defense and after half an hour's talk with him came to the conclusion that he was guilty. He didn't admit his guilt, but at the same time he didn't deny it with the warmth expected of an innocent man. It was an accident altogether that I made a series of discoveries. This man planned with another to break open the passenger depot and rob the safe. They had been surprised in their work by a tramp, and the hostler was afraid to talk to me or any one else of the murder case for fear of being found out in the lesser crime. When once I had the things straightened out it did not take long to upset the case of the police. I had scarcely done this when I was upset myself.

A building contractor named Otis came to me to make a confession. He had reasons to suspect that Higgins had ruined his home, and when there was no longer any doubt in his mind he had determined to kill the man.

I went to work on the case, but was bowled over at the very outset. Mrs. Otis declared in the most emphatic way that she had never spoken a dozen words to Higgins and her husband had never intimated that he had the slightest cause for jealousy of any man, and, better than all, she could prove that from 10 o'clock in the evening until two hours after midnight on the night of the murder he was home and in bed and quite ill. This she did prove by two witnesses. Otis had told me a purely imaginative story, and he stuck to it for several days, but at length denied everything. There were those who said he was "off" in his head, but he talked and acted as a sane man and returned to his business as soon as released.

The police now returned to their first theory. The deed had surely been done by some one who had entered the house for plunder. After some days they arrested a saloonkeeper in a town some five miles away, claiming to have a straight case against him, and the man had been under arrest three or four days when I came into the case again. A young man named Salters, who was a student of the state normal school, came to my house at 10 o'clock at night to make a confession. He was the murderer of Higgins. Higgins had accidentally got hold of some love letters which the young man had written and had refused to give them up for less than $100. Not having the money to pay and being rendered desperate, he had gone to search the house at night. Salters told of the conversation when Higgins came down the stairs—how he got in and got out and all the details. I advised him to go to the police, and, as in the other case, they locked him up and felt sure that they had at last got the right man.

I was not retained by young Salters, who said that he would make no defense, but I set out to clear up a few points to satisfy my own curiosity. I was not long in ascertaining that he was not in love with any girl and had never been known to write a love letter, also that he was in a town twenty miles away on the night of the murder. When these facts became known to the police they had to drop their case, though Salters protested to the last that he was guilty.

There was one more instance, and it partook of the ridiculous at once. A one legged man named Wells, a resident of the town, gave himself up to the police as the murderer. He claimed to be a somnambulist and that the deed was done while he was asleep. He didn't think he ought to be punished, but he wanted to be tried and acquitted. Not one true statement did he make in his story, and he was told to take his leg and get out.

The hunt for the true criminal was kept up for a year, but he was never discovered. The police were no doubt right in the first theory. The man entered the house for plunder, and, being discovered, if not attacked, he fired the fatal shot and then escaped. It is more than likely that he was a stranger in the town.

You will naturally ask why those people charged themselves with the crime when they were not the least bit guilty. A physician could probably give you a clearer answer. My theory is that they had an intense argument with themselves how the crime was committed or how they would have committed it if they actually did commit it. Such cases are rare, and it must be for some such reason that courts often refuse to accept a plea of guilty and give the accused a fair trial for his life and liberty. There are people, as every lawyer and detective knows, who are anxious to be witnesses in a case and will perjure themselves on the stand without seeming to be aware of it, and it is carrying out this singular line of conduct or train of thought that one may come to accuse himself.

WOMAN'S BEST MEDICINE

Mrs. Kelly Advises all Women to Take "Fruit-a-Tives"

HAGERSVILLE, ONT., AUG. 26th. 1913.

"I can highly recommend "Fruit-a-tives" because they did me an awful lot of good and I cannot speak too highly about them. About four years ago, I commenced taking "Fruit-a-tives" for a general break-down and they did me a world of good. We bought a good many dollar's worth, but it was money well spent because they did all that you claim for them. Their action is so pleasant, compared with other laxatives, that I found only pleasure, as well as health, in taking them. They seemed to me to be particularly suited to women, on account of their mild and gentle action, and I trust that some other women may start taking "Fruit-a-tives" after reading my letter, and if they do, I am satisfied the results will be the same as in my own case".

MRS. W. N. KELLY

"Fruit-a-tives" are sold by all dealers at 50c. a box, 6 for $2.50, trial size, 25c, or sent postpaid on receipt of price by Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

COUNTESS HAS SMALLPOX

Former Miss Vanderbilt Contracted Disease in Military Hospital

LONDIN, March 10—It has just become known in Budapest, according to private advices received to-day in London, dated, March 3, that Countess Szechenyi, formerly Gladys Vanderbilt, of New York, contracted smallpox and has been dangerously ill for the past fortnight.

The countess was nursing in a Budapest military hospital when she fell ill. She has been doing nursing work since the beginning of the war and never ceased her voluntary duties when cases of infectious diseases, such as smallpox, typhoid and even cholera, began to be of almost daily occurrence in military hospitals.

The countess was working in a private mansion loaned for hospital purposes in Budapest, and leaving there attended to the men brought in with smallpox. A fortnight ago she fell ill with the disease. For two weeks her condition was serious. The fact was not made public until March 3, when the Countess's medical advisors stated that she was doing well and that she would, it was expected, leave home in a few days.

AGED LADY STRUCK BY AN AUTOMOBILE

TORONTO, March 10.—Mrs. Sarah Love, 78 years old, 31 Coolmine ave., had both her legs broken and she sustained a fractured skull last night, when she was knocked down by an automobile at Dundas street and Rusholme road. The aged lady had alighted from a Dundas car and was in the act of crossing from the south to the north side of the street when she was struck by the car which was going east. The car was driven by Mathias Sasgen, 252 Macdonnell avenue, and as there were no witnesses and he stated that he was going at a moderate rate of speed and the occurrence was purely accidental, the police did not hold him. Mrs. Love was taken to her home where she lies in a precarious condition.

Fell Off C.P.R. Train

J. Seeney, Havelock, Missed His Footing While Standing on Platform

PETERBORO', March 10.—An inquest into the death of John Seeney, of Havelock, whose death followed injuries received when he fell from a C.P.R. passenger train east of Norwood, was held this afternoon, the [illegible]g a verdict to that effect. Dr. Cameron, who attended the man at the hospital, testified that Seeney said he was riding on the platform of the baggage car when he missed his footing and fell to the side [illegible] track. He was not discovered till 24 hours later.

Mr. R. Coulter, Reeve of Stirling Village, was in the city to-day.

CLOTHES OVER STOVE SET HOUSE ON FIRE

TORONTO March 10—Clothes hanging up to dry over a kitchen stove were responsible for a fire which did about $450 damage to the residence of Mr. George Williams, 252 Rhodes ave. yesterday. The clothing caught fire and the flames spread to the woodwork surrounding. An alarm was turned in and the firemen responded quickly with No. 26 and No. 22 hose wagon and No. 8 hook and ladder, and when these arrived the firemen, fearing that the fire would spread, sent in a further alarm which brought out more apparatus. The damage to the house amounted to only about $160, however, and the contents were damaged to the extent of about $300.

BARONESS VON SUTTNER
the Authoress

“Darwin has certainly wakened reasonable doubts, and apes and man do greatly resemble each other,” the minister added, “but it will take some time to bring about a unity of opinion among the scientists about it.”

“These gentry live by disputing,” said the old general to the left, in a heavy Viennese dialect. “I too have heard something about this ape business. But why bother one's head with the chatter of the star-gazers and grass-collectors and frog-dissectors? I saw a picture of this Darwin, and I could well believe that his grandfather was a chimpanzee.”

The entire company enjoyed the joke.

Then the quieter general spoke: “Can you imagine an ape inventing the telegraph? Speech alone raised men so far above beasts——”

“Pardon, your Excellency,” interrupted Dr. Bresser, “but the art of speech and the capacity for invention were not among man's original powers. After all, it is the result of evolution and development.”

“Yes, I know, Doctor,” replied the general, “the war-cry of the new school is evolution, but one cannot develop a camel from a kangaroo, nor do we find apes to-day developing into men.”

I turned to Baron Tilling: “And what do you think of Darwin? Are you a follower or an opponent?”

“Although I have heard much of late about Darwin, Countess, I cannot give an opinion, for I have not read the book.”

“Nor have I,” the doctor acknowledged.

“Nor I—nor I—nor I” came the chorus from the rest.

And the cabinet minister gravely wound up: “The subject is so popular to-day that the expressions, 'evolution,' 'natural selection,' 'survival of the fittest,' have passed into current thought. You find many defenders among those who thirst for new ideas and change, while cool-headed, critical people who insist on proof are found on the other side.”

“There is always opposition to every new idea as soon as it comes up,” said Tilling; “but one must have penetrated into the idea in order to be able to judge. Conservatives assail anything, and often for the weakest and most absurd reasons, and the masses only repeat what they hear. To judge of scientific theories without investigation is absurd. Even Copernicus was thundered down by Rome—”

“But, as I said before,” interrupted the minister, “not orthodoxy but science itself cries down false hypotheses in our day.”

“New ideas are always objected to in the beginning by the old fogeys who never like to give up their settled dogmas and views,” Tilling replied. “For my part, I shall read the book and the opposition of the narrow-brained speaks rather for than against its truth.”

“Oh, you brave, clear-thinking spirit!” I silently apostrophised the speaker.

CHAPTER III.

The dinner-party broke up at eight o'clock although my father insisted on detaining them. I politely urged a cup of tea, but each had an excuse and felt obliged to go. Tilling and Bresser had also risen to take leave, but were easily persuaded to stay. Father and the doctors were soon seated at the card-table, while Baron Tilling joined me by the fire.

“I have a scolding for you, Baron. After the first visit you forgot the way to my house.”

“You never asked me.”

“I told you, Saturdays.”

“Pardon me, Countess, if I find regular reception days abominable. To meet a lot of strange people, bow to the hostess, sit a minute, hear the weather discussed, meet a [illegible] acquaintance, ventured a stupid remark; a desperate attempt to start a conversation with the hostess is interrupted by a new arrival, who starts the weather talk again, and then a fresh bunch comes in—perhaps a mother with four marriageable daughters—you give up your chair, and finally in weariness take leave and go. No, Countess, my talent for society is weak at best.”

“I meet you nowhere. Perhaps you hate people, and are a bit misanthropic. No, I do not believe that, for I conclude from your words that you love all men.”

“Hardly that; it is humanity as a whole I love, but not every man, not the coarse, worthless, self-seeking. I pity them because their education and circumstances made them unworthy of love.”

“Education and circumstances? Does not the character depend on heredity?”

“Our circumstances are also a matter of inheritance.”

“Then you do not hold a man responsible for his badness, and therefore not to be hated?”

“The one does not always depend on the other. A man is often to be condemned, though he is not responsible. You are also not responsible for your beauty, and yet one may admire——”

“Baron Tilling,” I said reproachfully, “we began talking seriously and suddenly you treat me like a compliment-seeking society miss.”

An awkward pause followed. Then I said abruptly:—

“Why did you become a soldier, Baron Tilling?”

“Your question shows that you have looked into my mind. It was not I, Frederick Tilling, thirty-nine years old, who has seen three campaigns, who chose the profession. It was the ten-year-old little Fritz, who spent his babyhood playing with lead soldiers and toy war-horses. It was this boy, whose father, a decorated general, and whose lieutenant uncle were always asking, 'What are you going to be, my boy?' And the boy would always answer, 'A real soldier with a real sword and a live horse!'”

“My son had a box of leaden soldiers given him to-day, but he shall never have them. Tell me, why did you not leave the army after the little Fritz had grown into the big Frederick? Had not the army become hateful to you?”

“To call it hateful is saying too much. The condition of affairs which requires that men shall enter the cruel duties of war, that I hate. But if such conditions are inevitable, I cannot hate the men who fulfil these duties conscientiously. If I left the service, would it diminish war? Another would hazard his life in my place. Why not I?”

“Is there not some better way for you to serve your fellows?”

“Perhaps. But I have been taught nothing thoroughly except the arts of war. I think a man can do good and be useful in almost any surrounding, and find opportunity to lift the burden of those dependent upon him. I appreciate the respect the world holds me in because of my position. My career has been quite fortunate, my comrades love me, and I enjoy my success. I have no estate, and as a civilian I could not help even myself. So why should I consider abandoning the military service?”

“Because killing people is repulsive to you.”

“Yes, but in self-defence the responsibility for killing ceases. War is often called murder on a big scale, but the soldier never feels himself a murderer. Naturally the atrocities of the battle-field are revolting to me, and fill me with pain and disgust even as a seaman might suffer during a storm. Still a brave sailor is undaunted and ventures the sea again.”

“Yes, if he must. But must there be war?”

“That is another question. The individual should do his duty, and that gives him strength and even pleasure.”

And so we chatted in a low tone, that we might not disturb the card-players. Neither would our conversation have suited the others, for Tilling told of the horrors he experienced in war, and I told him of my reading of Buckle, who argued that the war spirit would die out as civilization advanced. I felt Tilling's confidence as he displayed his inner feelings to me, and a certain current of sympathy was established between us.

“What are you two plotting and whispering about?” my father suddenly called out.

“Oh, she likes that; she has heard them from her childhood.”

We resumed our whispered talk. Suddenly Tilling fastened his gaze on me, while speaking in a sympathetic voice. I thought of the princess, felt a sudden stab, and turned my head away.

“Why did your face change, Countess? Did my words offend you?”

I assured him it was nothing, but the conversation became rather strained. At last I rose and looked at the clock, and bade my father good-night. Tilling offered to take me downstairs.

“I fear I have offended you, Countess,” he said, lifting me in my carriage.

“On my honor, no.”

He pressed my hand to his lips. “When may I call?”

“On Saturday——”

“That means not at all.” He bowed and stepped back.

I wanted to speak again, but the carriage door was shut. I should have liked to cry tears of spite like a vexed child, to think I had been so cold to one whose warm sympathy I had so enjoyed. Oh, that hateful princess! Was it jealousy? Then it dawned on me with a burst of astonishment—I was in love with Tilling! “In love, love, love,” answered the carriage wheels. “You are in love,” the street lamps flashed at me. “You love him,” breathed the scent of my glove, as I pressed the spot he kissed to my lips.

Next day in the red book I denied it all. I enjoyed a sympathetic clever man, but that is far from falling in love. I would meet him the next time quite calmly, and find pleasure in conversing with him. How could I have been so disturbed yesterday? To-day I could laugh at my silliness.

The same day I called on my girlhood friend, Lori Griesbach, from whose letter I read the news of my husband's death. Through our children we had much in common, and saw each other almost daily, and, in spite of many differences in our nature, we were real friends. Our two boys were the same age, and her little daughter Beatrix, ten months old, we had playfully destined should be some day the Countess Rudolf Dotzky. The conversation ran on dress, our children and acquaintances, the latest English novel, and the like.

As we chatted, I ventured to ask if she knew what the gossips had said about Tilling and the princess.

“Everybody knows there is nothing to it. Why, have you any interest in Tilling? Dear Martha, you are blushing. How happy I would be to see you in love once more. But Tilling is no match for you. He has nothing, and is too old. Ah, shall we ever forget that sad hour when you read my letter? War is a cruel business for some, and others find it excellent. My husband wishes for nothing more ardently than that he may distinguish himself.”

“Or be crippled or shot dead.”

“Oh, that only happens when it is one's destiny. Your destiny, my dear, was to be a young widow.”

“And the war with Italy had to be to bring it about,” I added.

“And I hope it may be my destiny to be the wife of a brilliant young general,” said Lori, laughingly.

“So another war must break out that your husband may be quickly promoted, as though that were the simple and only purpose of the government of the world.”

The conversation changed to pure gossip, of Cousin Conrad Althaus and his devotion to Lilli; of the latest marriage; the last new English novel, “Jane Eyre”; of the misdeeds of Lori's French nurse; of the trouble of changing servants, and all the usual chatter of idle ladies.

“Now, my dear,” I broke in, “I must really go, for I have other calls which I cannot put off.” At another time I could have been entertained for hours with the tittle-tattle. But to-day my mind was elsewhere. Once more in my carriage, I realized that again there was a change in me, for even the wheels took up the refrain: Ah, Tilling, Frederick Tilling!

When should I see him again? was my one thought, for in vain I went nightly to the theatre, and from there to parties with the one hope. My reception day failed to bring him. Had I offended him? What would I do? I was all on fire to see him again. Oh, for another hour's talk with him! How I would make amends for my rudeness! The delight of such a conversation would be increased a hundredfold, for I was now willing to confess what was becoming more than plain to me, that I loved him.

The following Saturday brought Tilling's cousin for a call, and her appearance made my heart beat. Would she tell me of him who so constantly filled my thought? I could not ask her directly. To speak his name would betray me, for I even flushed at the thought. We talked of indifferent things, even the weather, and the one name that lay most at my heart I could not mention.

At last, without warning, she said, “Oh, Martha, I have a message for you. My cousin Frederick went away day before yesterday, and begs to be remembered to you.”

The blood left my face, and I gasped: “Went away? Where? Is his regiment moved?”

“No; he has hurried to Berlin to his mother's deathbed. He adores her, poor fellow, and I pity him.”

Two days afterwards I received a letter from Berlin in an unknown hand. Without reading it I knew it was from him:—

Berlin, Wilhelm St., 8.
March 30, 1863. Midnight.

My Dear Countess—I must tell my sorrow to some one, yet ask myself why do I turn to you? I have no right to do so, but do so by irresistible impulse. You will feel with me, I am sure of that.

Had you known my mother, how you would have loved her! And now this tender heart, this fine mind, and charming disposition, must we put it into the grave—for there is no ray of hope. Day and night I am at her bed—and this is her last night. Such suffering, though now she is quiet, poor darling mother. Her senses are numb and her heartbeat is almost finished. Her sister and the physician are here with me.

How terrible is death and separation! It comes, but how we resist it when it would snatch a loved one away. What my mother means to me I can never tell you. She knows she is dying.

This morning she received me with an exclamation of joy when I arrived: “Is it you? Do I see once more my own Fritz? I feared you would be too late.”

“You will get well again, mother,” I cried.

“No, no, there is no hope for that, my dear son. Let us not waste our last hours in meaningless words. Let this be our good-bye visit.” I fell at her side sobbing. “You are crying, my son, I will not tell you to stop, for it should grieve you to part with your best friend, and I am sure I shall never be forgotten by you. Remember, also, that you have made my life very happy. Except your small childish sickness, or the dread that I might lose you during the time of war, you have given me nothing but the keenest happiness; you have shared all my burdens with me, and for this I bless you, my darling son.”

DEATHS.

BENSON—In Belleville, on Wednesday, March 10th, 1915, Samuel J. Benson, aged 53 years.

The funeral will take place from his late residence, 130 South John Street, tomorrow (Friday) 12th inst., at 3 o'clock. Services at the house at 2.30 p.m. Interment, Belleville cemetery.

PRESENTATION AND ADDRESS

A large number of friends and neighbors gathered at the home of Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Reid, 4th concession of Tyendinaga, when the following address was read by Miss M. Anderson and presentation made.

Blessington, March 8, 1915.

Dear Mr. and Mrs. Reid:—

We, your friends and neighbors have met here tonight to bid you good-bye before you leave for your new home. During the short time you have been in our midst we have appreciated your cheerful and neighborly spirit. We felt that we could not let this opportunity pass without showing in some tangible form our appreciation of you and our regret at your departure. Now, we ask you to accept these chairs and desk, not for their intrinsic value, but as a token of our esteem and love for you. We wish you success and happiness and trust that you will not forget your old friends while making new ones. Signed on behalf of your friends and neighbors,

FRED ROBINSON,
ALEX. McLAREN.

Mr. Reid responded in a few well chosen words.

Music was furnished by local violinists, also by a Victrola, and those who cared to trip the light fantastic had ample opportunity to do so. Others amused themselves at various games. Later on in the evening refreshments were served and in the "wee sma' hours" of the morning all returned to their respective homes, each and every one declaring that they had a right good time.

A PRESENTATION

Since Halloway is losing one of its best resident, R. J. Gordon, wife and sister, his many friends showed their kind actions and thoughts by assembling at his home on March 1st and presented his wife and him with a beautiful book case and secretary combination and Miss Jennie with an ebony finished toilet set. An address was read as follows:

Dear Mr. Gordon and family,—

Speaking of you and your family's departure from our midst, one of your neighbors said, that it is a serious thing to say good-bye to an old neighbor and this about expresses our feelings toward you and your family to-night, as we realize that you are to leave the neighborhood, in which you have for so many years resided to make new friends and enter upon new social relationships. The ties that bind neighbors together are often very close, for we are so much dependent upon each other in so many ways—in times of sickness and in times when a helping hand is needed.

No one ever went to you on such occasions and received anything but a ready and generous-hearted response and we are conscious of our loss by the removal of you and family from our midst.

We would ask you and Mrs. Gordon to accept this secretary, and you, Miss Jennie Gordon, this toilet-case, as a slight expression of our kind feelings toward you, and as a reminder of past associations and friendships.

We wish you and Mrs. Gordon, and all the family, every success and happiness in your new home, and pray that the blessing of God may be upon you. Signed in behalf of your many friends and neighbors.

M. TUMMON
Wm. MOORE

After this the people were seated and short speeches were given by H. K. Denyes, Jamer Hamilton, Wm. Moore and Percy Caverly. Lunch was then served to about one hundred guests, and all wish Mr. and Mrs. Gordon speedy success in their future home, which will be at Norwood.

DEATH ROLL.

SAMUEL BENSON

Mr. Samuel Benson, a well known tonsorial artist of this city, died last evening after being ill for some months. The immediate cause of death was kidney disease. In the year 1861 deceased was born in the County of Armagh, Ireland. When a child but 2 years of age he came to this country, and with his father, the late Mr. Joseph Benson, settled in this city. For many years Samuel conducted a successful barbering business, but was compelled to retire about two years ago, owing to ill health. Mr. Benson was deservedly popular with all classes of citizens. He was a member of The Belleville Lodge A. F. & A. M., and Mizpah Lodge, I.O.O.F. In religion he was a Presbyterian, being a member of St. Andrew's church. Some years ago he married Miss Boyle of this city, who survives, but no family. The many friends of "Sammy", as he was familiarly called, will regret to learn of his demise.

SUNDAY SCHOOL BASKETBALL LEAGUE

From now on, interest will be held in the Sunday School Basketball League. The best junior and intermediate players in the city have found a berth on one or other of the twelve teams, and much to the interest of the league is added, the fact that there are no all star teams, but a good distribution of the crack players.

In the intermediate game last night, between Bridge St and St. Andrews, Bridge St. came from behind at half time, when the score was 15 to 5, and won out, after playing ten minutes over time. The score being a tie, 18 all at the end of 40 minutes play, and 32-26 in favor of the B.S. team, when French and Barlow starred for Bridge St., while the St. Andrews, though defeated, presented a more evenly balanced team.

St. Michaels defeated John St. Juniors by a score of 22 to 16. John St. held the lead for the greater portion of the game, but were not there with the final pinch.

Bridge St. Juniors defaulted to St. Andrews in the Junior game.

There will be no games this Friday night as scheduled, owing to the High School Literary entertainment.

EASY METHOD FOR ASPARAGUS GROWING

Asparagus is the earliest and one of the most delicious vegetables that we have, and it should be grown much more extensively than it is. The trouble in growing asparagus in the ways ordinarily recommended is to keep down the grass. Until recently all I have ever read in farm papers and seed catalogues on the subject was to plant in rows and give clean cultivation. This method is all right for the market gardener, but the farmer must have an easier way.

For about 25 years we grew asparagus with but fair success until two years ago, when we covered the bed with a heavy coat of coarse manure in order to smother out all grass. The result was that last spring and summer we had a crop of the finest kind and had nothing to do, only go out and pull it.

A plan suggested in one seed catalogue, I think it was Simmer's meets my experience and ideas exactly. It says: "Set plants 12 to 15 inches apart each way, cultivate first season, then in the fall or early spring cover about four inches deep with coarse manure and continue to do this each year."

As we cannot tell how long an asparagus bed will live, a small plot say 15 feet square, set apart and treated in this way will keep a family in more than they can use during their whole lifetime.

Keep Back a Portion of Pay

Two orders, both of which originated in Ottawa, have been issued that are of interest to recruits and military men generally.

Ten dollars is to be withheld from the pay of every man who enlisted after March 1, for a period of six months This amount is to provide for civilian clothes of men who are discharged and to partly compensate the Government for military equipment issued to men who desert. After six months, the order says, the amount "may" be repaid, and civilian clothes will be issued free of charge to those discharged. The idea of this order is to protect the Government against part of the loss when men are discharged or desert.

In the case of a man who is seriously injured, and thereby put out of active service, the $10 will immediately be paid and the civilian clothes given.

A second order is aimed at those men whose parents or wives withdraw their consent after the former have gone into service, and comes direct from the Army Council. All non-commissioned officers or men of expeditionary forces or on service in Canada who apply for a discharge, or whose parents or wives request discharge, shall have to return certain amounts of money before the discharge will be given. If the discharge is asked for before three months' service has been put in, the amount to be paid is $15; if after three months' service, they must pay $2 a month for the remainder of the period of one year's service. If a man had served ten months he would have to pay $4 before being discharged. The idea is to partly reimburse the public for the expense caused by the soldier.

Botha Sweeps South Africa

LONDON, March 10.—(Special.)—General Louis Botha's campaign against German Southwest Africa which has almost been lost sight of owing to the bigger events in Europe and Asia, is progressing. One of Botha's armies, advancing in the south, is reported to have occupied a German camp north of Ukamas, which is forty miles north of the border, and to have captured a large number of tents, provisions, clothing and transport animals. These captures, according to the report, showed that the evacuation of the Germans had been a hasty one.

SYNOPSIS OF COAL MINING REGULATIONS.

Coal mining rights of the Dominion, in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, the Yukon Territory, the North-West Territories and in a portion of the Province of British Columbia, may be leased for a term of twenty-one years at an annual rental of $1 an acre. Not more than 2,560 acres will be leased to one applicant.

Applications for a lease must be made by the applicant in person to the Agent or Sub-Agent of the district in which the rights applied for are situated.

In surveyed territory the land must be described by sections or legal sub-divisions of sections, and in unsurveyed territory the tract applied for shall be staked by the applicant himself.

Each application must be accompanied by a fee of $5 which will be refunded if the rights applied for are not available but not otherwise. A royalty shall be paid on the merchantable output of the mine at the rate of five cents per ton.

The person operating the mine shall furnish the Agent with sworn returns accounting for the full quantity of merchantable coal mined and pay the royalty thereon. If the coal mining rights are not being operated, such returns should be furnished at least once a year.

The lease will include the coal mining rights only, but the lessee may be permitted to purchase whatever available surface rights may be considered necessary for the working of the mine at the rate of $10.00 an acre.

For full information application should be made to the Secretary of the Department of the Interior, Ottawa, or to any Agent or Sub-Agent of Dominion Lands

Claims Million As Commission

Lillian White Sues Regarding Sale of Patent to Mackenzie, Mann

TORONTO, March 11.—Lillian E. White, executrix of the will of Edward D. White, has entered suit against R. J. Henderson to recover commission alleged to be due at the sale of a secret process for converting bar iron into commercial steel. The patent, it is alleged, was sold to Mackenzie, Mann and Company, for $10,000,000. A million dollars is claimed as 10 per cent. commission under contract of January 25th, 1911.

A. A. Cockburn has entered suit against the Trusts and Guarantee Company, administrators of the estate of the late Christopher Klopher for breach of contract.

Wettlaufer Brothers are plaintiffs against Daniel Becker, of New Hamburg for the recovery of $10,180 damages for alleged breach of contract to deliver certain concrete mixers.

Wants to Prove His Own Sanity

NEW YORK, March 11.—Whether Harry K. Thaw shall take the witness stand today in his own defence on the charge of conspiracy in escaping from the Matteawan Asylum depends upon the final ruling by Justice Page upon the question of admitting evidence bearing upon Thaw's sanity. John B. Stanchfield, Thaw's chief counsel, has announced that if the Justice's decision on that point is favorable to Thaw, the defendant will testify in the hope of proving that he is sane.

Thaw's physical condition also is a factor in determining whether he will be a witness. He was suffering so severely last night from a cold and rheumatism that he was allowed to sleep in the office of the warden of the Tombs prison on a couch loaned for that purpose by Justice Page.

The prosecution announced that it will close its case against Thaw today. Counsel for the five co-defendants may ask that the charges against them be dismissed and then Thaw's counsel may raise the most important issue of the trial, whether evidence bearing on Thaw's sanity shall be admitted.

Thaw's counsel do not share the desire to have the cases dismissed as this might prevent Thaw from taking the witness stand to prove his sanity.

Jellicoe Still In Command

LONDON, March 11.—The publication of the news that Rear-Admiral Jellicoe has been made an Admiral and Rear-Admiral Meux made Admiral of the Fleet has apparently given rise to the supposition that Admiral Jellicoe has been superseded.

This is a misunderstanding. Admiral Jellicoe, though promoted in rank, still commands the Grand Fleet. The title of "Admiral of the Fleet," which has been conferred upon Admiral Meux, does not carry with it any special command. There are three admirals of the fleet in the British Navy. Admiral Meux still remains as commander-in-chief at Portsmouth.

Saucer Did Not Hit Her Sister

TORONTO, March 11.—Mrs. Clara Terrell appeared in the Police Court yesterday to charge her sister, Miss Maud Sylvester, with assault.

"She threw a saucer at me, then a fork, and as neither of these hit me, she threw a plate, which caught me in the eye," said Mrs. Terrell.

"She called me awful names. I never heard such language," said Mrs. Sylvester.

"There is enough war going on without your adding to it," said Magistrate Cohen. "I'll bind you each over in the sum of $50 to keep the peace for six months."

Received Message at Breakfast Table

HAMILTON, Ont., March 11.—Mrs. George J. Burgess, East Hamilton, was just sitting down to breakfast with her two little children when a telegraph messenger handed her a telegram announcing that their husband, a Color-Sergeant with the Princess Patricias had been killed in action on March 1. Mrs. Burgess collapsed after she read the message.

As a general proposition, the less money a man has the more children he feels able to afford.

FURTHER CASUALTIES IN CANADIAN TROOPS

Princess Patricias Again Suffer Severely, Losing Five Killed—Some Torontonians in the List—Other Battalions Also Had Losses—Official Statement Issued

OTTAWA, March 12.—(Special.)—Another extensive list of casualties among members of the Princess Patricias and several other battalions of the Canadian Expeditionary Force in France was issued last night by the Militia Department.

The list shows that the Princess Patricias, whose losses in yesterday's report were 33, again suffered heavily. Five of the "Pats" are reported killed, one died of wounds, one is dangerously wounded and fourteen wounded. Their list of killed now approaches one hundred. The 3rd Battalion, which includes several Toronto regiments, was also a sufferer. Several of the other battalions also had losses, indicating that the Canadians had been active in recent fighting. Outside the Patricias, the casualties in last night's list includes six men killed, three deaths from wounds and five wounded.

ANOTHER BIG HAUL OF RUSSIAN PRISONERS

(Canadian Press Special)

BERLIN, March 12.—Near Przasnysz, the German troops after giving way for a short time, are again 2½ miles north of that town. Since relinquishing Przasnysz the Germans have taken prisoner a total of 11,000 Russians on battlefields between the Vistula and the Orzye Rivers.

COUNTER ATTACKS REPULSED BY ALLIES

(Canadian Press Special)

LONDON, March 12.—The following report concerning the operations of the British forces on the western battle front was given out to-day by the Official Information Bureau: "During the night of the 11th-12th and in the early morning several counter attacks were easily repulsed by the Fourth Corps and the Indian Corps, with heavy losses to the enemy. Sixty prisoners were captured in a night attack and the village of Le Pinette was also captured by the Third Corps with slight loss. Mist and fog now prevail and hinder operations."

RUSSIAN SOLDIERS PURSUING GERMANS

(Canadian Press Special)

LONDON, March 12.—Russian soldiers are pursuing a party of nine Germans headed by Captain Pappenheim, who, after the fall of Tsing Tau, taken by the Japanese, escaped from the fortress in which they were confined. They fraudulently secured Chinese passports and struck out overland for the line of the Siberian railway, with the intention of blowing up tunnels and bridges, thus cutting off the Russian war supplies now being received from Japan.

WHAT FRANCE THINKS OF BRITAIN'S FAR-FLUNG WAR

PARIS, March 11.—The Figaro, in an article devoted to Great Britain's efforts in the war, says:—

"Great Britain is not fighting only in Flanders;

A Turkish army, officered by Germans, faces her on the Suez Canal;

To defend the Persian Gulf against other Turks, she is proceeding towards the valleys of the Tigris and the Euphrates;

She is at grips with the German colonials in Togoland, the Camerons, Eastern and Western Africa, at the Great Lakes, and at the sources of the Nile.

"Each expedition is a romance of adventure giving place in no particular to the most famous exploits of the Conquistadores. Everywhere where British civilization reigns, German 'kultur' struggles against it.

"Nevertheless, Great Britain, with her clear vision of matters, with her realistic and practical common sense, which even marks her poets has recognized that the true battle field is in Flanders.

"However full of promise her other enterprises may be, the essential affair is that she can never have too many soldiers in Belgium and France. If the offensive is to come tomorrow from the Germans or us, it is there that she must gather her forces and unite with the troops of Field Marshall French, which have already won their laurels, all the new armies that Lord Kitchener has caused to spring from the rich soil of Great Britain and trained at Aldershot."

PRELIMINARY TACTICS FOR ALLIED ADVANCE IN SPRING

(Canadian Press Special)

LONDON, March 12.—Some English newspapers regard the sweeping advance by the British and Indian troops around Neuve Chapelle in the direction of the German position at La Bassee as the commencement of active operations by the left wing of the Allies, and likely to be followed by another important offensive thrust preliminary to a general advance in the Spring. It is believed that the Germans will promptly seek retaliation which will compel them to maintain their forces in that theatre intact or even reinforce them to meet the fresh forces which Britain is putting into the field.

No recent news has been received from the Dardanelles.

Bi-Lingual School Topic up in Senate

Senators David and McHugh Submit Motion Regretting The Differences in Ontario—Orangemen Oppose Bi-lingual Schools

OTTAWA, March 12.—The debate upon the question of Ontario bi-lingual schools was begun in the Senate yesterday. Senator David, who is responsible for the resolution, and Senator McHugh, who seconds it, were heard. Their speeches were comparatively short. Senator David moved the following resolution:—

"This House, without derogating from the principle of provincial autonomy, deems it proper and within the limits of its powers and jurisdiction, and in pursuance of the object for which it is established, to regret the divisions which seem to exist among the people of the province of Ontario in connection with the bi-lingual school question, and believe that it is in the interest of the Dominion at large that all such questions should be considered on fair and patriotic lines and settled in such a way as to preserve peace and harmony between the different national and religious sections of this country, in accordance with the views of the Fathers of Confederation and with the spirit of our constitution."

SENATE, PROTECTOR OF RIGHTS.

Senator David declared that he alone was responsible for the resolution. The Senate was created to protect the rights of minorities. He declared that in his presence, Sir George E. Cartier had declared that with populations represented in the Commons, and the minorities protected in the Senate there was nothing to fear. Senator David said that the time had arrived when the Senate could carry out the intention of the Fathers of Confederation.

"There is a province in which the minority is deprived of one of its constitutional rights by the famous Regulation Seventeen," said Senator David, who added that a commission officially appointed had declared that the operation of the regulation was to gradually crowd teaching of the French language out of the schools of Ontario.

RIGHT OF THE MINORITY

Senator David quoted Sir John A. Macdonald upon the right to use the French language in Canada. Sir John Thompson and Sir Mackenzie Bowell also had stood, he said, for the language right of the French minority in Canada. All, however, did not agree with the views of these great men. He would remind the Irish of Canada of their struggles in the past to preserve their language and institutions. He would remind them that in their struggle for Home Rule they had always enjoyed the sympathetic support of the French.

PRAYER TO GOD OF PEACE.

"Do not forget that a national injustice is a seed of discord," said Senator David. "There are millions of people now praying to the God of War; let us in this country pray to the God of Peace, and I hope that the Senate of Canada will give an example on this occasion."

Senator McHugh said that the settlement of the vexed school language question of Ontario was not impossible and should be studied and settled in the best manner possible.

"Though I do not propose a remedy, but leave that to others," said Senator McHugh, "my sympathies go out very strongly to the French Canadian minority of my own province, and when I see with what a generous way they treat the English minority of Quebec, I feel that in Ontario we should emulate them."

Senator Edwards adjourned the debate.

BERLIN DESPATCHES SAY BRITISH REPULSED

Claim Russians in Eastern War Zone Retreated Hastily to Avoid Defeat— Also State German Batteries Beat Back British Warships

(Canadian Press Special)

BERLIN, March 12.—(Official announcement)—In the western arena two battleships of the enemy, accompanied by two torpedo boats fired on Westende, north of Nieuport, yesterday. Seventy shots were fired without any damage. Our batteries forced the ships to retreat.

The British, who have occupied Neuve Chapelle, advanced several times last night to the eastward, but were repulsed; also to the north of Neuve Chapelle minor British attacks were repulsed. The fighting in this district still continues.

Everything was quiet in the Champagne district yesterday. In the Vosges a heavy snow storm prevailed and only minor operations took place.

In the East to the north of the Forest of Augustowo we vanquished a force of Russians which avoided a complete defeat by retreating hastily in the direction of Grodno. We took more than 4,000 prisoners, including two commanders of regiments.

To the north and northwest of Przasnysz German attacks have made progress. In this district we took over 3,200 prisoners yesterday.

HEADQUARTERS OF CANADIANS ARE REMOVED TO SHORNCLIFFE

(Canadian Press Special)

LONDON, March 12.—The Canadian headquarters have been moved to Shorncliffe.

The Russian Black Sea fleet is expected to start bombardment of the Bosphorus forts today in cooperation with the French and English in the Dardanelles.

A report says another German submarine has been sunk in the North sea by the trawler Alex. Chastise. She got tangled in the trawler's ropes and foundered in twenty minutes, with all on board.

A Pekin despatch says that Japan has modified her attitude towards China.

The semi-weekly communication from Sir John French's headquarters describes the operations accompanying the taking of Neuve Chapelle, when 4,000 yards of trenches fell into British hands and the army took up a position twelve hundred yards beyond the enemy's advanced trenches. Prisoners state that the British artillery is extremely effective. All German counter attacks were repulsed with loss. The initiative and spirit of our troops is admirable.

BELGIAN DIVISIONS MAKE ADVANCES

(Canadian Press Special)

ALL CANADIAN UNITS ARE SHAPING EXCEPTIONALY WELL

LONDON, March 12.—(Special)—A British officer on the Canadian Headquarters Staff writes: "All the Canadian units are shaping exceptionally well, though the men are inclined to take great risks. The Canadians are rapidly learning the tricks of this war, besides introducing new ones. The Canadian artillery gave the Germans a frightful tying up."

The body of Major Higginbotham, who died at the Queen's Canadian Military Hospital, Shorncliffe, is going to Toronto for burial.

GENERAL ALDERSON IS PLEASED.

London, March 10.

"Prime Minister, Ottawa: Just received a letter from General Alderson in which he makes the following statement: 'Our men have now been in the trenches over a week, and I am very glad to be able to say that they are doing quite remarkably well. I knew they would do well, but they have done much better than I expected, and all has gone with less trouble than I anticipated. All artillery, infantry, engineers, medical people, supply, etc., have settled into their places, and work in a way that makes me both pleased and proud.'

"(Signed) Perley."

The reading of this cablegram was greeted with cheers from both sides of the House.

JAPANESE GENERAL ASSERTS GERMANY'S STAR ON THE WANE

(Canadian Press Special)

LONDON, March 12.—The Daily Telegraph correspondent at Petrograd wires that General Oba, who has been representing the Japanese army on the staff of the Russian commander-in-chief since the beginning of the war, but is now returning to Japan, is very optimistic regarding the issue of the campaign. He thinks the operations of von Hindenburg on the Warta river in December marked the culmination of the German operations, and since that time Germany's star has been on the wane. It can already be felt that the Germans are wasting away. Even their shells have recently been of cast iron instead of steel, clearly indicating exhaustion of their resources. He is firmly convinced that when the Russian troops assume the offensive the enemy will be swept away. Peace, in his opinion, cannot be delayed more than six months.

Says Neutrality Most Imperative

A Public Announcement Follows Swearing in of New Greek Cabinet

LONDON, March 11—A Reuter despatch from Athens says the new Greek Cabinet took the oath of office Wednesday and also gives the following Ministerial declaration which was communicated to the newspaper:—

"For Greece, after her victorious wars, a long period of peace was an imperative necessity to enable her to work for the prosperity of the country. The organization of her public services, her land and sea forces, and the development and wealth of the country would have guaranteed her against any attack on what she has acquired at the cost of such great sacrifices, and would also have enabled her to carry out a programme of serving the interests of the State, and to adopt a policy in conformity to national traditions.

Neutrality Was Imperative.

"In these circumstances, the observance of neutrality was imperative for her from the very beginning of the European crisis. It was, and always is, her absolute duty to fulfill her treaty obligations as an ally and to seek satisfaction for her interests, without, however, compromising the integrity of her territory. The Government, conscious of the duty of thus serving the interests of the country, is convinced that the patriotism of the people will ensure the entire security of those interests."

Getting Ready For B.C. Elections

VANCOUVER, B.C., March 11.—Conservatives of this city have fixed March 19 as the date for ward preliminaries, and the following day for a convention for nominating candidates for the legislature. In addition to straight Conservative candidates there are indications there will be three or four Independent Conservatives in the contest here, and about a similar number of Labor candidates. The rumor that Hon. W J. Bowser would run both in Vancouver and Victoria has been emphatically denied. At present Mr. Bowser is Acting Minister of Finance and Agriculture in addition to his duties as Attorney-General. It is believed the Liberal candidates for Vancouver will be M. A. MacDonald, Ralph Smith, J. W. Deb Farris and Alex. Henderson, K.C. In Victoria it is believed W. Behnsen and F. W. Davey, members of the last legislature will retire. The nomination of Premier McBride and H. B. Thompson there is believed to be assured, and in addition the Imperial Conservative Association will have its nominees. The Liberal candidates are expected to be H. C. Brewster, leader of the Opposition; Alderman Bell, John Hartt and H. S. Hall.

Unhappy Lot of British Prisoner

Neil Primrose Voices Appreciation of Assistance by United States Official

LONDON, March 11.—The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of Foreign Affairs, Neil Primrose, speaking in the House of Commons Wednesday on the treatment of British prisoners in Germany, said that no reply had yet been received from the German Government to the proposal made five weeks ago that the American Quartermaster-General's Department, working under the American Ambassador at Berlin, should keep in touch with the prisoners' camps and distribute money and supplies to the prisoners from England.

He added, however, that owing to the good offices of the American Government, he had reason to believe that the proposal soon would be accepted.

In conclusion, the Under-Secretary expressed the British Government's "heartfelt gratitude to the Government of the United States for the use which they allowed us to make of United States representatives, and the ready way in which those representatives have put themselves at our disposal."

WALKERVILLE FINANCIER DEAD IN WASHINGTON

WINDSOR, Ont., March 12.—Special—News reached here of the death this morning in Washington, D.C., of Mr E. C. Walker, Walkerville millionaire, and son of the late Hiram Walker, founder of Walker's Distillery. He left only ten days ago in company with Mrs. Walker, to visit the latter's sister in Washington. He had been in failing health for some time, but his condtion was not thought to be serious, and the announcement of his death came as a shock to the people of Windsor and Walkerville, where he was very well known.

Mr. Walker was born and educated in Detroit, and was about sixty-four years of age. He was an Honorary Colonel of the 21st Essex Fusiliers, and patron of the Windsor Curling Club. He leaves, besides his wife, two brothers and one sister. One of his brothers left several weeks ago for London, England, later crossing to Berlin, his wife and daughter being interned there since the war. The daughter married a Polish nobleman, who is supposed to be with the German army.

Canadian Capture Was Quite Simple

Told To Take a German Trench at Dawn and They Did So

LONDON, March 11.—An interesting description of the capture of a German trench by Canadians has reached London in a letter from one of the men who took part in the charge. The Canadian writer says: "At a.m. we were ordered to take a German trench 25 yards away. 'Quite simple', we were told. 'Just shake your bayonets and they will surrender.' With four companions, besides two bomb throwers, I crept forward knee deep in mud until we were almost on top of the enemy's trench. The Germans, who were apparently surprised at seeing visitors, fired a round apiece at us and then fled. One of our men was shot outright, but we caught the German who hit him and we settled the account. Not one of their lot escaped, I think. It was hell as the enemy all along the line started firing, also throwing hand-grenades and employing machine guns, but we held the position long enough to enable our fatigue party to break down the trench. Then we slowly retreated, taking the dead and wounded with us. We were stepping into our own trench when a machine gun caught me."

CHICAGO MAN KILLED IN MEXICO CITY

(Canadian Press Special)

WASHINGTON, March 12.—John B. McManus, of Chicago, was killed yesterday when Zeapatists entered Mexico City. The American flag was flying over his house and the Brazilian Consul had sealed the doors. The Zeapatists allege the killing was in revenge for McManus having killed three of their number when they were in the city some time ago.

Wagging the Ears.

You will rarely find that a man who can wag his ears suffers from deafness. The reason for this is very simple. Wagging one's ears exercises them just as much as walking exercises the muscles of the legs. A great deal of deafness is caused by the muscles of the ears becoming stiff and refusing to respond quickly to the sound waves. Quite a large proportion of children can move their ears, just as they can move the skin on their forehead up and down, but as they grow up they lose their power through want of practice. It is a mistake to let a child lose this power, for it may mean the difference between good and bad hearing in after years. Dr. M. Fernet, the famous Paris doctor, has even gone so far as to suggest that people should be trained to wag their ears, just as they are trained to exercise any other muscles of the body.—San Francisco Chronicle.

Defining a Gentleman.

The true gentleman is the man whose conduct proceeds from good will and an acute sense of propriety and whose self control is equal to all emergencies; who does not make the poor man conscious of his poverty, the obscure man of his obscurity or any man of his inferiority or deformity; who is himself humbled if necessity compels him to humble another; who does not flatter wealth, cringe before power or boast of his own possessions or achievements; who speaks with frankness, but always with sincerity and sympathy, and whose deed follows his word; who thinks of the rights and feelings of others rather than of his own; who appears well in any company and who is at home what he seems to be abroad—a man with whom honor is sacred and virtue safe.—Dr. Wayland.

Notes Not Elaborate.

The bishop of St. Albans wrote that on a certain occasion he heard Bishop Wilberforce describe with such singular eloquence and power the effect on the soul of the clearing away of intellectual doubts that he begged to be shown the manuscript from which his friend had been preaching, as he wished to copy certain portions of the sermon.

Wilberforce handed him the document, turned to the page which contained the passage spoken of by the bishop and showed him a sheet of paper inscribed with the single word—fog.

Captain Says His Intention is Not to Intern His Vessel

NEWPORT NEWS, Va., March 11—Captain Thierichsen, of the Prinz Eitel Friedrich, late to-day formally informed Collector of Customs Hamilton that it was not his intention to intern his vessel, and that unless the United States refuses to grant him the necessary time for repairs and restrains him, the converted cruiser will attempt to continue its voyage of adventure.

The crew of the American ship William P. Frye, sunk by the German cruiser, were released from the Eitel Friedrich this afternoon, and brought ashore. Twenty-two arrived, but two of German nationality remained behind, and responded to the colors of the Fatherland by enlistment.

Captain Boy-Ed, naval attache of the German Embassy at Washington, arrived here to-day, and was taken on board the cruiser.

Brilliant Display at Ritchie Co's

The Ritchie Co., Limited, formerly Geo. Ritchie & Co., began business in this city fifty-nine years ago this Spring, and have been doing business here continually ever since. From a very small beginning the business has developed into large proportions, the steady growth being no doubt due to a few cardinal principles on which the business was founded, and which have been adnered to ever since. First, to go to the manufacturers direct in the home and foreign lands for their goods avoiding all middlemen's profits; secondly, to buy only well known makes of goods which can be relied on to turn out as represented; thirdly, to sell these at a moderate profit at the same price to everybody; and fourthly, to treat all customers, rich and poor, with equal attention and courtesy, whether their purchases are large or small.

The Spring Opening to-day must be a great contrast to the one held 59 years ago, in the size of stock and in the quantity of goods displayed. To-day the business of The Ritchie Co. ranks in the highest class in Canada, the stock carried being one of the largest and best assorted.

This is an unusual year in regard to fashions. As it is well known, France is not in the same position as formerly in the production of goods and styles. Her country has been invaded and her capital menaced. Her merchants and manufacturers are on the firing line. Her people are in a constant nervous strain and cannot concentrate their thoughts on fashions. Their Opera Houses, Concert Halls and Theatres are closed and the Boulevards deserted. Many of the noted modistes and manufacturers of millinery goods were practically banished and therefore cannot produce their usual beautiful goods.

For these reasons it has been necessary to depend largely on New York for novelties this season, so this progressive firm sent a number of their representatives there to study the new styles and to secure the latest novelties in Dresses, Hats, Flowers, Suits, Wash Materials, House Furnishing Goods, etc. We were informed to-day that a number of the new lines in dresses, etc., had not yet arrived, but would be on display a little later.

It would be a difficult matter to describe the vast numbers of shapes and styles in hats, so we must satisfy ourselves with simply a word. Many of the leading styles for the moment are on the military order, some being exact copies of the caps worn by the Scotch Highlanders, namely, the "Glengarry," others being modifications of the various helmets worn by the Allies. For early wear there is sure to be a run on very small hats, but it is beyond doubt that larger hats of the shepherdess type will be popular for later wear and for more dressy occasions. Poke shapes are quite freely shown and are very becoming. Flat, low-crowned sailors also bid fair to have a good sale, also the Tudor shapes in toques.

People became tired of the black velvet hat that had such a winter run, and they are going in much more for colors. The Sand and Putty shades are much seen, also the Regimental and Belgian Blues, Battleship Grey and Russian Green.

It is evident that there will be a great demand for flowers, which are the chief trimming of the new hats. These are in small effects, many of them being quite of a flat order. Small fruits, berries, raisins, etc., are very popular and for later wear larger flowers will no doubt be used. There are also novelty effects in ostrich and other feathers used for trimming. Narrow ribbons in corded silk and velvet are used and many of the hats have tabs and streamers.

There was a splendid showing of children's and misses' hats, and altogether the exhibit in the Millinery Department was most attractive.

The new suits for ladies are very pretty this season. Some of the skirts are wider, although there is no marked feeling for the extremely wide skirts. The coats are short and jaunty, some in bolero styles. Navy and black will again be popular, while the new sand shades are also fashionable. We saw pretty styles in separate coats in cloth and silk, also dainty dresses in silks, serges and wash materials. We were informed that some very pretty dresses had not yet arrived from New York.

In the Carpet and Homefurnishing Department the display of new goods is most elaborate. There is a splendid variety of the latest chintzes and other drapery and covering materials, some very dainty designs being made up in sample drapes and window decorations to show their application. Mr. Poste has just returned from New York, where he took a special course in draping and decorating. His new ideas are at the service of the customers. There is a magnificent display of rich rugs and carpets.

The showing of new silks and dress materials is extensive and varied. The making up department is under the supervision of Miss Cooke, who has come to Belleville with the highest recommendations.

There is the usual well assorted stocks of Linens, Hosiery, Gloves, Wash Materials and all sorts of novelties that are the vogue for the season.

AFTER GERMAN TRADE

Canada Can Cut-in on the Market For Coal Tar Products

Most of the coal tar products that have in the past been imported from Germany in large quantities, will in all probability now be made in Canada. It has been discovered that most of them, can be obtained as a by-product from the lignites found along the Canadian Northern Railway in Saskatchewan, which when properly handled will form one of the main fuel supplies of the province.

A review of the trade of the past few years, shows that Canada and the United States have been bringing in tar products valued at the point of export at over twelve million dollars, which probably cost double that amount by the time they reached the consumer. Amongst the most important of these commodities are wood preservatives, paraffin, analine dyes and various antiseptics. Millions of gallons of creosoting oils for preserving timber and ties have been imported by Canada and the United States.

As the German supply is cut off it can readily be understood that this is a golden opportunity for the development of a large trade in these products, which can undoubtedly be obtained from lignite at a lower cost than they are being laid down at present.

THE LIFE OF THE FARMER

Several hundred newspapers in various parts of the American continent have been taking a whack at the Philadelphia Public Ledger because of an article in which the following appeared:

> Of all callings, farming is the most beautiful. Mining has wonder and might in its potentialities, but its raw pictures are of grime and gloom. The sea is epic and romantic, but it lacks variety, and it mourns even when it sings. But agriculture—the third of the great sources of man's sustenance and riches—is the whole range of joyous nature rioting in every form of beauty. It has not a single aspect of ugliness, not a suggestion of monotony. It has the colors of the flowers, the music of the birds, the miracles of the soil, with beauty everywhere.

It is claimed that such an overtinted picture does harm and that terms of bird music and nature rioting are all out of place in connection with farming, says the Edmonton Journal.

But there have been farmers who have worked very hard and who have made a success of their calling and yet have had a very keen sense of the wonders and beauties of the earth. The man who goes to the country expecting to spend all his time in contemplating the latter will soon be disillusionized, but at the same time it is true that there are more opportunities along this line for the right kind of a person than are offered in most other serious occupations.

The world is not necessarily sordid and uninteresting to those who work hard. The more intelligently and the more industriously they perform their duties, the more attractive it should become—much more attractive than it is to the idler.

If the life of the farmer has to be altogether that of the galley-slave, there is not much chance of attracting people to it. The Public Ledger should qualify its language, but it makes no more serious mistake than do those who dwell insistently on the inherent ugliness of existence in the country.

GERMANY'S LACK OF KNOWLEDGE

The failure of the Germans to understand the British people, so widely distributed over the globe, undoubtedly had much to do with the willingness of the Kaiser's Government to bring on the war. That England would not engage in war; that she certainly would never send a man across the Channel to aid France; that dissension at home, unrest in India and discontent in her overseas Dominions would paralyze any desire she might have to help France—these and many other delusions as to England's position encouraged the Germans to believe that the British nation would not count for much in the war game which they wished to play. These great delusions have been rudely shattered by the action of the British people throughout the world. What is now necessary is that the good work of the past few months shall be continued with ever increasing strength and enthusiasm, so that the determination of Britain and her Allies to crush the German military rule may become more and more apparent to the German people. Every new manifestation of the power of Great Britain, every new step taken by the Overseas Dominions to strengthen the hands of the Imperial authorities in the prosecution of the war, will be a step towards an early peace, a peace of the only kind that is now possible for Britain and her Allies.

CANADA'S POSITION

Referring to the attitude of the Opposition in the Dominion House of Commons, The Guelph Herald aptly says:

> British men of war not only dominate the North Sea and keep the German navy from coming out, but the navy is strong enough to be able to send a squadron to assist in the forcing of the Dardanelles, besides policing various waters in other portions of the world.
>
> All of which makes a Briton's heart rejoice.
>
> Alas, that we Canadians have so little part in it all. When the sun rises in the Dardanelles, or the North Sea, or the English Channel, or on the Atlantic, it does not rise on "The Canada," or "The Dominion," or "The Ontario."
>
> No, indeed. There may be an "Australia," or a "New Zealand," or a "Commonwealth," but this country has no official representative in the dominating force which is now the security, as well as the pride and admiration of the English speaking world.
>
> And we know whom Canada has to blame for it all—the same Liberal leaders who are now at Ottawa wasting the time trying to make political capital out of speeches attacking the war tax! Which is just about the height of the Opposition's patriotism.

CURRENT COMMENT

The Russians have captured the man who wrote the Merry Widow waltz. Siberia? Siberia. Let us hope they will keep him.

President Wilson is now convinced that Mexico has not become exactly an elysium since the banishment of Huerta and the exaltation of Carranza.

For the first time in many years Canada's imports and exports for January nearly balanced. The exports amounted to $29,900,000, while the imports totalled 30,600,000.

The British and French in their advance to Constantinople are operating in territory that has figured in large operations since the dawn of history. One can imagine the shades of Xerxes and Alexander hovering about the Queen Elizabeth.

The Toronto Globe says: "To the temperance people who wanted direct legislation, Premier Hearst said: 'The zigzag path is often the best.' What is the difference between zigzagging and wobbling?" And the Hamilton Spectator asks, "What is wobbling?"

The City of Mexico is now reported to be threatened with starvation. The fact is not surprising. When the bigger part of the men of the country started in to raise riot instead of beans it was fairly sure that somebody would suffer before the national sanity was restored.

Montreal News: "Sir Richard McBride has been instrumental in showing that Mr. Pugsley's submarine gasconade was based on gossip. This factor, in view of which the Parliamentary truce was broken, was not more flimsy than the manner and matter of the truce breakers' presentation."

An American correspondent, Mr. Martin H. Donohue, tells of an interview he had with a Russian general, who discussed the situation with him "over a bottle of rose-colored old lemonade." Despite the announcement that drink is being enforced among the officers as well as the rank and file of the Russian army, those of us who have lived under local option will regard Mr. Donohue's description of the beverage with considerable suspicion.

Germany is beaten, and badly beaten, in the naval warfare. She cannot meet her enemy. So she skulks in harbor, and sends out her submarines in an attempt to gain by treachery what cannot be won in fair fight. That these submarine crews are ever taken prisoner at all is a tribute to the moderation with which the British navy wages war.

Edmonton Journal: "A well known Edmontonian of German ancestry has issued an appeal for the election of men to the House of Commons who will protest against the spending of Canadian money and lives in fighting the battles of the Empire. By the time a general election comes along the Kaiser himself might be available as a candidate on that platform. He would be a logical choice."

The German prisoners in Canada are well treated. Those in Great Britain are likewise properly cared for. The officer class especially are used with the utmost consideration. Can the same be said of the British prisoner in Germany?

The members of the Arizona Legislature have decided to smoke during their sessions. There is nothing in the Constitution of the United States or that of Arizona forbidding it. In the Arizona House there is one woman member who objected, but she was outvoted unanimously by the male members. There is one lady Senator, and she asked her male colleagues to smoke. So the laws of Arizona are now being made in clouds of fragrant smoke.

Antwerp Stays A German Port

Naval Commander There Talks Glibly of Its Present and Future Plans Well Mapped Out

COPENHAGEN, March 10.—The German naval commander of Antwerp, Rear-Admiral Laura, in an interview, has spoken with perfect confidence of the future of Antwerp as a German port. He calculated that the Belgians had exaggerated the reports of Antwerp's trade by thirteen per cent.

Hamburg, of course, was a much [illegible] and finer port, he said, but no one could estimate the rapid development of Antwerp after the war, when it had passed finally into the hands of German shippers and engineers. This development, according to the Admiral, already has begun here—a German firm having practically completed a new drydock seven hundred feet long, ninety feet wide, and twenty feet deep. Admiral Laura believed that Hamburg always would be the queen of North Sea ports, but Germany recognizes that Antwerp has a shorter North Sea route to New York than Hamburg, and with improved railway service to inland German towns. This is an advantage that will guarantee to Antwerp second place among the North Sea harbors.

"German order and thoroughness", said the admiral, "have been firmly established, and the people are going quietly about their work and there is no more stealing. We control the harbor with a very widely extended passport system. Since October, when we marched into Antwerp, we gradually have developed trade, the total tonnage leaving the city between October 30 and Februray 5 being 372,000, and the ships arriving representing 322,000 tons. We have tried to help everybody, and in shipping circles I hear no complaint of German administration."

The Germans say the English made a stupendous blunder when they sank the Gneisenau, the big German merchantman, in the Scheldt. The strong current, they say, has turned the vessel around so that it lies parallel with the banks, and ships of 13,000 tons can easily pass it on either side. The Germans are anxious to raise the ship, but amit that they have no raising gear.

German marines have made repeated attempts to repair the machinery of the steamers put out of action by the Allies before the city's fall. There are more than thirty steamers in the harbor belonging to the Hamburg-American, North German Lloyd, Kosmos, Hansa, Levant, and Hamburg-South American lines, besides two large Austrian vessels.

Blown Across Cellar Floor

TORONTO, March 11.—When a match was lit in the cellar of Charles Brooke's butcher store, 201 Delaware avenue, at about 2 o'clock yesterday morning a gas explosion occurred, and Mr. Brookes and an employe was hurled clean across the cellar. The front of the store was blown out and a plate glass window shattered. The two men were badly shaken up, but otherwise escaped injury. They had been working late, and were waiting for a night car. On hearing the approach of the car the electric light was turned off and one of the men struck a match to light their way to the stairs. Then the explosion occurred, followed by the crash of splintering glass above.

Inspector Tipton, of Ossington Ave. Police Station, thinks the gas had accumulated in the cellar owing to a leaking pipe.

TABLOID INTERVIEWS WITH WELL KNOWN MEN

Cartridges For "Kultur"

Germany is not content to be on the Continent of Europe "first among equals," but rather than that she should be "everything" there is not a Briton who will not lay down his life gladly. She will never be "everything" while there is one cartridge left.—Mr. A. J. Balfour.

Belgium's Pride

Tears dishonor us. Let us rather be thankful that Belgium, of all the countries, was privileged to be the first and most vital rampart of modern civilization against savagery and brutal aggression, and that her name in future will be joined to those few small nations whose fame is immortal.—M. Emil Verhaeren, Belgium's greatest author.

Jellicoe's Tribute

I feel prouder each day to have the privilege of commanding men of such splendid calibre. The same spirit which prevailed with their forbears dominates the actions of our sailors to-day.—Admiral Jellicoe.

The Braggarts

It is simply absurd, if not absolutely insane, for the Germans now to make use believe that they were not the aggressors, when even to-day in every line which they publish they assert that they are the strongest race in the world, and that it is for the world's benefit that they should rule it.—Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

Never Again

British business men were mistaken in employing Germans. They are cheapest, but they are paid spies, and in no manner must we ever employ Germans again.—Admiral Sturdee.

DUSKY SMOKERS

Indian Soldiers Who Use Hole in Ground For a Pipe

Like most soldiers, the native troops, the Garhwals, who, in company with the Gurkhas, are fighting with the allied forces, are inveterate smokers. They do not, however, share Tommy's love of pipe or cigarette, for they have peculiar means of their own of enjoying tobacco. One of their methods is to twist an oak leaf into a conical shape, fill it with tobacco, and draw the smoke through their clasped hands. Another trick is to bore a horizontal hole under the surface of a bank, place the tobacco at one extremity, and with their hands clasped over the other inhale the smoke between their thumbs. This is probably the most primitive way of smoking known.

The Garhwals have very simple habits. They have practically no fear of wild beasts, and in their native country they hunt the tiger, leopard, and bear, armed only with sticks and knives. The home of the Garhwals is in the Himalayan district, which is famous for its beautiful scenery and the excellent hunting to be obtained on its mountain sides. These dusky soldiers are fearless fighters, and King George, when in France, decorated a member of the 1st Battalion of the 39th Garhwal Rifles with the Victoria Cross for conspicuous bravery against the Germans.

LONDON'S VOLUNTEERS

First Corps Was Raised in the Time of Henry VIII.

In the days of Henry VIII., when England's shores were threatened by the French, the Lord Mayor and Aldermen of London took a census of the number of men in the City between the ages of twenty-one and sixty who were capable of bearing arms, and it is rather amusing to read, in the quaint phraseology of the time, that the Corporation decided that "only able persons who had white harness with white coats, bows and arrows, halberds, bills, or pole axes, and none others, should appear, except such as bear Moorish pikes or hand gonners, and white coats and caps with feathers, and white hose, cleanly shod. With fifers and minstrels."

Apparently, however, the old London Volunteers made a brave show for we read that it was a grand thing to behold them marching through the streets of London with pikes, archers and billmen, thirteen pieces of light ordnance, carried on carts, with powder and stone, leading the way to Westminster, where they were ultimately reviewed by "Bluff King Hal." This was in 1539, and was the first Royal review of the City of London Volunteers, although Edward III., in the fourteenth century, insisted that every man in the City should spend his spare time practising with bow and arrow and learn to shoot.

Queen Elizabeth was as enthusiastic as her father in regard to the training of London's volunteers. It was she who regulated the price of bows, caused practice butts to be erected, and, when Spain threatened an invasion, caused 4,000 volunteers to be picked from the companies under training for the defence of London.

And although the volunteers then, as now, were apt to be scoffed at, more or less, by the professional soldier, the records go to show that they could give a magnificent account of themselves. Historians tell us that at the Battle of Newbury the London trained bands quitted themselves like men of undaunted spirit, and were able to withstand the most furious charges of Prince Rupert and his brilliant cavalry.

Military Funerals

It is not universally known what is meant by a funeral "with full military honors." In such a funeral the coffin is borne on a gun-carriage. If the dead soldier was an infantryman his sword and helmet rest on his coffin. At the funeral of a cavalry soldier his sword and helmet are fastened to the saddle of his horse, which is led immediately behind the gun-carriage, and his top-boots, with spurs attached, are fastened in the stirrups, with the toes pointing backwards. A firing party, drawn, if possible, from the deceased's regiment, fires three volleys over the grave, and the "Last Post" is then sounded by buglers.

Potato Soup

Boil half a dozen large potatoes, put into a saucepan a shredded onion, some chopped parsley, and a cupful of milk. Rub the potatoes through a sieve into the saucepan. Stir well together, thin with water, and season with pepper and salt.

The water rice is cooked in makes an excellent foundation for soup.

SCIENCE HEALERS' PLEA

Dr. Burton Tells Legislators He Was Cured of Tuberculosis and Drug

Dr. Edmund F. Burton of New York told the Assembly Judiciary Committee at Albany this week that several years ago he was pronounced a sufferer from Tuberculosis by the verdict of three physicians, each of whom had been President of the American Medical Association, that he was at the same time a victim of the morphine and cocaine habit, that he had been told he had three weeks to live, and that he had been cured in twenty-four hours by one Christian Science treatment. He was speaking at a hearing on Assemblyman Thorn's Bill, which would legalize the practice of Christian Science healing.

The measure was opposed by representatives of State and county medical societies, who expressed the fear that the passage of the bill would lead to wholesale quack practice. Dr. Richard Kevin of Brooklyn, representing the Medical Society of the State of New York said it had taken fifty years to build up a system of efficient medical practice in New York and that the Thorn bill would tear down the barriers against charlatans. Dr. L. R. Williams, Deputy State Commissioner of Health said that Christian Science had a field of usefulness, but that healers were not qualified to chose the patients they should treat. Others favored amendments to the bill which would define Christian Science. There was a marked attitude of interest among the members of the committee.

Judge Clifford S. Smith of Boston said the bill asked only that the regulations affecting the practice of medicine be confined to its own scope. Judge Smith was the target for rapid-fire questions.

"How do you propose to cure if you can't diagnose," was the reply.

"We base our practic on Christ, the only practitioner who never failed."

"Do all Christian Scientists claim," another asked, "that they are as infallible as Christ?"

"By no means," was the answer.

"But certainly medical doctors will not claim that their system is perfect. We are at least as successful as you are."

This brought a round of applause from the advocates of the measure.

In summing up, Judge Smith said: "We ask to be allowed to practice without being convicted for practicing medicine."

A CHAT ABOUT IRONS

As With Everything Else There is a Right and Wrong Way to Use Them

Ironing is really very fascinating work if one knows how to set about it—otherwise it is a task to be dreaded. So much of one's success depends on the condition of the iron.

For ordinary household use, sizes from 4 to 6 are the most useful, and then one wants a couple of polishers and a baby iron—say a 2—is handy for getting up into small gathers.

All irons should be kept in a dry place and should not be allowed to cool on the heating stove, also they should never be put right on to a fire to heat, as this spoils the smooth surface. If they are heated over gas a sheet of block tin or iron should be placed over the flame, as moisture which forms rust settles on the iron if they come into direct contact with the gas.

Rubbing on brown paper sprinkled with bathbrick is the best way to clean irons before using, and if they should have got rusty, a little paraffin and emery powder will put them right.

To begin with, you must have a nice ironing blanket and sheet. Skirt and sleeve boards cost little and are indispensable.

Lace and embroidery must be well pressed on the wrong side over a thick pad of felt.

Articles such as calico, linens, prints, chintzes, etc., are ironed on the right side to give them a finish. The principal difference between amateur and first class professional ironers is that the latter iron silk and starched articles wet, and also thoroughly dry everything under the iron, while the amateur dries and damps down her silks and starched things, and is very prone to hang up her work to "air" before it is dry!

Also the professional believes in having a piece of white wax inside a folded rag on which she may give her iron a frequent rub to make it "go" well.

WATCH OVER THE BABY

Mothers Should See They Are Not Frightened Into Obedience

Too little attention is given to the selection of a nurse by the mother. Remember that you canno. expect the same care given your child which you give it when you entrust it to others.

Irresponsible girls—often total strangers are put in charge of children of tender years and the mother goes about her daily pursuits believing that she has "done her duty."

It is unsafe for a woman, after spending weary months in raising her child to babyhood, to permit a careless nurse girl to undo all she has accomplished.

The nurse girl may threaten the baby with the policeman or with imaginary hobgoblins.

This is very bad. Fear instilled thus early in the tender mind of a child is often almost impossible to eradicate and may engender a permanent timidity. A too rigid obedience to the nurse on the baby's part should always be viewed with suspicion as suggesting methods of secret discipline.

From all of which considerations it follows that no mother should neglect to investigate the character of the nursemaid she proposes to engage.

Mend Your Kitchen Ware

Here's a good mending paste: Mix together thoroughly equal parts of putty, wood ashes and salt. Spread this paste on inside and out, if the holes are large. Set aside for an hour. Then put pail or pan on stove with a little water in it. Boil up a few minutes and throw out water; rinse thoroughly and wipe dry. Set aside for two days, when it will be ready to use.

To Wash Chamois Leather

Chamois leather is rather expensive, so that it is just as well to know how to clean it. Put into a weak solution of soda into which you have thrown some grated soap. Leave it for two hours and then rub it until clean. Finally rinse the leather in warm soapy water. Wring the leather in a linen cloth and dry quickly. It can also be rubbed dry and brushed until soft.

Trick Worth Trying

Sew a small piece of muslin inside the shirt—to the collar band and shoulder seam, leaving front loose so that it will not interfere with laundering. This protects the negligee shirts from the wear of stiff collar against the collar bone.

To Freshen Serge

The main freshening of serge is to remove the shine. This cannot be permanently done but for temporary results put a few drops (five or six) of ammonia in the quart of sponging water, and use this instead of the clean water.

The public never forgets a scandal. Lately attention has again been directed to the fact that Adam and Eve never were married.

Remember the Maine, Says the London Chronicle

Murderous Methods of German Pirates Are Big Factor in Situation

LONDON, March 11.—The Daily Chronicle, in an editorial, discussing the attitude of the United States in connection with the policy of Franco-British reprisals against the German submarine outrages, says:

"We sincerely hope that on both sides care may be taken to prevent Downing street and the White House from finding themselves at an awkward moment committed to an irreconcilable position from which neither can with dignity recede.

"There is need among some sections of our public, though not, of course, in official quarters, of a better realization of the American position. The people who clamor for reprisals against Germany must not forget that all the reprisals affect neutral as well as German interests. On the other hand, there is perhaps need, if we may venture to say so, for the American public to recognize more sympathetically than it does our own position as victims of a hideous atrocity.

"Germany has no more right to assassinate the innocent merchant seamen of an enemy than it has those of a neutral, and we have as much right and cause to be angry at what has actually been done to our poor little fellows as the United States would have to 'hold Germany strictly accountable' if she drowned American sailors. No one who remembers the Maine can doubt how the United States would resent such a crime against her own people; and, while it is not suggested that she would go to war for crimes against British or Scandinavians, she ought to recognize that this criminality is a real and big factor in judging the situation.

"At present American newspapers are apt to harp on the theme that Great Britain's proposals, though less inhuman, are not less illegal than Germany's—as if, after all, the inhumanity did not much matter. This strikes an outsider as perhaps not entirely worthy of the best American mind."

Inasmuch as sitting cross-legged is about the only pleasure the men have left, it is confidently expected that the legislature will pass a law against it at its next session.

When a man buys a new hat, that is an incident. But when a woman buys a new hat, that is an episode.

There are various ways of wasting time. One of them is to spend it coloring a meerschaum pipe.

MORE STRENGTH FOR OLD PEOPLE

Mrs. Hutchison—Eighty-One Years Old—Uses No Other Tonic but Vinol and Recommends It to Friends.

Greenville, S.C.—"It is with pleasure I tell others of the great benefit I have derived from Vinol, for the past several years. I am 81 years old and I find Vinol gives me strength, a healthy appetite and overcomes nervous disorders. Vinol is the only tonic reconstructor I have used for several years. I have recommended it to a great many of my friends and it has always proved satisfactory."—Mrs. M. A. HUTCHISON, Greenville, S. C.

Such cases as the above are constantly coming to our attention. If people in this vicinity only realized how Vinol invigorates old people we would not be able to supply the demand.

It is the tissue building, curative elements of the cod's livers, aided by the blood making strengthening properties of tonic iron contained in Vinol, that makes it so successful in building up strength for old people, delicate children and for all run-down conditions. Vinol is also a most successful remedy for chronic coughs, colds and bronchitis. If it fails to benefit any one who tries it we return your money.

BARONESS VON SUTTNER
the Authoress

Another attack came on, and groans of pain almost crushed my heart. Oh, this last frightful enemy, death! I remembered the sights of agonized sufferers on the battle-field and in hospitals! When I reflect that we soldiers sometimes joyously drive others on to death, that we urge full-blooded eager young men on to sacrifice themselves willingly to this terrible enemy, against whom even the weak and broken-down old people fight so bitterly—is it not revolting?

This night is frightfully long. If only sleep might quiet her. But there she lies, with her lids parted, suffering. Every half-hour I bend over her motionless, then I come away to write a few more lines to you, and then I go to her again. It strikes four, and one shivers at the unfeeling strides of time as it unrelentingly presses on to eternity, and at this very moment for this one passionately loved mother time must cease—for all eternity. But as the cold, outer world turns dull to our pain, so much the more longingly do we seek to fly to another human heart which we trust and hope may feel some unison of feeling. And so this white sheet attracted me, and therefore I wrote this letter to you.

Seven o'clock in the morning. It is over. Her last words were, "Farewell, my dear boy." Then she closed her eyes and slept. Sleep soundly, darling mother. In grief I kiss your dear hands.—Yours in deepest sorrow,

FREDERICK TILLING

I have this letter still. Frayed and faded the pages are now. For twenty-five years it has withstood my kisses and tears. It was sent "in deepest sorrow"; I received it "shouting with joy," for though there was not a single word of love in it, yet where was a plainer proof that the writer loved me than that he should turn to me at his mother's death-bed, to pour out his grief? In answer I sent a wreath of a hundred white camellias enfolding a single half-blown red rose—the scentless white flowers for the departed, and the glowing blossom—that was for him.

CHAPTER IV.

Three weeks had passed. Poor Conrad Althaus had proposed and been rejected by Lilli. But his courage remained undaunted, and he visited us as before.

Expressing my surprise at his loyalty, I said, "It delights me that you are not offended, and it proves that you are not so serious, for despised love often turns into resentment!"

"You mistake me, dear cousin; I love Lilli to distraction. First I thought it was you whom I cared for, then Rosa, but now I am certain it is and always will remain Lilli."

"That sounds very likely. What if she will not marry you?"

"I am not the first man a girl has married to get rid of him. By-and-by she will realize how faithful and worthy I am, and that will touch her. You will be my sister-in-law yet, Martha, and I am sure you will speak for me."

"I certainly approve of you, and that is the way a woman should be won. Our modern young men find it too much trouble to strive and win happiness; they wish to pick it up without struggle, as they snatch a way-side posy."

Tilling had been back in Vienna for a fortnight without a sign to me. I know I appeared depressed, and could not blame Aunt Marie for reproaching me for my low spirits. She blamed my solitary existence, and urged upon me matrimony and devotions. "You have quite forgotten it is Easter," she said.

"My dear Aunt, I think that both marrying and going to confession should be done from the heart, and not for a remedy for depressed spirits."

"Have you tickets to see the foot-washing?" he said presently.

"Papa brought me some, but I do not really care to go."

"Oh, but you should go. There is really nothing quite so touching as this ceremony—the exemplification of Christian meekness. Think of it—the Emperor and Empress, in stooping to wash the feet of these poor old folks, show us how small and meaningless is earthly greatness compared with the majesty of God."

"To symbolize humility by kneeling one must feel oneself very exalted. This ceremony only tells this—'As Jesus is in comparison with the humble apostles so am I, the Emperor, in comparison with these paupers.' Does that express meekness?"

"What strange ideas you have, Martha. For three years in the country you have read such wicked books that your ideas have all become warped."

"Wicked books!"

"The other day I innocently mentioned 'The Life of Jesus' by Strauss, which I saw on your table, to the Archbishop. 'Merciful heavens,' he cried, 'how did you get hold of such a vicious work?' When I told him that I had seen it at the house of a relative, he exclaimed, 'As she values her soul let her throw the book into the flames.' Do, Martha, do burn the book!"

"Give me your answer. Will you burn the book?"

"Why discuss it, dear Aunt? We cannot understand each other in these matters. Let me tell you what Rudolf did yesterday"; and the conversation turned easily on her favorite subject, where we never differed, for in our judgment Rudolf was surely the most original, dearest, and capable child in the world.

Next day, shortly after ten, dressed in black, we all went to the palace to witness the great ceremony of foot-washing. Our places were reserved among the members of the aristocracy and diplomatic corps. We found ourselves exchanging greeting right and left. The galleries were filled with a mixed crowd, but we felt quite distinctly superior to them as we witnessed this festival which was to stir us with humility.

Perhaps the rest were in a more religious mood, but to me the scene was no more than a mere theatre spectacle. There we were, exchanging salutations, as if from our boxes we were waiting for the curtain. The long table was set expecting the twelve old men and twelve old women who were to have their feet washed by their Majesties.

Suddenly my eye fell upon Tilling. He as directly opposite us among the general's staff, but he did not see me, and just then the twenty-four old people had taken their places. They were clad in old German costume, wrinkled, toothless, bent, fitting admirably this ceremony of their middle ages. We were the anachronism, and our modern make-up did not harmonize with the picture.

I was watching the face of Tilling, which showed traces of suffering and deep melancholy. How I longed to give him a sympathetic touch of the hand. And while the spectators sat breathless, awaiting the coming of the grandees of the court, he by chance looked my way and recognized me.

"Martha, are you ill?" asked Rosa, laying her hand on my arm. "You have turned pale and red in the same moment. Look! Now! Now!"

The chief master of ceremonies gave the signal announcing the approach of the Imperial pair—certainly the handsomest couple on the continent. After them streamed in the archdukes and archduchesses, and the ceremony was to begin. The stewards brought in dishes of food, which the royal pair placed before the old people, making it more of a picture than ever—the attire, the utensils, and the processional giving it the festal aspect of an old Renaissance painting.

Scarcely were the dishes set on the table than they were removed again—by the archdukes, who were supposed also to need a lesson in humility. Then the tables were carried out, and the climax-scene of the foot-washing began. The washing as well as the eating was mere pantomine. The Emperor appeared to stroke the feet of each old man with a towel, after the officiating priest had made a show of pouring water over them. Stooping, he glided from the first to the twelfth. The Empress proceeded with the old women in the same way, losing none of her accustomed grace through the stooping attitude.

I was asking myself what could be the state of mind of these old people from their point of view, as they sat in the bewildering company in quaint costumes, with their Majesties at their feet. It must have been like a half-realized dream, half-pain, half-pleasure, confusing their poor heads already so full of the stupor of old age. Perhaps the newness and solemnity brought a complete suspension of thought to their minds. The thing that stood out most clearly, no doubt, was the red silk purse with thirty pieces of silver which their Majesties hung about each neck, and the basket of food they were allowed to take home.

The ceremony over, the greetings, gossip, and polite interchange of compliments began. But my only thought was, "Will he be waiting outside for me?" At last we got to the gate, and there he stood before me with a bow. As he thanked me for the wreath I had sent to Berlin, he took my hand and helped me to my carriage. The words came hard, but with a great strain, I managed to say, "On Sunday, between two and three." Another bow and we were gone.

My little red book revealed my excited anticipations, my most extravagant apprehensions that the meeting would reveal our mutual devotion. While I was writing the bell rang and I recorded myself as palpitating and trembling, for the last line was illegible.

He came. He was very reserved and cold, begged my pardon for having written from Berlin, and said he hoped I would forgive his breach of etiquette since he was so unnerved by his sorrow. He related something of his mother's life and last days, but not a word of what I was looking for, and I became very strained and cold in my manner. When he rose to go I did not detain him or ask him to come again—a wretched half-hour.

I rushed to the open red book: "It is all over. I have shamefully deceived myself." I argued that he would never come again. Yet the world held no second man. Rudolf must now be my sole consolation—would he love me some day as this man had loved his mother? Oh, it is a foolish habit this diary-writing. what proof it gives one of human fickleness!

A heavenly Easter Monday found "all Vienna" on the usual drive in the Prater. The brilliant, dashing corso contrasted sadly with my depressed spirits. Yet I hugged my sorrow, for was not my heart empty two months ago, where now it had at least something to feed upon? A quick glimpse of Tilling down the drive, a bow and salute in passing, which I returned warmly, again roused my anticipations.

Some days later, when other guests were calling, Tilling was announced. I almost cried out with surprise and delight, but checked myself, and as he sat opposite me he calmly announced that he expected to leave Vienna for a post in Hungary.

"What has our poor Vienna done that you leave it?" I asked with an effort.

"Its gaiety jars on me. I am more in a mood for solitude."

"A jolly rattling war would be the best thing to shake that out of you, my dear Tilling," said my father. "But, alas! there is no such cheerful prospect. This peace threatens to last."

"I protest against the idea that military men should desire war. We are here to defend our country, just as the fire department is here to put out fires, not to wish for them. Both war and fire are afflictions which we do not care to bring upon our fellows. Peace alone is good. It is the absence of the greatest evil. It is the only condition of welfare for humanity. Has the army from motives of pure personal ambition, a right to desire that the greatest misery and suffering should fall upon the rest? To carry on war that the army may be kept busy and its officers promoted, would be like setting fire to our cities in order that the fire brigade may distinguish themselves."

Silently I seconded the speaker.

"Your comparison is a poor one," replied my father. "Fires only destroy, while wars build up the glory and power of a people. How otherwise could a nation extend its territory except through conquest. Personal promotion is not the gallant soldier's only ambition. It is pride in his race and country that leads him to desire war—in one word, Patriotism."

"Oh, this mistaken love of country!" cried Tilling. "The soldier is not the only one who learns to love the soil upon which he has taken root. That is a passion common to all. For my part, there are other ways than violence to express it. We should be proud of our poets rather than of our commanding generals."

"How dare you compare a poet and a soldier?" exclaimed my father.

"I ask the same question. Is not the bloodless crown the better and finer?"

"But," expostulated Aunt Marie, "how can a soldier speak so? What would become of the warlike spirit?"

"At nineteen," answered Tilling, "I was filled with it. After I had seen the realities, the butchery and bestialities of war, my soul was sickened, and every later campaign I entered with resignation and disgust rather than enthusiasm."

"Hear me, Tilling," said my father. "I have been through more campaigns than you, and have witnessed as much of the horror of war, but I never lost my ardor, and went in to the last as an old man with the same zeal as into the first."

WHAT CAUSES COLDS?

This question and "How to Prevent Colds" is asked a thousand times every day. A cold is really a fever, not always caused by the weather but due to a disordered condition of the blood or lack of important food-elements. In changing seasons fat-foods are essential because they distribute heat by enriching the blood and so render the body better able to withstand the varying elements.

This is the underlying reason why the medicinal fats in Scott's Emulsion quickly overcome colds and build strength to prevent more serious sickness. It contains nature's medicinal fats, so skillfully prepared that the blood profits from every drop, and it is totally free from harmful drugs.

How Thin People Can Put on Flesh

A NEW DISCOVERY

Thin men and women—that big, hearty, filling dinner you ate last night. What became of all the fat-producing nourishment it contained? You haven't gained in weight one ounce. That food passed from your body like unburned coal through an open grate. The material was there but your food doesn't work and stick, and the plain truth is you hardly get enough nourishment from your meals to pay for the cost of cooking. This is true of thin folks the world over. Your nutritive organs, your functions of assimilation, are sadly out of gear and need reconstruction.

Cut out the foolish foods and funny sawdust diets. Omit the flesh cream rub-ons. Cut out everything but the meals you are eating now and eat with every one of those a single Sargol tablet. In two weeks note the difference. Five to eight good solid pounds of healthy, "stay there" fat should be the net result. Sargol charges your weak, stagnant blood with millions of fresh new red blood corpuscles—gives the blood the carrying power to deliver every ounce of fat-making material in your food to every part of the body. Sargol, too, mixes with your food and prepares it for the blood in easily assimilated form. Thin people gain all the way from 10 to 25 pounds a month while taking Sargol, and the new flesh stays put. Sargol tablets are a scientific combination of six of the best flesh-producing elements known to chemistry. They come 40 tablets to a package, are pleasant, harmless and inexpensive, and J. S. McKeown and all other druggists in Belleville and vicinity sell them subject to an absolute guarantee of weight increase or money back.

King Greets New Recruits

NORTH OF FRANCE, March 10.—As a result of the new royal decrees summoning all refugee youths to the colors, Belgium's new recruits are growing daily in number, and the King recently conceived the idea of presenting in person, with appropriate ceremony, the young soldiers, who had not yet received their baptism of fire, to their older comrades, who had been fighting since August. The ceremony took place a few days ago on a snow-covered plain.

Veterans of the Sixth and Twenty-sixth Regiments formed a square, with bayonets fixed. After a speech by the Colonel, King Albert delivered this address to the older men, by way of introducing their new comrades:

"Old soldiers of the Sixth and Twenty-sixth Regiments of the line, I desire you to give a kindly welcome to the new recruits who are going to be your comrades in battle. Be helpful and kindly to them amid the difficulties of war. Be genuine brothers in arms, so as to oppose an unbreakable barrier to the invader, for even at the price of death we must fight on, with the aid of our Allies, until our territory has been liberated."

The King then addressed a few words to the officers. He mentioned the achievements of the two regiments and declared that they were worthy in the highest degree of the confidence of the nation.

Both in the matter of time and place the incident was singularly impressive. The spot only a few months ago was reddened with the blood of Belgium's much enduring and valiant army in its supreme effort of resistance against one of the most terrific German atacks. The occasion was the first mustering of the youth who are the hope of Belgium for the still greater effort that is coming.

THE CONGESTION FROM A BAD COLD LOOSENED UP IN ONE HOUR

NERVILINE RUBBED ON AT NIGHT YOU'RE WELL NEXT MORNING

NERVILINE NEVER FAILS

When that cold comes, how is it to be cured?

This method is simplicity itself; rub the chest and throat vigorously with "Nerviline," rub it in good and deep; lots of rubbing can't do any harm. Then put some Nerviline in the water and use it as a gargle; this will ease the cough, cut out the phlegm, assist in breaking up the cold quickly. There is no telling how quickly Nerviline breaks up a hard racking cough, eases a tight chest, relieves a pleuritic pain. Why there isn't any liniment with half the power, the penetrative qualities, the honest merit that has made Nerviline the most popular American household liniment.

A large 50 cent bottle of Nerviline cures ills of the whole family, and makes the doctor's bills small. Get it today. The large size is more economical than the small 25 cent size. Sold by dealers everywhere, or direct from The Catarrhozone Co., Kingston, Canada.

THE SPINAL AND NERVOUS ORIGIN OF DISEASE

Living up the vertebrae, establishing free movement between them, thus getting a better blood supply into the nerve centers in the sinal cord, and freeing the spinal nerves from pressure.

There are twenty-six bones which make up the spine. They are called vertebre, nerves and blood vessels pass in and out, between each of these vertebrae. It can easily be understood that any displacement, however slight, puts pressure on these vessels and nerves, thus causing disturbance to the part of the body these nerves supply. For instance, the eleventh dorsal vertebrae, if rigid, tender, or put slightly out of position, is certain to cause kidney trouble. Any structural displacement of the group from the fifth to the ninth dorsal vertebrae, is sure to cause stomach trouble. Very many diseases can be traced to some spinal injury, caused by falls, blows, twists, heavy lifting, etc.

Osteopathy cures by removing the cause. A careful spinal examination is made, the trouble is located and corrected. Spinal examination free.

CALIFORNIA ORANGE DAY

An annual event in California during this month is held on March 20th, and is known as California Orange Day, the slogan on this particular day is "Eat California Oranges," and it is not only celebrated in the Golden State, but many of the Eastern Railways feature it by placing special orange dishes on the menus of their dining cars, with a reference to California.

On March 20th this year, the Grand Trunk will have special dishes featured of this description on all their dining cars.

A Blunt Excuse.

There is a stroy of an English clergyman who had taken temporary duty for a friend and who had the ill luck to injure his false teeth during the week. The plate was sent to the dentist for repairs, a faithful assurance being given that it should be returned by Sunday's post, but the dentist or the post proved faithless.

With the assistance of the clerk the clergyman managed to stumble through the prayers, but felt it would be useless to attempt to preach. He therefore instructed the clerk to make some excuse for him and dismiss the congregation. But his feelings may be better imagined than described when, in the seclusion of the vestry, he overheard the clerk in impressive tones thus deliver the excuse:

"Parson is very sorry, but it is his misfortune to be obliged to wear a set of artful teeth. They busted last Wednesday, and he ain't got them back from London today, as he was promised. I've helped him all I could through the service, but I can't do more for him. 'Tisn't any use for him going up in the pulpit, for you wouldn't understand a word he said, so he thinks you all may as well go home."

Lucky For Peter.

"I'm glad I'm not a goldfish," observed small Peter, "for in that case I'd have to stay in a bathtub all the time."—Cincinnati Times-Star.

RAILWAY PRESIDENT WILL EXTEND FIRST AID WORK

Mr. E. J. Chamberlin, President of the Grand Trunk System, presided this afternoon at the first annual meeting of the Grand Trunk centre of the St. John Ambulance Association.

Mr. Chamberlin has taken a keen interest in the organization of first aid classes in the railway shops and terminals and he expressed himself as being gratified at the progress made during the first twelve months of active work. Vice Presidents; Howard G. Kelley, R. S. Logan and Frank Scott also attended the meeting.

Plans were made to still further extend the system of first aid instruction, which W. D. Robb, Supt. of Motive Power, declared was proving of distinct value in the big plans of the Company, where many men were employed. The company pays the salary and expenses of a general organizer to conduct classes and there are now twenty-six of these classes at various points on the Railway, with 779 students enrolled. Examinations are held at intervals and certificates, medallions, etc., presented. In the first general competition for all railway ambulance teams in Canada, one from the Grand Trunk won the Wallace Nesbit Challenge Trophy.

The officers elected were: Patron, Mr. W. Molson McPherson; President, Mr. E. J. Chamberlin; Vice President, Mr. H. G. Kellp; Hon. Treasurer, Mr. Frank Scott; Hon. Secretary, Mr. F. A. Bourne; Representatives to Provincial Council, Dr. Alex. J. Hutchison and Dr. Carmichael.

A LINEN SHOWER

Last evening a party of about twenty-five young ladies invaded the home of Miss Florence Fitzgerald, 73 Mill Street. The affair had been kept a secret from the young lady, who was much surprised and delighted at the shower her friends gave her. Miss Fitzgerald was busy for some time receiving congratulations on account of her engagement. The linen shower included centre pieces, towels, handkerchiefs and many other handsome and useful articles. A very enjoyable evening was spent in games and music. Dainty refreshments were served before the party broke up about 12 o'clock.

CROWN LOST AND FOUND

Superstition always runs rampant in times like these. It may be true or it may not, that in the year 1.91 when the Prussians marched into Cracow, the desire of the King of Prussia to be crowned as the King of Poland could not be fulfilled because the Royal crown had disappeared, and for over a century could not be found. Over 100 years after the fall of Cracow a terrific thunderstorm burst upon the city, and an ancient elm, standing in a field just outside the walls, was rent asunder, and in its hollow trunk was found hidden the famous crown of Poland's ancient kings. This was about four years ago.

When it was removed some of the precious stones which had been loosened in the process of time dropped out, and it is asserted that this was the first omen of the great war now raging.

MISSIONS IN WAR TIME

Time of Crisis Arouses Spirit of Generosity—Preacher's Appeal

Dr. J. Campbell White of New York, leader of the Laymen's Missionary Movement in the United States, wants Canada to more than maintain recent standards in missionary giving. Addressing meetings of students and business men in Toronto he urged that the Canadian churches proceed to go on a war footing in the sending of men and money to the foreign fields. In spite of the financial stringency and pressing national obligations he advised all Christians to make united effort to put the missionary enterprise on a permanent footing so that no crisis would again interfere with the great missionary task.

"The mission boards have been going from year to year on a hand-to-mouth sort of financing and the church members have never decided for themselves that the missionary cause is vital and comes first; we see this now for the first time and must act upon it now," urged Dr. White.

"In the last six years the missionary output of Canada has been doubled; the number of workers has increased from under 400 to over 700. Canada has been asked to spare 1,600 men to perform her part in the conversion of the forty million people allotted to her, yet this country signifies her willingness to send out a hundred times that number to fight the battles of her earthly king and empire," he added.

"At the close of the Civil War one of the American mission boards, after maintaining its work, found itself with a bank balance of $500,000, and it has never had as large a balance since; the war had so aroused the generous spirit of the people," declared the speaker.

"Every day the war costs more than Christendom is spending in a year to Christianize humanity!" concluded Dr White who is the statistician among missionary leaders.

KINGS ON THE BATTLEFIELD

From earliest times English kings have loomed large in the military history of their country. William III., at the end of the seventeenth century, was perhaps the greatest military genius that has ever occupied the English throne. The historic and noble defence of the Netherlands which occupied his life is now only threatened with comparison by King Albert's heroism.

The Hanoverians saw this change in kingship firmly established. Yet in 1743 George II. accompanied his army in the field, and was the last reigning King of England to do so. Then, at Dettingen in Bavaria, he personally led an army of English Hanoverians, and Austrians to victory against the French, who were in superior force under the Duc de Noailles.

This was in the war of the Austrian succession—when Europe was plunged into war by Frederick the Great of Prussia breaking his word pledged in a treaty to help Maria Theresa to succeed to the Austrian throne.

Since then no reigning monarch has accompanied his troops in the field, though William IV., the sailor King saw active service as a Prince, and served under Admiral Rodney in 1780 in the naval battle off Cape St. Vincent.

Now, after a lapse of 171 years George V., a reigning King, has been with his army in the field.

A great many men with the ability to gather it in are hopelessly inadequate when it comes to turning it loose.

BATTLEFIELD RUSES

Deception Can be Practiced in Legitimate Manner But Not By Flag

International law does not permit a commander to trick his enemy in a dishonorable manner. For instance, there are rigid rules concerning the use of the Red Cross flag. It must not be placed on wagons carrying anything but medical supplies or wounded soldiers, and vehicles bearing the Red Cross should not carry guns. Combatants cannot shelter in buildings flying the red flag unless they lay down their arms, for to turn a hospital into a fort is as great a crime as concentrating shell fire on a building sheltering wounuded.

Red Cross trains are meant to be solely used for the conveyance of wounded, and they must not be utilized as a means of escape for harassed troops or for transporting artillery.

The sole purpose of the white flag is to notify the enemy that their opponents wish to parley, and a commander has a perfect right to refuse a request if he deems it necessary. Even if he consents he can request that the bearer of the flag of truce be blindfolded so that he may not secure information concerning the camp which he enters. In no circumstances must the white flag be shown to trick an opposing side into relaxing their attack, so that a retreat may be prepared or reinforcements brought up for a fresh attack. In this connection a common ruse is for a harassed commander to request his enemy for an armistice, apparently for the purpose of burying his dead. He then takes advantage of the truce by retreating with his troops under the cover of darkness.

Although it is a common practice, it is not considered to be playing the game for soldiers to disguise themselves in the enemy's uniform for the purpose of facilitating an approach. It is quite legitimate, however, for an enemy to wear captured uniforms, if their own are too mutilated or weather-worn to protect them. In such a case all distinguishing badges must be removed, and some conspicuous sign must be worn on the annexed garment to denote the nationality of the wearer.

POTATOES AND THE WAR

Humble Tuber a Big Feature in Struggle, But Not a Fighting Ration

The two greatest potato-growing countries in the world are at war, Germany and Russia. Following these two countries in order of production are Austria-Hungary, France, the United States, Great Britain and Ireland, and Belgium.

This common, homely, plebelan product of the soil has contributed to the sustenance of the people, played a most important part in the development of great industries, and to-day forms a most appreciated and necessary part of the soldiers' ration at the front. Without potatoes and sugar beets Germany to-day would probably not be the ambitious, warring nation that she is for on these, she has built up her wonderful agricultural industry which formed the basis on which she constructed her industrial and commercial prosperity. And, strange to say, she owes a debt to France for both of these field crops. Beet sugar was a product of French investigation and necessity in the Napoleonic era, and potatoes as a European food came into use through Louis XVI.

Germany has utilized potatoes for enriching her light soils and sugar beets for rendering productive her heavy soils. She annually grows 8,000,000 acres of potatoes, producing over 1,600,000,000 bushels. Russia comes next in production. Thus we see that Germany has a potato crop nearly approaching in area our prairie wheat in Western Canada.

What does she do with it? Twelve per cent. for seed, 40 per cent. for feeding live stock, 28 per cent. for human food, 6 per cent. for alcohol, 4 per cent. for starch, and 10 per cent. for loss and waste.

It is a crop which the old men, the women and children can grow and therefore it may play a very important part in feeding the people during the war, for the Germans have developed to a large extent the processes of evaporating the tubers, whereby the food can be concentrated and stored. Potato meal is being used for mixing with wheat and rye flour. It is useful for sustaining a people on short rations but it will not be sufficient to maintain the army fighting in the trenches. As a source of alcohol it may be useful as fuel for motors when petrol gives out. Germany's immense potato crop, with a big surplus over home requirements, must not be overlooked in studying the situation; but it should be remembered that a sustaining ration for the people at home is one thing and a fighting ration for the soldier in the field or at the front is quite another. —C. C. James in Acta Victoriana.

A Musical Feat.

The old farmer and his wife lived near the village church. One warm Sunday evening, while they sat dozing on the porch, a cricket set up a loud chirping.

"I just love that chirpin' noise," said the old man, drowsily, and before the cricket had stopped he was fast asleep.

Soon after the church choir broke into a beautiful chant.

"Yes," remarked the old farmer, sleepily. "They do it with their hind legs."

BANKS ARE HELPING WESTERN FARMERS

They Promise to do so in Ninety Per Cent of Cases

REGINA, March 12.—In dealing with the question of feed and seed grain that had come up at the Grain Growers' Convention recently held at Regina, Mr. Thos. Sales, a member of the executive, made an interesting report. He outlined the steps that had already been taken to relieve the existing situation, mentioning the recent meeting held in Winnipeg at which he was present. This was, he said, a meeting of representatives of mortgage and loan companies, manufacturers, bankers, elevator and grain men, and of the three farmers' organizations of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta. As a result of this meeting the banks had promised to assist in 90 per cent. of the cases, the other 10 per cent. that they would not assist being misfits and ne'er-do-wells. The mortgage companies promised to consider increasing the time of the mortgage and in doing all in their power to assist their clients in this situation.

BERLIN GIVES CREDIT FOR GERMAN VICTORIES

Claims Repulse of British South of Ypres—Admits Failure to Recapture Neuve—Took Two Hundred French Prisoners and the Fog and Snow Hampered Further Operations

(Canadian Press Despatch)

BERLIN, March 13.—(via wireless to Sayville, L.I.)—The German official report of today reads: To the south of Ypres isolated British attacks were easily repulsed. Our movement for the recapture of Neuve Chapelle began successfully, but thereafter encountered a superior British force and for this reason was not continued.

The British in this locality have been showing great aerial activity.

In the Champagne district there has been renewed fighting. All French efforts have been repulsed, the enemy losing heavily. Two hundred Frenchmen were taken prisoners. Fog and snow have hampered operations in the Vosges.

The Russians have retreated from the Augustowo district and country to the northeast until now they are beyond the River Bohr and under the guns of Grodno. At a point northeast of Przasnysz, near the Orzye River, a Russian attack has been repulsed.

TWO BOYS BELIEVED LOST ON THE LAKE

Lifeboats Search for Ralph Wilson and Horace Smith of Port Hope

PORT HOPE March 12.—Ralph Wilson, 18 years of age, son of S. W. Wilson, proprietor of The Guide and Horace Smith, 17 years of age, son of Councillor G. A. Smith, are believed to have perished on Lake Ontario last evening. The two boys started out canoeing about four o'clock, at which time there was a stiff gale blowing from the land, and it is thought that they have been driven out on the lake. Not having returned at a late hour last evening, a lifeboat crew, in command of Capt. P. J. McMahon, and a crew from Cobourg set out in search of the young men, but came back without finding any trace of them.

STEAMER FOLLOWED BY A SUBMARINE

(Canadian Press Special)

NEW YORK, March 13.—Passengers on the steamer Arabic, which arrived from Liverpool today with 537 passengers, and the largest consignment of mail ever consigned to America, report that the ship was accompanied from Liverpool far out to sea by a guard of destroyers on the lookout for submarines, and that more than fifty steamers are tied up at Liverpool by the dockers' strike.

Greatest Battle Raging in Poland

Russians Falling Back Before Renewed Onslaught—Germans Claim Success

LONDON, March 13.—(Special)—Two German armies are again on the move in Poland seeking to pierce the Russian lines. One of these is advancing along the road to Przasnysz with the bank of the Narew as its objective. This is the main German attack, and one of the biggest battles since the commencement of the war is now in full blast.

Farther south, on the Pilica, a German feint is in progress with the object of weakening the Russian defence in the north. But, while Petrograd is resigning itself to another withdrawal from before Przasnysz, there is no doubt as to the ultimate outcome of this latest German attempt to gain a firm footing on Russian soil. The Austrians have sustained another defeat in the Carpathians.

TWELVE SUBMARINES REPORTED MISSING

LONDON, March 12.—A dispatch to The Daily Express from The Hague says:

"A secret report has been sent from Cuxhaven to the Admiralty at Berlin that twelve submarines have failed to report at their base, eight of them being among Germany's newest boats.

"The Naval Council will meet to-day or to-morrow under the Preidency of Emperor William to discuss whether or not it would be better to abandon the submarine war."

MORE FORTS SILENCED BY ALLIED WARSHIPS

Heavy Damage to Chanak Kale—One Fort on Asiatic Side Holds Out—Allied Consuls Demand War Zone at Smyrna—Russian Black Sea Fleet Start Bombardment of Bosphorus Ports

ATHENS, March 13.—Special—According to a report from Tenedos, Dardanus has been completely destroyed in the siege of the Dardanelles, and Fort Hamidieh, in the Narrows, has been badly damaged. The allied fleet on Wednesday directed a well-sustained fire against Chanak Kale from a distance of more than 16,000 yards, and damaged the town to such an extent that the inhabitants took refuge in several villages on the Asiatic litteral. Fort Chimikli alone continues to hold out. Meanwhile dragging for mines continues, and but two mine fields remain intact.

The Vali of Smyrna in an official communique states that if the town is attacked by the enemy's warships it will be converted into a war area. As a measure of precaution the inhabitants who are non-combatants are asked to leave town and go into the interior, where all necessary steps to insure their safety will be taken. The allied Consuls at Smyrna have demanded the establishment of a neutral zone there, but as yet the Vali has not replied.

BERLIN, March 12.—Constantinople reports that expert engineers are working night and day strengthening the Dardanelles. The mine chains which protect the channel and the Narrows have been considerably strengthened, and passage of warships of great draught is impossible.

LONDON, March 12.—It is learned through diplomatic sources in Petrograd that the Russian Black Sea fleet is expected to start a bombardment of the Bosphorus ports to-day in active co-operation with the allied fleet which is attempting to force its way to Constantinople through the Dardanelles from the south.

WILL HAMMER WAY THROUGH DARDANELLES BY EASTER

(Canadian Press Special)

PARIS, March 13.—The Journal has an Athens despatch saying that Admiral Carden has expressed the opinion that the Allies will hammer their way through the Dardanelles before Easter. A despatch to The Matin says, the bombardment was resumed Friday morning and seventy small mine sweepers are reported to be continuing their efforts to clear the field. The Allies' fleets, says the Matin's despatch, still have eight or ten forts and a number of coast batteries to reduce, but it is the general opinion that they will enter the sea of Marmora within a fortnight, if the land forces co-operating with them can also continue their advance.

Warships Watching For Prinz Eitel

British Will Pounce on Her If She Tries to Escape After Being Repaired

WASHINGTON, March 12.—British warships have been ordered to the entrance to the Capes of Chesapeake and are en route to that station to prevent the escape of the Prinz Eitel Friedrich should that vessel choose to make a dash for liberty, instead of adopting the alternative of being interned until the end of the war.

Sir Cecil Spring-Rice, the British Ambassador, called at the Navy Department this afternoon and is understood to have expressed the hope that if the Prince Eitel Freidrich should decide to put to sea, some arrangement would be effected in the interest of humanity by which the so-called prisoners brought to Newport News on that vessel would be landed before the departure of the German cruiser.

Representatives of other governments whose subjects were on board the Prinz Eitel also called at the State Department to indicate their interest in the safety of their nationals.

Late last night, however, all the captured crews were allowed to land without any intervention on the part of the Federal authorities.

Opening of Trent Canal

Looked for at Early Date so far as Vessels of Light Draught are Concerned

Mr. J. H. Burnham, M.P., of Peterborough is responsible for the statement that the Trent Canal from Peterborough to Trenton will be open for vessels of light draught next spring, and in all probability for full draught also. The only delay might be due to the submarine dredging respecting the Rogers contract, which the Government is hastening. The completion of the contract is not necessary to develop the canal for light draught purposes this summer.

At the present time the canal is open from Lake Simcoe to Healey Falls, so that the contract referred to takes' in that portion from the Falls to Trenton, where the canal opens out into the Bay of Quinte. The canal is 200 miles long from Georgian Bay to Trenton, only about twenty miles of this distance is actual canal.

Land Owner a Friend of Chief

HAMILTON Ont., March 12.—Lieut.-Colonel Burleigh, High Constable doyle and a squad of soldiers from St Catharines, visited the farm of Otto Herold in Clinton township yesterday afternoon, and made a search for munitions of war. They found nothing. This is the second time within two weeks that the big German landowner's premises have been visited. He thinks he is being treated badly, as he claims to be a peaceable citizen. While visiting Hamilton recently Mr. Herold was taken to the police station and questioned. Chief of Police Smith vouched for him as an old friend, and said he was all right.

LIMBS AND HEAD OF MAN IN SEWER

NEW YORK, March 12.—Street cleaning men working in the Borough Park, Brooklyn, fished up from the catch-basin of a sewer yesterday a bundle of human arms and legs, severed from the body of a man. Crossing the street and going to the next catch-basin they found a man's head, grey haired and showing long exposure, with a gapping hold in the back. A wedding ring, containing initials which the police deciphered as "H.V." was on a finger of the left hand. There was no other clue as to the unfortunate identity.

SIX HUNDRED MEN FROM G.T.R. ENLIST

During the present month fifty more employees of the Grand Trunk Company have enlisted for service at the front, bringing the total to 600 to whom the company will pay full wages for a period of six months. The president also plans to continue carrying the men on the pay roll at half rate for a length of time yet to be determined.

About 200 men on the Grand Trunk Pacific have also volunteered for the front.

DRIVE ON LILLE BRINGS SUCCESS TO BRITISH

Canadians Took Part at Neuve Chapelle, Says the London Chronicle—400 More Germans Taken Prisoners—Enemy Loses More Men and Trenches in Champagne Region

LONDON, March 13.—(Special.)—In his story on the British success at Neuve Chapelle, The Chronicle's northern France correspondent says:—

"Heroic feats of arms are recorded on the part of all the regiments engaged, among which are to be counted the Canadians and Indians. News of this British success at Neuve Chapelle has made a profound impression throughout northern France."

LONDON, March 13.—Impetuous lunges born of new strength received from the lately arrived Kitchener second army today carried the British still farther forward in Flanders, and particularly toward Lille, a town of great strategic importance.

Following the capture of Neuve Chapelle with the aid of the new British volunteer army, and the establishment of the British line fully 1,200 yards beyond the Germans' advanced positions in this region, the British today pressed their advantage and captured a whole section of the German line entrenched between the hamlet of Pietre and the mill outside the village.

The drive was made sharply on the heels of the Germans who had been turned back in a brilliant defensive against two terrific counter-attacks. Four hundred prisoners were taken including five officers.

ALLIED FORCES REACH ROAD KNOWN AS "HIGHWAY TO HELL"

(Canadian Press Special)

PARIS, March 13.—This afternoon's official statement says: In a bend of the Yser the Belgian army has consolidated and increased the results obtained on Thursday.

British troops continue to progress. They crossed the brook of Layes which runs parallel from Neuve Chapelle to Fleurbaix. At the end of the day they reached a road known as the "Highway to Hell," which runs from the northwest to the southeast toward Aubres and to the suburbs of that place. To the southwest of Eiters they carried several groups of houses which were being strongly prepared for defensive purposes. The total number of prisoners captured during the day was 1,000. The Germans lost many machine guns. To the left and to the right of the British army French troops supported them with many heavy artillery and machine guns and infantry fire.

In the Champagne district our progress continues. At the end of the day on the northern top of a ridge to the northeast of Mesnil we captured 150 prisoners, including six officers.

In the Vosges and Reich Ackeropf the enemy, after a violent bombardment, attempted an assault, which was brought to a halt by our fire.

Submarine Traps

(Canadian Press Special)

LONDON, March 13.—The Admiralty has set miles of submarine traps at harbor entrances and other points around the British Isles and according to a report, three German submarines were caught in them during the first ten days of the blockade. The traps are on an immense scale imitations of gill-nets, with apertures ten feet square, framed in wrought iron. They are suspended thirty feet under the water from enormous buoys. The submarines, steering blindly by chart and compass, enter the apertures and are in the position of a fish caught in a net.

ALLIES CAPTURE 612 PRISONERS

(Canadian Press Special)

LONDON, March 13.—Sir John French has sent the following despatch to the War Office:—"A little further progress in the war was made today by the Seventh Division in the direction of Aubres. The fighting has been very severe, as the enemy was strongly reinforced this morning opposite my right by at least two divisions. We captured 612 prisoners, however, and I hear there are more to come in. Our aviators have destroyed the railroad stations at Don and Douai."

Turkish Army Assumes Offensive

Attempted to Drive Back Russian Force But Met With Repulse

(Canadian Press Special)

TIFLIS, March 13.—An attempt on the part of the Turkish army operating in Turkish Armenia to drive back the Russian force which has advanced westward along the shore of the Black Sea from Batum has met with defeat. The Turks assumed the offensive in the River Tchoruk district on March 9th but were thrown back. The Russians captured an entire battery of Turkish guns. A reverse also has been sustained by Turkish forces in northwestern Persia. They were compelled to retreat a considerable distance in the districts of Khoi and Dilman. At Dilman, which is sixty miles north of Urumiah, the Russians captured several heavy guns and a quantity of ammunition. The Turks lost heavily in killed and wounded and the Russians took a large number of prisoners.

CREW LANDED AT TARLON

(Canadian Press Special)

VALPARAISO, March 13.—The crew of the British bark, Conway Castle, which was sunk by the German cruiser Dresden off the port of Corral, while on her way from Australia to Liverpool with a cargo of barley, was landed here yesterday by the Peruvian ship Tarlon. This is the first exploit of the Dresden since the battle off Falkland Islands.

BRITISH CRUISER TORPEDOED 27 OF 200 CREW SAVED

LONDON, March 13.—Special—The Admiralty issued an official statement last night reporting the loses of the auxiliary cruiser Bayano while on patrol duty. Evidence points to her having been torpedoed by a submarine. But 27 of the Bayano's crew of probably more than 200 are known to survive. Fourteen officers, including the commander, are presumed to be dead.

The Belfast correspondent of The Daily Telegraph says the Bayano was torpedoed Thursday morning at 9 o'clock off Corsewall Point, Wigtownshire, Scotland, and that nearly 200 lives were lost, as the cruiser sank almost immediately. The vessel had a crew of about 216 men on board.

Son of Ex-Sultan Strangled to Death

News of Political Assassination in Constantinople Reaches Paris

PARIS, March 12.—The Balkan agency has received the following despatch from Sofia, Bulgaria:

"Advices received here from Constantinople says that Mehemmed Burnhan-Eddin Effendi, favorite son of the former Sultan Abdul Hamil, has been found strangled in his bedroom. Despite the reserve of the Turkish police it has been confirmed that the Prince was killed by political enemies."

Prince Burnhan-Eddin was twenty-nine years of age and the fourth son of Abdul Hamil. He held the rank of Lieutenant in the Turkish navy. During his father's reign he was fourteenth in line for succession to the throne, but it is said that Abdul Hamid designed to elevate him over his thirteen seniors and make him the next Sultan.

In 1909, when Abdul Hamid was dethroned, Prince Burnhan-Eddin was kept under surveillance in the palace for a time, charged with being concerned in a conspiracy for the restoration of absolutism.

With the abdication of Prince William of Wied as ruler of Albania last year, it was reported that Turkey would urge Burnhan-Eddin's appointment to the throne.

COLORED WOMAN "TOOK OFF" WITCHES

HALIFAX, March 12—An old colored woman, Fanny Dismal, at Guysboro, Eastern Nova Scotia, was committed for trial by a magistrate on a chrage of practising witchcraft. The evidence taken at the preliminary hearing showed that the belief in witches and witchcraft is still strong in Guysboro, where the trial took place. If anyone became stricken with disease that did not immediately respond to medical treatment, the friends of the patient began to think "the witches are at work", and Fanny Dismal was called in to "take witches off."

The distinction of putting the "witches on", and "taking them off", was repeatedly impressed upon the magistrate. Her witness claims that Fanny only took the witches off, and that therefore her incantations were praiseworthy, but the magistrate did not see any difference.

CLERK SKIPS OUT WITH A THOUSAND

LONDON, Ont., March 12.—The police authorities of the county of Middlesex have sent posters broadcast throughout Canada and the United States for the identification of Fred Billings, who is wanted on a charge of theft.

Some days ago Billings, who was a clerk in the employ of Roland and Company, Strathroy, was sent to the Royal Bank to deposit a cheque for $1,000.

Instead of doing this, he cashed it and took the train for London where he wrote his employers that he was going to Toronto to visit a sick sister. It is believed, however, that he took a train for the western states.

MRS. WISENEIGHBOUR SAYS:—

"I should have told you the other day when I was speaking of "EDDY'S" Washboards, that it is just as necessary to have an indurated Fibreware Tub to hold your clothes if you want to make a success of washday."

MRS. NEWLYWED says: "I've heard of Eddy's Indurated Fibreware. What's the difference between Fibreware and Woodenware?"

"Fibreware is made from compressed fibre, baked at extreme heat, all in one solid piece, it cannot warp or fall apart, no chance of splinters—wears much longer—looks much better—and is lighter to carry. The latter point you should always take into consideration," concludes Mrs. Wiseneighbour.

THE AUTO SALESMAN

By Walt Mason.

"I think", said Jones, "I'll buy a car." He lightly spoke, nor dreamed of ill; he lighted then his punk cigar, and teetered up the village hill. But ere he'd gone a half a block, three smiling salesmen ran him down; each handed out his line of talk, each sold the finest car in town. One pulled him east, one pulled him west, to show him autos rich and gay; one grabbed him firmly by the vest, and dragged him up an alley way. Then five more agents came in haste; they'd heard he wished to buy a car; he broke away, the salesmen chased him o'er the village, near and far. He reached his home and locked the door; outside, the salesmen raised their din; six climbed the roof and three or four slid down the coal-hole to the bin. All day they talked, by fits and starts, all night they sat upon his bed, and spieled away of chug-chug carts until he wished that he was dead. All beaten then, by jolt and jar, he feebly waved a flag of truce, and bought from each a motor car, and begged them all to seek the deuce.

Indiana is legislating for longer bed sheets in hotels, thus cleverly inviting tourists to stop off there.

Infantry of British Rout Germans

Latter's Charge in the Neuve Chapelle Fight Irresistible—Nearly 300 Guns Used

LONDON, March 13.—(Special.)—A graphic description of the British success at Neuve Chapelle is given by a wounded soldier now in the hospital.

"The Germans were strongly entrenched about 2,000 yards in front of Neuve Chapelle, with their foremost trenches and the first line of the British trenches nowhere more than 100 yards apart," he says. "On account of the nature of the ground the British had been unable to push forward for more than four months. Then, early Wednesday morning the British troops heard they were to move at last.

"The attack was started by a heavy artillery fire, in the course of which every gun was brought into action. There must have been 200 to 300 guns roaring. This firing was to prepare the way for a general advance.

"An order from our General that the German position must be taken at any cost was passed along from man to man about 9 o'clock. Shortly thereafter we got out of our trenches and charged the German trenches.

"They were ready for us. Their fire was murderous. I was hit twice before I had gone as many yards. I couldn't go on, but I could see we had the best of it. The Germans simply couldn't stand against our charge. We were too many for them, and their shooting grew wild. Our artillery was doing a lot of damage, too."

Asks Reparation for Mexican Insult

WASHINGTON, March 13.—Special—President Wilson and his Cabinet, in session yesterday, were informed of the assassination Thursday by Zapatistas of John McManus, an American citizen of Chicago, that the American flag was ignored and insulted, and that the United States Consular seal on the residence of McManus was violated when he was riddled by assassin bullets. Confidential information indicates that had all the members of the McManus family been in the house they would have shared the fate of the head of the house.

The news of the tragedy was flashed to this Government to-day in record time by Mr. Cardozo, the Brazilian Minister, who represents the United States at the Mexican national capital.

MUSIC AND DRAMA

IT'S A LONG WAY TO TIPPERARY

In his production of William Anthony McGuires' story entitled "It's a Long Way to Tipperary," Gus Hill has given the play going public a war drama without a line or action contrary to our National Laws of Neutrality. It is as thrilling as "Shenandoah" and as Irish as "Arrah-Na-Pogue." Mother's love is its foundation and devotion to flag and Country its dominating power. Allen Doone's childhood sweetheart Kathleen has become a woman to all but him. It requires a tragedy to awaken in him a complete realization that her love is and always has been next to mothers. The songs that are dear to all true Irish hearts are sung by Doope and his regimental companions. The cruel and unjust accusation against Allen is brought home to it's guilty instigator and Private Doone is made a Sergeant and ordered to his regiment, while little Kathleen becomes a Red Cross Nurse. It is a clean play all the way through, such a one as Grandma and the "Kiddies" can enjoy without harm. It is coming to Griffins, Monday, March 22nd, for one performance only.

Included in this list are 25 citizens, who have promised regular payments each month as long as the war lasts; and one citizen who promised regular monthly contributions for a stated number of months.

KINGSTON

There are 564 aliens interned at Petawawa, in charge of a camp commandant, five officers, one medical officer and a guard of 157 men.

Daniel Lionel Teed, a graduate of the R.M.C., has been recommended for a commission in the 5th Field Batery of Kingston.

Twenty-three of the recruits for the 26th Battery arrived yesterday from Peterboro and six from Deseronto.

Lieut. Light says he is open to enlist six more bandsmen for the fine band of the R.C.H.A. This is a good opening for musicians.

Lieut. Fred Welch has been attached for duty to No. 3 Company, A. S. C. Lieut. Fred is a brother of Captain J. Welch.

Sergt. Jenkins of the 14th guard, has been transferred to the C. O. C. Corporal Francis has been made sergeant, and Private Coulson has been promoted to the rank of corporal.

Col. Denison made an informal inspection of the 21st Battalion yesterday. He is accompanied by Lt.-Col. Stewart. Yesterday the ranges at Barriefield were visited and the 21st watched in their tactical exercises.

Captain T. F. Elmitt, of Ottawa, and Captain E. W. Jones of Brockville, have been promoted to the rank of Major in the 21st Battalion. Both are good officers and their promotion will be popular. This gives the 21st battalion four majors.

The 26th Battery now recruited in different centres will be in Kingston about the first of the week for mobilization. Transportation has been furnished, and when the men arrive they will be placed in Regiopolis College. Double-deck iron cots will be used for sleeping purposes, and arrangements will be made for the battery to mess in the building.

The armorers of the 21st Battalion who have gone to Quebec to take a special course in the care and repair of arms, before going overseas, will spend their time at the Ross rifle factory, and will be given every opportunity by the makers of the guns the battalion will use on active service, to acquire all information obtainable. The Ross rifle factory is located east of the Plains of Abraham, and near the spot where Wolfe fell in the attack on Quebec.

TEETHING TIME TROUBLES

Baby's teething time is a period of anxiety for mothers unless baby's stomach is kept sweet and his bowels regular. No other medicine has been found so valuable during teething time as has Baby's Own Tablets. They make teething painless and by their use baby gets his teeth so easily that the mother scarcely knows they are coming. Concerning the Tablets, Mrs. F. Goldsmith, Nelson, B.C., writes: "Baby's Own Tablets are a mother's greatest help during the teething period." The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Turkish Fleet is Paralyzed

PETROGRAD, March 13.—(Special.) In well-informed quarters here it is stated that there are good reasons for believing that the whole of the Turco-German fleet now concentrated in the Sea of Marmora and the Bosphorus, has been entirely paralyzed as a consequence of the operations of the Russian squadrons in the Black Sea as the Russians destroyed the coal supplies for the enemy's warships. The naval situation in the Black Sea has considerably facilitated the operations of the allied fleets against the Dardonelles.

Freight Trains in Head-on Smash

ST. JOHN, N.B., March 12.—In a head on collision two Canadian Pacific Railway freight trains were wrecked at an early hour this morning at Bodfish, Maine, twenty miles from Brownville Junction. Members of the train crews had marvellous escapes from death or from serious injury, the only casualty being H. Maxwell, one of the firemen, who was slightly injured.

An official investigation has been ordered. In the meantime it is understood that the collision was due to a mistake in orders. The eastbound, under Conductor Macnell, and the westbound in charge of Conductor Manuel, rushed headlong over the rails drawing nearer and neared until as a curve was rounded the engineers each sighted the headlight of the opposing locomotive, and brakes were put on, but it was too late to avert the crash.

The track was torn up for some distance and considerable damage was done to the locomotives as well as to several of the respective strings of cars.

Wrecking trains were immediately hastened to the scene and at once began the work of clearing the rails and providing for resuming of traffic. The east-bound Montreal train is running about four and a half or five hours late because of the accident, being brought around by way of the Bangor and Arrostock line.

Eitel Prize Almost Sent Her to Doom

Plucky Skipper of Tiny Tramp Did His Best to Ram Her Stern Foremost

NEWPORT NEWS, Va., March 12.—The Odyssey of the Prinz Eitel's wild career over two oceans, pursued by three of the largest navies of the world, will not be completed until the story is told how in the last few weeks of her voyage she was almost sunk by the last of her many prizes. Not once was a shell hurled at her by the pursuers sweeping the seas for her. But the little tramp steamer Willerby, of only 2,500 tons, without a gun on board, came near sending the adventurous German to the bottom, and by the tactics of ramming her, stern foremost. For the first six months of her cruise, lurking though she was on the highways of commerce and waiting for her prey, in constant danger of discovery and capture, the danger was never visible. To the officers and crew there was always the straining sense of peril just out of sight, but never once did a hostile funnel break the horizon; and only twice was the danger audible.

But the little Willerby brought that danger home to the daring cruiser in the simplest possible way. On February 20, just three weeks ago, the Willerby was steaming in light ballast, looking for a cargo, when the Prinz Eitel was seen making for her. Within good eyeshot the cruiser sent out the signal for the Willerby to stop, and from this point the Willerby's commander, Captain Wodgewood, a slim, dark Englishman, takes up the story.

"The Eitel signalled us to stop," said Captain Wedgewood, "but I paid no attention to him. At first I thought she was just a merchantman like us, but even when I saw her guns I kept on my course, trying to get by and pass on her port beam. But when we got to a point where it was evident she could ram us amidships, we did not stop. By that time the two ships were so close together that the Eitel had to pass right across our stern.

KNEW SHE WAS A GERMAN.

"Then I saw my chance. I did not know all those women and children and citizen men were on board. I only knew she was a German and was trying to capture us. My ship was gone, I knew, and I thought I might just as well send a German along with me, so I ordered our engines reversed at full speed, backing us straight toward the Eitel, slowly slipping past her.

"'Give her hell!' I shouted to my engineer. 'Give her hell! as hard as we can go to it.'

"The engineer did his best. The Willerby began to back in good form and the commander of the Eitel saw the danger. The imprisoned passengers on the Eitel saw it, too, and a panic seized them. Poor chance they would have had it trouble came to the Eitel. They were locked up below at the approach of every strange ship and there was no escape for them. Their cries of fear as the panic took them first told me that I was not dealing with an ordinary ship of the navy.

"The Eitel's commander was talking to us with all the English he could command. His guns had been uncovered and unslung, as he approached us in the first place and they swung toward us as we backed toward the Eitel. But at that close range they could hardly have stopped us before we did our work. The commander of the Eitel probably knew that, tco, for while he threatened to fire many times he did not do so.

"'Stop or we will fire!' he shouted from his bridge, but my engineer merely nursed his engine. The imprisoned passengers on the Eitel were making a loud noise by this time and it seemed that the end was near, but somehow we could not get up headway and the Eitel at last slipped past our stern, missing us by about 15 feet. After that there was nothing we could do and we surrendered.

"When I came over the side of the Eitel, her commander called out to me furiously: 'Do you want to kill those people?' But I told him I did not know the people were there until it was all over."

One of the "people" was listening to the story, reminding Captain Wedgewood of details and nodding his head in corroboration of vivid touches. He was Captain Dobbing, of the British ship Mary Ada Short, which was captured and sunk two days before the capture of the Willerby. The captain is a merry-faced little man, and while he told of some of his experiences with evident anger at what he considered the harsh treatment he had received, his face constantly broke into smiles as amusing incidents struck his memory.

"I was locked up with the rest of us down below when we sighted the Willerby," he said. "But I was watching every movement through a porthole. And when the Willerby began backing toward us I thought the jig was up, but we had passed the stage of caring then, and I hoped that the Willerby would do what I thought she was trying to do. At any rate I measured the porthole with my shoulders and I said to myself, 'If she hits us, I can get through that porthole.' But I did not have to, and here I am.'"

THE OUT-OF-WORKS

As Spring approaches, the question of work for the unemployed becomes more and more acute. Those who remember the terrible happenings in Lancashire during the American Civil War, when close upon 200,000 men were known to be out of work in that county alone, will tremble with apprehension. At that time the philanthropical spirit of Britain arose nobly to the rescue, no less a sum than $9,500,000 being publicly subscribed. This fund was so well administered that although the distress lasted for a period of nearly five years, $650,000 remained in the hands of the trustees, and was expended in the erection of a convalescent home in Lancashire. Things are different in Canada to what they were in England at that time. The country was not at war, and although prices were high and the suffering was widespread, people had not been called upon for aid to the almost innumerable works of charity that they are now. While some of the money subscribed was used for direct relief, the bulk of it was invested in public works that commanded the greatest amount of individual labor.

It is a fair estimate to presume that at this moment in Canada there are 100,000 unemployed. Mayor of Montreal has placed the number of out-of-works in that city at 45,000. In Toronto there are known to be half as many. In the big western cities, especially Winnipeg and Vancouver, there are probably another 20,000 or 25,000. So that we are not long in arriving at the total suggested. It is not a question of statistics, however, so much as the need for instant, resolute, and sustained action. Work must be found. It is not a matter of "I cannot dig, and to beg I am ashamed." Practically all are willing to work. The trouble is that they mainly belong to the constructive trades. There are, of course, many clerks, operatives in factories, and salesmen, and women among them, but the hardest to be suited are those who have been employed on buildings and railway works, which are now almost at a standstill.

In the face of this state of affairs the land is crying for labor. One thing that can be done is to separate the wheat from the chaff and endeavor first of all to employ the wheat, giving preference as far as reasonable to the men who have others to support. For this purpose, and in fact for treatment of the whole situation, committees should be formed in every city and town, and registration embodying suitability strictly kept. Then such public works as are in any way possible should be proceeded with. When we arrive at the matter of farm labor we come to the very crux of the situation. The large majority of the unemployed have never seen a farm except as they have been travelling past. To another section the work is uncongenial. Unhappily, it is frequently shown that even under stress, men and women will not do work for which they feel completely unfitted. But these cannot be left to starve. They must be employed, but how is a matter for the committees to decide. As to the demand of the land, farmers must be appealed to to be as patient as they can, and to be as lenient and gracious as possible to such laborers as they may obtain. As has been said over and over again, the times are exceptional, and not only call upon us, but demand of all of us, that we shall practice self-denial and thus bear in some measure a share of the common burden.

FORFEITING THEIR PROMISES

It remains for E. W. Nesbitt, Liberal member for North Oxford, to give the country the latest lecture, or rather confession, on the subject of political ethics as practised by his party.

Declarations of this sort come seldom, but they throw a great light upon Liberal methods and upon Liberal motives. The Liberal administration was always notorious for broken pledges, for corrupt elections and for rewarding those who were the instruments in these elections. Defending one of these rewards, Sir Richard Cartwright once said to the House, "I am not addressing a girls' school in this matter," his point being that the practice was sufficiently general for the House to know all about it. In the same spirit Hon. J. I. Tarte boldly declared that "elections are not won with prayers."

Now comes the Nesbitt theory, which is the true Liberal theory, on promise keeping. What will the honest Scotch constituents of North Oxford think of this proposition? He was discussing the Liberal failure to build the Hudson Bay Railway to which the Laurier Government committed the country, and which has cost the country nine millions in the last three years. Laurier promised this railway on the eve of each election, and went out of office after letting the contract for a bridge. And Nesbitt says: "I know that my hon. friends on this side of the House promised to build that railway, but I have come to the conclusion, or almost come to the conclusion, that political parties are justified in certain instances in not keeping promises which they should never have made. My hon. friends on this side of the House have this virtue, that while they promised to start the Hudson Bay Railway, they never did."

The Liberal party always had and practised this "virtue" of making promises to break them. Mr. Nesbitt says they "sent out surveyors and got reports on the route which however were not encouraging enough to induce them to start building:" They never told the people of the West about these discouraging reports. On the contrary they promised to go ahead. Mr. Nesbitt proves that they never intended to keep this promise.

CURRENT COMMENT

Toronto News: "In one breath, Sir Wilfrid Laurier complains of war time unemployment, and in the next, urges that the Government should have aggravated the situation by stopping expenditures on necessary public undertakings."

Hon. I. B. Lucas is after the telephone blasphemers. When a bill he has introduced in the Provincial Legislature has passed, it will cost $25 with the alternative of thirty days in jail, to say ——— or anything like it over the telephone.

Wisconsin has a eugenic law, with the result that there were 1,000 less marriages in that State last year than the year previous. An examination fee of $25 is one of the stumbling-blocks in the effort to improve on the old fashioned way.

Hamilton Spectator: "Before British Columbia is half through with its election, both sides will heartily wish that 3,000 miles of deep, blue sea again rolled between them and "fighting Joe" Martin, even though it might mean strained relations with his erstwhile constituents of St. Pancras."

Twenty million German pigs are said to be doomed to death, to save the potato supply. But there need be no fear of a shortage in the sausage crop so long as there is plenty of "old hoss" to draw upon. It is a matter of "hog eat hog."

Bancroft Times: "A resident of Faraday, who has been out of employment for some time, and whose health is not any too good, approached a local merchant one day recently and asked him for $1.00 worth of groceries to keep his family from starving. The merchant put up the goods as they were ordered, and this is the order: 1 pail of lard, 45c.; 4 plugs of chewing tobacco, 50c.; 1 box of matches, 5c. You can imagine how the family would fatten up on that order!"

Lack Qualifications For the Ocean

Many Captains Will be Out of Positions When Lake Steamers Are Transferred

The taking of twenty-six of the lake steamers from the lakes and placing them on ocean routes this summer will cause the captains and mates who formerly sailed them to be out of their positions. Fifty-two men will lose their positions should the 26 boats be taken to the coast. It will then mean that the captains will have to take lower positions on the boats in order that they might earn a livelihood.

The steamers have been sailed by captains who have spent their whole lives on fresh water but they have not had any experience on the ocean. They were not familiar with the ocean conditions, and as they do not hold the proper qualifications they cannot sail the boats.

Capt. McMaster, at whose instigation a nautical school was commenced in connection with the School of Mining, stated to a newspaper representative that he was going to go to the seaboard this summer and would take charge of a steamer. He has papers that will allow him to navigate the coasts of the American continents.

He stated that the nautical school that was opened this winter was also for the purpose of instructing lake men on ocean nvaigation. Had some of the captains availed themselves of instructions in this branch they might have passed their examinations for ocean qualifications. However, the class is concluded and very little more can be done this season. Next year the nautical school will be permanently attached to the School of Mining and it is the intention to take up all branches of marine.

DOG LED PARENTS TO RUNAWAY SON

MONTREAL, March 12—A boy under 14 years, accused by his father of stealing $108 from him, was caught through a faithful dog of the family yesterday. Three days ago the boy was leaving his home when, it is alleged, his mother threatened to have him arrested if he did not return the money. It was said that when his father was asleep he took his purse and for two nights and days slept in a barn, in the hay loft. Yesterday the parents were on St. Catherine street when the dog stopped at a moving picture house, ran past the doorkeeper and refused to come out. On going inside the father found the dog looking up at the son, who was sitting in one of the seats. He was given in charge of a constable, and this morning remanded for eight days by Judge Choquet.

Killed by a Tree

E. E. French's Neck Was Broken While Felling Tree

HAMILTON, March 12—Edward E. French, while felling trees on his farm in East Lamboro, was instantly killed by a falling tree, his neck having been broken. He was alone at the time of the accident, but was found about fifteen minutes later by his son. He is survived by a widow and three daughters, as follows: Harry, Lloyd, Annie and Elsie at home, and Mrs. William Fleming of Hamilton, also by five brothers and three sisters, as follows: Mrs. Pearson, John Bateman, Augustine, and Amos of Glanford, Ont., and Mrs. Allison and Harry of Hamilton.

HIGHLANDERS! FIX BAYONETS!

Mark the quiver along the line;
See the fire-tipped weapons shine;
There's a mighty din, but above it all,
The command rings out, a clarion call,
Highlanders—Fix bayonets!

A broken cause and a wasted land;
An Empire sunk like a house of sand,
But the pibroch screams like an angry thing,
And the rising war notes seem to sing
Highlanders—Fix Bayonets!

(REFRAIN)
Rattle of blade on rifle steel
Flashing of fire as the muzzles feel
The grip of that fierce unbroken clasp
Terror of death in that grinding rasp,
Look to the hills, the conquering foe,
Are crouching again for another blow,
But see the rush of a hundred clans
Charge as you did at Prestonpans,
Highlanders—Fix Bayonets!

WILLIAM J. PITTS

So much has already been heard, and so much is certain to be heard, on both sides of the Atlantic, of the new war song, "HIGHLANDERS, FIX BAYONETS", that the question is being asked as to who are the men who have given this to the nation. Examination discloses just what might have been expected—that the men who made it are as patriotic as the song itself, with long generations of service to the Empire behind them.

The writer of the words, William J. Pitts, is a member of the 48th Highlanders in Toronto, Canada. Geoffrey O'Hara, the composer, is of a family whose outstanding profession for many years was war. He is descended on his father's side from John O'Hara, Lord Tyawley, and Kilmaine, Ireland; on his mother's side from John Dobbs, an officer in Queen Elizabeth's army, who married a granddaughter of Hugh O'Neil, the "fighting Earl of Tyrone." Their son, Arthur Dobbs, was Governor of North Carolina in 1753. Mr. O'Hara's grandfather was Lieut.-Colonel in the British Army through the Peninsular War. He had eight medals for gallant service and was Knighted by the government of Portugal and was made Asst. Adjt. General of the British forces in Canada in 1827.

Mr. O'Hara, who is more or less of a cosmopolite, and has recently been employed on a special mission by the United States government in connection with its effort to preserve the musical traditions of the Red Men, was interviewed in New York City by a metropolitan newspaper man, who asked the composer how he happened to write "Highlanders, Fix Bayonets."

"I have been interested in martial music", replied Mr. O'Hara, "ever since I first heard, as a boy, the story of a famous exploit of my grandfather in the Peninsular War. He was a Colonel then, under Wellington. At the head of the 47th Regiment, 600 strong, at the break of day, on a misty morning, charged down a steep hillside, to the accompaniment of a wild war-cry from 600 lusty throats, which so completely surprised and deceived a large encampment of the French army, that they all surrendered,—more than 2,500 men, and eighteen officers. The prisoners confessed that they had thought from the noise that they were being surrounded by a great host of the enemy, and that there was nothing to be done but capitulate."

This story which I heard in the impressionable period of childhood and the records of which, duly authenticated, I have since seen more than once, exerted a powerful influence, you may be sure, to convince me of the war song. Its effect is two-fold, of course, upon the advancing army, and also upon the foe. So that I well know the value of martial music. Very recently, in my stay among the Navajo Indians for the United States government, I have taken great interest in their war songs and made records of the striking ones on the phonograph which are now preserved in Washington."

Mr. O'Hara told another interesting story, a sequel of the foregoing, which illustrates excellently well the vast difference in the spirit with which the old time wars were fought, and that which now prevades the desperate combatants in Europe. "After capturing the brigade of Frenchmen", said O'Hara, "by a combination of Irish nerve and battlecry, my grandfather showed another side of the Irishman, his hospitality, and entertained his distinguished prisoners so well that the officers drew up a manifesto thanking him for what he had done. This interesting document is now in the possession of my brother, Mr. F. C. T. O'Hara, Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce at Ottawa. It is signed by eighteen officers. Not long after, at the Battle of the Pyrennes, it so happened that Col. O'Hara was desperately wounded and himself taken prisoner by the French. Whereupon he sent the manifesto to the Commanding Officer of the French, who turned out to be none other than the afterwards world-famous Marshal Soult. Col. O'Hara was brought to Soult, who gave him a special tent and treated him as a brother officer. They became fast friends. The Colonel was the recipient of every attention, and rapidly recovered from his wounds. He had sufficiently recovered as Christmas Day approached to undertake, in the absence of any other Britisher equal to the feat, the task of making an English plum pudding for his kind hosts. He obtained the needful ingredients by skilful foraging, and the famous pudding was duly served when the festal day arrived. Marshal Soult and his brother officers were profuse in their approval of the delicacy, but Col. O'Hara afterwards confessed that of all the plum puddings ever made that one was the worst."

Mr. O'Hara expressed gratification that his efforts to reproduce the spirit of his Scotch-Irish ancestry in a war song, were meeting with such approval. "It is really a song of the allies," said he. "The writer of the words is a Canadian, I am Irish, with Scotch admixture; the song was orchestrated by a Hollander, and the whole is published by Italians."

A STRANGE WOOING

Action on a Sudden Impulse Lays the Foundation for Success.

By ELIZABETH SCHOEN COBB.

It was a strange wooing, if it could be called such. On the one hand was Bryce Wharton, with strong, earnest love. On the other, trustful, sympathetic Milly Dover. What she thought, what sweet words of encouragement she might have had in mind to speak to the ingenious, impetuous young man whose handsome face would appeal to any girlish imagination in a vivid way, she was not allowed to express.

"I have told you just what my heart dictated," Bryce had spoken. "I must not ask you to tell me what you think of it, for it would be unfair to yourself and to your family. I only ask you to allow me to hope you will once in awhile remember that I am going to work at an ideal, to come back and tell you of it when I have reached the goal."

"You will be regretted now, and surely welcome then," murmured Milly, and with a brief handshake he was gone. She was almost at the point of tears. "Oh, why did he not—did he not see that I am interested in him, and all he may do, and—and—" and then pretty Milly hid her blushing longing face in her hands, and only the mellow moonlight and the cooing nightingales saw and pitied.

Headstrong and resolute, set upon an idea and determined to carry it out, Bryce strode down the lonely country road in the direction of home. It had been a new home to him for the past month. It had been as well a new home to his cousin, Evan Gray. Both were orphans. Both had been summoned home from different colleges for an interview with wealthy John Gray, their uncle.

He was a generous-hearted, indulgent old fellow, but he had some practical ideas in that active mind of his. The Elms was a royal home of its kind. He had been a builder of note in his day, and the stately mansion was a sample of his own architecture. He was going on a long trip to Europe. His nephews had graduated. They were welcome to remain, young masters of the house, until his return.

"You Give Me a Shock."

"Then to decide on what you intend to do in the world for a living," was the ultimatum of the old man. "Enjoy yourself for the present, let your minds fallow through a year of ease and enjoyment. They will all the more clearly respond to the call for duty when you start out on the real business of life."

The cousins found comfort, luxury and ease indeed in their new life. They had cultured social surroundings and the Dovers were their nearest neighbors. The first time the young men met the fair daughter of the house, Milly, the peerless, they mutually decided they had found the fairest thing on earth.

Bryce found Evan lying in a hammock, dozing, when he reached the Elms. Evan was languid, settled down into the indolence of being as though it was going to last forever.

"I say," he observed, drowsily, "what's this I hear of your leaving in the morning?"

"A simple fact, that is all," replied Bryce, seriously.

"A journey somewhere?"

"No; I am going to the city to look for work."

Evan sat up and regarded his cousin in bewilderment.

"You give me a shock!" he observed. "What's your idea?"

"I cannot afford to waste a year for nothing," was Bryce's response. "Why, another month of this motiveless life would divest me of all energy and ambition. Besides—" and there Bryce paused. He could have told of the urging influence of his love for Milly, but he refrained before a possible rival.

"Sorry," yawned Evan. "Going to leave the field to me, eh—the fair Milly included?"

"She is worth any man's winning," replied Bryce, softly, and went into the house to finish his packing.

The latent aspiration in Evan's mind, if it might be designated as such, was to become an artist. He was a fair draughtsman, and might in time become an architect. The wishes of Mr. Gray had guided both his nephews in the line in which he had made his business success. By Bryce, however, aside from that, a natural constructive predilection had been inherited. His favorite reading was descriptions of the great structural triumphs of the world, and he reached the city with a pretty fair idea of the road he was about to pursue.

Once a well known packer and a multi-millionaire had made an address at college that had made a great impression on Bryce. He had told how, in his early days, he had given up a good clerical position to accept forty dollars a month in the operating department of the plant until he knew every cut of meat intimately. "Get the rudiments—know the foundation," was his slogan of enterprise.

That was just what Bryce did. He wasted no time in minor clerical capacities. He went to a large firm of contractors erecting a giant skyscraper in the heart of the great city, wore overalls, helped lay the foundation, helped setting the mammoth stone pillars, and found that he had learned something.

One day he was given charge of a portable forge.

His work was to stand above the set steel beams beside the portable forge and heat red hot the bolts used to clamp these and the girders together. It was wonderful, the expert skill acquired in seizing these seething bolts in a pair of pincers, and swinging them so true to a line that the riveter was able to catch them always in the tin pail he held for their reception.

It was nearly noon one eventful day when Bryce held one of the heated bolts ready to swing it to the riveter. In the street below a sudden commotion attracted his attention. A man on horseback was urging up his steed. He had a leather bag on the saddle before him, a revolver menacing a shrinking crowd in pursuit. Even up at that distance from the ground, where human beings below seemed to be mere mimes, Bryce could hear the shouts proclaiming the horseman to be a fugitive thief.

A sudden impulse inspired Bryce with the idea that he might be of some use in the situation. He believed he could halt the fugitive where others had failed. He gave the pincers a swing. Whiz! the flaming bolt cleaved the air and landed on the saddle directly in front of the horseman.

There was a flash as the saddle cloth burst into flame, a shriek of agony from the steed. Then horse and rider rolled to the ground, and some officers rushed up and the episode was over.

When Bryce was summoned below by the building superintendent, it was to learn that his promptness had halted a thief who had snatched a bag from a bank messenger containing a small fortune. His recognition by the bank led to a princely reward, but, more valued than that to an influence exerted in his behalf that gave him a position as manager for one of their clients who was the most prominent builder in the city.

The day that Mr. Gray returned home and Evan started out dolefully "to make his mark in the world," Bryce, with a fair bank account and established business standing, received a welcome from his proud old uncle that made him thrill with pride and pleasure.

And when he made his second love confession to blushing Milly and asked her to become his wife, she hid her timid head upon his shoulder and whispered sweetly:

"My answer is the same as it would have been a year ago—yes."

There still are a number of sterling citizens whose notion of the proper place to wear evening clothes is in a photograph.

Turkish Holidays.

In nothing is the natural soberness of the Turk more manifest than in his holidays. He keeps fewer of them than his Christian compatriot, and most of them he celebrates in such a way that an outsider would scarcely suspect the fact. This is partly, perhaps, a matter of temperament and partly because Islam has not yet passed a certain stage of evolution. A holiday, that is, is still a holy day. Secular and patriotic festivals are everywhere of comparatively recent origin. In Turkey, where church and state are one to a degree now unknown in western countries, there was no real national holiday until 1909. Then the first anniversary of the reestablishment of the constitution was celebrated on the twenty-third of July (July 10, old style). A highly picturesque celebration it was, too, in Constantinople, at least, with its magnificent array of rugs and medieval tents on the Hill of Liberty, its review of troops by the sultan, its procession of the guilds of the city and its evening illuminations.

DISEASES OF HORSES' FEET

Canker is a disease which destroys the sole and frog and may even attack the deeper structures. It is caused by a germ or microbe, which gains access to the foot through some injury such as a nail-prick. This injury will not heal, but from it there is a constant discharge of a thin, watery, and offensive character, which gradually loosens the surrounding horn. Soon the living tissues are exposed, and they become dark in color and much swollen. New horn is constantly being formed and as constantly being destroyed and rotted off, and thus there is all the time a tendency for the disease to spread.

The first thing to do in the way of treatment is to remove all this loosened horn, for it will not again unite and is therefore useless. Notice that I say "all this loosened horn," for any that is left will materially check the cure. Trim it quite to the sound horn and thin the edges of this. If a little blood is drawn it will do no harm. Now cut away all proud flesh or burn it either with a hot iron or with nitrate of silver. Then cover it with formalin or calomel. Pad the sole with oakum and tar, which should be fastened on with considerable pressure.

Most people begin treatment with poultices, but I advise you to keep poultices away, because moisture has a tendency to cause it to spread. This is an unsatisfactory disease to treat and is best left to professionals.—By J. Fielding Cottrill, V.S., in Farmer's Advocate.

How to Cure Rheumatism

The Disease is Always Rooted in the Blood, Which Must be Made Rich and Pure.

There are still many people who imagine that rheumatism can be cured by liniment and rubbing, overlooking the medical fact that the trouble is rooted in the blood. Rheumatism can only be cured by cleansing and enriching the blood, thus driving out of the system the poisonous acids which cause the rheumatic pains. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills cure the most obstinate cases of rheumatism because they go straight to the root of the trouble in the blood. Every dose helps to make rich, red blood, and this new blood expels the poisonous acid, bringing health and comfort to the tortured victim. Do not waste time and money in liniments and outward applications. Give Dr. Williams' Pink Pills a fair trial and thus drive the disease out of your system. Here is proof of what Dr. Williams' Pink Pills can do in cases of this kind. Mr. Richard Palmer, Wroxeter, Ont., says: "For months my life was made miserable through a combined attack of rheumatism and sciatica. The rheumatism seemed to settle in all my joints and the sciatica pains were so great that I could scarcely hobble about. I am a farmer, and so you can understand that in my condition I was unable to do my ordinary work. Neither doctors nor various remedies I took did me any good. Finally I was induced to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and for this I have much to be thankful for, as after taking a few boxes the pains began to disappear, and by the time I had taken nine boxes every twinge of both the rheumatism and the sciatica had disappeared and I was able to go to work again as usual, and have not lost a day through illness since. I am thoroughly grateful for what Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have done for me and hope my experience will benefit some other sufferer."

It is the curing of just such cases as these that has given Dr. Williams' Pink Pills their world-wide popularity You can get the Pills from any medicine dealer or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

BACTERIA IN MILK

Increase More Marked When Temperature is Upwards of 70 Degrees

Twenty degrees of temperature make a great deal of difference in the rapidity with which bacteria multiply in milk. There is a certain temperature which is most favorable for the growth of these tiny organisms. Below this temperature the growth is retarded; the lower the temperature the slower is the growth. Bacteria that increase rapidly at 70 degrees F. grow much more slowly at 50 degrees, and at 40 degrees grow hardly at all. Some kinds, however, tend to increase even at the freezing point.

Many of the bacteria commonly found in milk produce no apparent change in the milk. Others may change the flavor without changing the appearance, while some of the most common types of bacteria cause marked changes in both appearance and flavor. In this class are included the bacteria which sour the milk by converting the sugar into lactic acid and those which form a sweet curd. Another type destroys the casein and albumen in the milk and causes putrefaction and bad odors.

The number of bacteria in milk depends, first, on the number of bacteria in the udder; second, on the amount of contamination from outside sources; and third, on the rapidity of the bacterial growth. The rate of growth depends on the temperature at which the milk is held.

Do Bees Hear?

The question of whether bees hear or whether they receive impressions in some other way, is a mooted one among scientists. Nothing has been found that corresponds to the ears in ordinary animals, although it has been supposed that the antennæ may serve the purpose in some way. We know this: Bees are very sensitive to a jar or any vibration; that loud shouting in a bee-cellar will bring back a response from the bees; but as sound always produces sound-waves in the air, the bees may get the effect of the sound by a concussion on their bodies or their antennæ.

EVERY BRITON'S DUTY

R. H. Rew, C.B., concludes an illustrative articles on "Food Supplies in War Time," being one of a series of Oxford Pamphlets, after pointing out that Great Britain might hold out a year if actually blockaded by saying: "Farmers, in my belief, will prove, in this crisis, not unworthy to be countryment of those who are heroically defending British homes and hearths on the fields of Flanders. They will do their duty by working their utmost—often under grave difficulties—to maintain and, if possible, increase the produce of their farms, not because it is (as in fact it will be) profitable to do so, but because it is the desire, no less than the duty, of every Briton, each in his own sphere, to do his part to help his country in the time of her direct need." Is not every Canadian a Briton in heart and sympathy, if not by actual birth?

"WAR"

A SERIAL STORY BY BARONESS BERTHA VON SUTTNER

BARONESS VON SUTTNER
the Authoress

"Pardon me, Excellency, the older generation to which you belong had a more warlike and martial enthusiasm than now exists. The feelings of humanity as a whole have changed. The desire to abolish misery is growing in ever-widening circles, and permeates all society. That spirit in your day had not yet been born."

"What is the use?" retorted my father. "Misery will always be. Neither that nor war can be abolished."

"Pardon me, Count Althaus," said Tilling. "Resignation to all forms of evil was the spirit of the past. As soon as the heart questions, 'Is it necessary?' that heart can no longer endure resignation and must make right the wrong as a sort of expiation. This sense of repentance has become universal enough to be called the conscience of the age."

My father raised his shoulders. "That is too deep for me. I only know that we old grandfathers look back on our campaigns with a thrill of pleasure. And, in fact, the very youngest soldier, if asked to-day whether he would like to go to war, would surely answer, 'Willingly—even joyfully!'"

"The boys, of course," answered Tilling. "They have still the school-drilled enthusiasm for war in them. And the old soldier, of course, would answer 'Willingly,' for he must live up to the popular conception of the courageous. If he said honestly, 'Unwillingly,' it would only pass for fear."

"Why, I certainly should be afraid," said Lilli, with a little shudder. "Think how terrible it must be to have bullets flying on all sides and death threatening you any instant!"

"What you say seems quite natural from a young lady's lips," replied Tilling. "But soldiers must repress their instincts of self-preservation as well as their compassion for both friend and foe. Next to cowardice, it is most disgraceful for us to have sentiments or emotions."

"Only in war times," said my father, "for in private life, thank God, we also have hearts."

"Yes, I know. With a sort of children's sleight-of-hand, we say of every horror when war is on, 'That goes for nothing.' Murder is no longer murder. Robbery is no longer robbery, but provisioning. Burning cities are so many 'positions taken.' For every broken law of morality, humanity, and decency, as long as the war-game lasts, we snap our fingers and by hocus-pocus transform it into nothing. But when this inordinate war-gambling lifts from the conscience for a moment, and one comprehends the actual depravity of the thing—that wholesale crime has meant nothing—then the human mind can only wish to be delivered from the intolerable depths—even by death."

"Really," said Aunt Marie reflectively, "commandments like, 'Thou shalt not murder,' 'Thou shalt not steal,' 'Love thy neighbor,' 'Forgive thy enemies——'"

"Go for nothing, too," repeated Tilling. "For those whose calling it is to teach these commandments are the very ones who call down the blessing of heaven on our murderous instruments and work."

"And justly," said my father. "For the God of the Bible is the God of Battles, the Lord of Hosts, who commands us to draw the sword. It is He——"

"Men always decree what they wish as the will of God," said Tilling. "Even the divine law is waved aside when men begin the great game of hatred. The heavenly law of love goes for nothing when men find it convenient so to interpret the God whom they have set up before them. But forgive me, Countess; I have opened a wearisome discussion when I only came to say good-bye."

Dearer to me than ever because of the storm of feeling and thrilling emotions he had set in action in my mind, how could I let him go, perhaps never to meet again? With a cold farewell before all these people—it must not end so. Had he gone and closed the door, I should have burst into sobs.

Quietly rising, I said, "I must show you that photograph of which we spoke," and Tilling, very much surprised, followed me to a table at some distance.

"I cannot let you go—I must speak to you."

"As you will, Countess. I am listening.

"Not now. Come to-morrow at this hour."

He hesitated.

"I insist. By the memory of your mother, for whom I mourned with you."

"O Martha!"

The word thrilled me with a flash. It was agreed, and, bowing to the company, he kissed my hand and left.

With what impatience, anticipation, and even anxiety I looked forward to the coming visit! Would he ask me what I wished to say, and would I need to tell him of my love? Would he cross-examine me, and would my pride stand between, and must we part after all? As I was thinking thus he was announced.

"By your command, dear Countess," he said. "I am happy that you invited me in the name of my mother, and I must speak from the heart. I——"

"Why do you hesitate?"

"I find it harder than I thought to speak out."

"Where is the confidence you gave me when watching at the death-bed? Have you not the same faith in me now?"

"In that terrible hour I was beside myself. I overstepped my right, and for fear I might do it again, I planned to go away."

"You wish to avoid me. And why?"

"Why? Why? Because—because I adore you."

My emotions turned my head away. Tilling also stood dumb. At last I broke the silence:—

"And that is why you are planning to leave?"

"That is the reason."

"Can the plan be recalled?"

"The transfer is not yet ordered."

"Then stay!"

He seized my hand—gasping. "Martha!"

In the same instant my father rushed in.

"Are you at home? The footman said you were not." My father glared at Tilling. "Good-day. After last night's farewell I am surprised to see you. Martha, there is a family matter I must see you about."

Tilling arose. "When can I see you again?" he asked in an undertone, taking leave.

I whispered, "To-morrow, in the Prater at nine on horseback."

With a bow to my father, who responded stiffly, he left the room.

"What is this family affair, father?"

"It is this very thing. I only scared your lover away in order to tell you what I think of him. How dare you trifle with the family name and your reputation in this way?"

"Father, my reputation and honor are guarded by my little son. As an independent widow I have outgrown your authority. I tolerate no lovers but if I choose to marry after the dictates of my heart who shall hinder?"

"Marry Tilling!" he shouted. "Are you mad? It would be a family calamity."

"Why, father, you yourself have been offering me a brevet-captain, a captain, a major—while this man is in the rank of lieutenant-colonel."

"The worse for that, with such treasonable opinions as he expressed yesterday. He wants to resign, I guess, and is hunting a rich widow? And would you stoop to such a man, you who are the daughter of a proud soldier who fought in four wars, longing to enlist again, and you the widow of a brave warrior who made glorious the field of battle by his sacrifice?"

My father was pacing the floor, red-faced, and his voice trembling with excitement. I was moved to the quick by these contemptuous words in attack of the man of my heart. But no words of mine could defend the injustice; Tilling's ethical position my father was incapable of understanding so I remained dumb. My father's disapproval might trouble me, but I felt I was free to accept the great happiness which lay open before me. Enough joy had come to me in that short hour to swallow any vexation.

CHAPTER V.

Oh the joy of the next morning when at nine o'clock I left my carriage at the bridle path of the Prater! There my horse awaited me. I was hardly in the saddle when I realized the tread of a horse behind me. It was the inevitable Conrad, and my greeting was rather cool, for though I could hardly expect to have the Prater to myself, yet I must somehow get rid of this faithful cavalier. Off in the distance I noticed Tilling galloping.

"Ah, dear cousin," I said, "only last night was I a good ally of yours, and told Lilli what a fine fellow you were, so considerate, so——"

"Now, cousin, what do you want for all this flattery?"

"Only that you whip up your horse and gallop away," and Conrad, seeing Tilling approach, took the hint, and laughingly flew off.

"This Althaus again," said Tilling coming up to my side, his tone being plainly vexed, which pleased me. "Did he leave at seeing me, or did his horse run away?"

"He went because I sent him."

"Countess Martha, the world says he loves his cousin."

"He does."

"That he courts her persistently."

"And not without hope."

Tilling was silent, and I laughed into his face. "But I am not the cousin. It is my sister Lilli."

"You lift a load from my heart. This man was the reason why I wished to leave Vienna. I could not stay and look on. Besides, I dared not trust myself, for I could no longer conceal my feelings for you, and I feared being made ridiculous and miserable."

"But to-day you are happy."

"Since yesterday I scarcely know myself, and yet I feared I should suddenly awake and find it all a dream. What have I to offer you? I have no prospects. To-day I am in the seventh heaven and to-morrow, perhaps, in despair. . . Pardon me, I am usually cool and prudent, but to-day my feelings are extravagant. You can make me either happy or wretched."

"I have doubts, too. There is that princess."

"Has that nonsense come to your ears? There is nothing in it, or would I be wishing to leave Vienna?"

"A stupid jealousy in us both. Would I have asked you to meet me if I had expected my cousin?" And I added, "Yet why have you kept away from me?"

"Because I never dared hope that I could win your love. It was not till you ordered me in the memory of my mother, that I dared speak, though I was eager to dedicate my life to you."

"So I have really thrown myself at your head, or you would not have bothered about me?"

"I did not care to be counted with the swarm of admirers."

"Oh, they do not count. They only wanted a rich widow——"

"That is the very point which held me back, for I have no fortune. I would rather be miserable all my days than suspected by the world and the woman I loved of having had a low motive in marrying her."

"You proud, noble fellow, I could never believe, no never, that a single wrong motive was possible to you." And we rode on and questioned each other about all our ideals and feelings. It was a blissful hour.
